RAY COMEDIES.

COUGHING HIGGINS.—The cast: Coughing Higgins (Johnny Ray); the buxom widow (Emma Ray); the doctor (Tom Mahoney); his assistant (Walter Percival).

Filled with vigor after the the demise of her third husband, Mrs. Bullion is dismayed to find that her late husband's will calls for her marriage immediately, with the provision that if the fourth husband survives two weeks after the wedding the lady receives not a penny.

Coughing Higgins, out of work, possessed of a "beautiful" cough and a roving disposition, manages to steal a few frankfurters before the watchful eye of the law espies him. In the chase which follows, Higgins eludes his pursuer and sinks exhausted on a park bench. On a hunt instigated by the widow for a suitable spouse, her professional "chasers" come upon the emaciated "coughing" derelict. Feebly protesting he is dragged to the widow's home, a parson is called, and poor Higgins is now husband number four.

Immediately follows a heroic struggle to keep life in the frame of Higgins until the expiration of the time limit set in the will. One day his worried better half accidentally learns that a codicil of the will states if her latest husband shall last four weeks, the entire fortune is hers. Dashing home, she finds the now desperate Higgins engaged in a battle with his "keepers." Armed with a pistol, he has driven them into the steam closet and is just about to attack the ice chest for a square meal when wifie breaks in with the glad tidings. Surprised to find that the coughing one has aroused the latent spark of love in her bosom, she divulges the contents of the will, the doctors are fired, and the once half-starved "bench warmer" takes a new lease on life.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE COP AND THE ANTHEM (Two Parts).—"Soapy," a bum, is seeking winter quarters. From his chilly seat on a park bench he plots to be sent to the workhouse for six months. To effect this it is necessary for him to commit a misdemeanor and be arrested. So he fares forth to turn a trick that will procure him his desired refuge. He enters a cheap restaurant, eats a meal without paying, and is staggered to find that he is thwarted by the milk of human kindness.

In the same way he begs, takes a free taxi ride, hurls a stone through a window, raises a disturbance on the street, dines at Delmonico's without a cent in his pockets, all to no effect. No one wants to be hard upon him. The thing is ludicrous, but fast becoming for "Soapy" a tragedy. Finally he stops to listen to an anthem being sung in a church, when he is taken away to prison by a cop who has decided that he is standing there for no good purpose.

VANITY AND SOME SABLES (Two Parts—The cast: Kid Brady (Wallace MacDonald); Molly McKeever (Mildred Manning); Detective Hansom (Robert Gaillard); Ma McKeever (Nellie Anderson). Directed by John Robertson.

As leader of the notorious "Stovepipe Gang" on the East Side of New York, Kid Brady is jolted into sudden thoughtfulness by the trusting gaze of Molly McKeever's eyes. He makes peace with his enemy, the police, and goes to work at his trade of plumbing and steam fitting. He and Molly have decided to go straight and to marry. One day he goes to repair some plumbing in the swell apartment of Mrs. Hethcote and there sees a splendid set of Russian sables valued at $1,000. He sees in his mind Molly decked out in that same set. That evening he visits Molly with a pretentious set of furs which he assures her are genuine Russian sables. The McKeevers are skeptical until the Kid insists that they are really bona fide, at which Molly has misgivings. She knows in her dim way that grand furs cost real money, but the Kid assures her that he has plunged his all upon them.

The pair go out for a walk to display the new furs. Detective Ransom finds it his duty to accost them and to point to the furs as Mrs. Hethcote's property, her set having disappeared from the house about the same time the reformed gangster disappeared. The Kid takes one look at the shocked face of Molly and struggles with himself, then without a word of denial is about to be led away as the thief of a $1,000 fur set. Policeman Kohen appears then, an ex-fur expert. Hearing the charge, he looks narrowly at Molly's sables and scornfully appraises them at $12.00. Hotly the Kid denies the insulting charge and might have got away with his claim had not Mrs. Hethcote's set been found in her closet at her home. Then the crestfallen Kid confesses to Molly that his vanity had led him to lie to her as to the value of the furs—and would she forgive him? But what does Molly care for all the sables in the world. "It's my Kid I want," she cries, "oh you dear, stuck-up, crazy blockhead!"

Thinking to capture the reward, the gypsies steal a child and take it to the Warings, only to discover that the babe is Rastus, decided brunette, of Ethiopian descent.

Meanwhile Caprioli, having read of the reward the Warings are offering is on his way to the Waring home with the right baby. He lays it down for a moment to look at his paper, and the gypsies substitute little Rastus, who is again presented to Mrs. Waring. But Cupid intervenes in the person of Louis Dinkelspiel, who looks like Papa.

Louis finds his way into Snyder's room while that worthy is indulging in his daily siesta. He spots Snyder's clothes, and struck by their superiority to his own, appropriates them, leaving his own nondescript garments in their place.

Complications ensue. Mrs. Snyder, her daughter and Willie see Louis flirting and mistake him for Papa Snyder. The latter, dressed in the clothes which Louis has left behind, is seized by the hotel employes for the theft of his own garments, and a mix-up follows.

Explanations are finally forthcoming, and by the time Papa has recovered from the various shocks to which he has been subjected he is too spirit-broken to object further to the marriage of Willie and his daughter.

NEARLY A HUSBAND (George Bickel Comedy—June 18).—Tony, a member of a band of desperadoes, falls a victim of Cupid, with the result that wedding bells ring out. Their plans do not pan out well, and Tony is knocked unconscious by the force of the explosion. His pals flee without removing the contents of the safe. When they tell the bride that "Tony has been killed and the cops are on our trail—better beat it!" she does.

Next morning Mr. Bonds finds Tony unconscious, notices that nothing is missing, thinks Tony has been injured in trying to protect his property and insists upon rewarding him. Tony goes home and finds his new bride gone.

Time passes and Tony's widow meets his nephew, Tom. The young people fall in love and are married. Tony plans a haul and enters the hotel in which they are staying. He comes face to face with his wife and his nephew. Explanations follow. Tony and the boy draw straws for the bride and Tom wins. They hand Tony a pistol with which to shoot himself. Tony decides that a divorce is cheaper than a funeral, fires the pistol in the air, burglarizes the hotel and leaves. Hearing the shot, Tom and his bride think Tony has killed himself, and leave hurriedly for the other parts, where they live happily ever after.

GOLD SEAL.

HEART OF GOLD (Two Parts—Released wk. of June 11).—The cast: Fenstein (Walter Belasco); Mary (Zoe Rae); Widow Fogarty (Maud Emory); The Man (Seymour Hastings); His Wife (Gertrude Aster). Story by C. J. Wilson, Jr.; produced by G. Sargent.

Embittered by the death of his wife and child, Fenstein devotes his energy to making money. The bright spot in his life is Mary, the little daughter of Widow Fogarty, who lives in a cottage next to his cheap clothing store. Feinstein works hard.

Mary's mother dies, leaving her alone in the world. Feinstein takes Mary.

A lawyer has told a wealthy couple about the orphan, and, eager to adopt the child, they hurry to Feinstein's store, where he denies knowing anything about the girl. However, Mary comes in and runs to him. The rich people take the child to their country home.

Three weeks later, Mary, seeing a man about to drive away in a machine, climbs on the back of the car and is driven past Feinstein's store. She rushes in and soon is telling about a pretty doll she has seen in a window. The old man is almost delirious with joy, hastens to buy the toy for her.

Meanwhile, the child's adopted parents arrive and are just going away with Mary when Feinstein returns. He snatches her away and prepares to fight, but the child's pleas points out the difference in their homes and shows him that Mary is better off with them. Feinstein realizes the truth and allows them to take the child.

Later Mary is seen playing in a gorgeous room where the rich man and his wife watch her. But at this same time Feinstein is fondling the doll. He seems to think it is the child, and putting it tenderly to bed, turns off the light and slips from the room.

THE BLACK MANTILLA (Three Parts—Rel. wk. June 11).—The cast: Marachita (Claire McDowell); Juan (Harry Mann); Guella (Gypsy Hart); Huanto (Richard Ryan); the padre (George Pearce). Written and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

The villagers called Marachita "The Senorita Shrew," but to Juan she was a saint in disguise. Juan carved wooden statues, and had carved a small model of Marachita.

Huanto of the Ruales was loved by both Marachita and Guella, daughter of the tortilla-maker, and Marachita's only rival in Poldique. Trouble was stirred up when Huanto presented Guella's mother with a black lace Mantilla, because of her wonderful tortillas. The old woman, as soon as Huanto was out of sight, told Guella to put the mantilla on so that people would think Huanto had given it to her.

Marachita, that night at a fete, saw the mantilla. Fury blazed in her eyes. When she left the crowd, Juan followed her. He cringed beneath her wrath, while she sneered and told him if he would get her a mantilla finer than Guella's she would be his sweetheart.

Juan remembered the words of a tourist, who looking at a picture in the mission, had remarked that it could be sold anywhere for several hundred dollars. He promised Marchita that in three days she should have a mantilla, finer than Poldique had seen. That night he cut away the picture and hastened to Calino to sell it.

Next morning the Angelus failed to greet the rising sun: the people could not fathom the mystery, until they were informed by the Padre of the theft. Marachita told them that Juan had stolen it to buy her a mantilla. Juan soon pawned the picture for a beautiful mantilla and ten pesos, which he intended to put on the shrine before the virgin as he returned to Poldique. It was three days later when Juan came to the little shrine, weary and famished. As he knelt to put the money on the shrine, the men waiting for Juan approached and one of them ran his dagger through him.

Huanto was due again that day in San Poldique. As he rode along through the pass, he came across the body of Juan. He saw the mantilla, which he tore from Juan's hand, picked up the money, and started on his way again. The men told of the death of Juan. Marachita was not even interested. Soon Huanto rode in and stopped at Marachita's hut. She told him that having given Guella the mantilla, he had no time to bother with her. Huanto laughed, delighted with her jealousy, and then told the truth about the mantilla. Guella saw the two and was furious. Huanta offered the mantilla Juan had brought to Marachita and kissed her. As he did so, the shadow of a buzzard hovered over them. Exclaiming, "You, the mantilla and the coins are all accursed!" he left her. She drew off the mantilla, and, hanging it beside her door, went into her house.

TACKY SUE'S ROMANCE (Two parts—Released week June 4).—The cast: "Tacky" Sue (Ruth Stonehouse); Dick Calhoun (Chester Bennett); Henry Calhoun (Wadsworth Harris); Mrs. Clancy (Lydia Yeamans Titus). Written by Tom Gibson. Produced by Ruth Stonehouse.

She was called "Tacky" Sue because of her shabby clothes, but while the other girls dressed well, Sue spent her money to keep herself and the tots alive. Their father and mother were dead, and she was their sole support.

Dick Calhoun, whose father owned the Consolidated Stores, where Sue worked, saw Sue and the tots "picnicking" in the park. They saw his racer and, not aware of his presence, climbed into it and made believe they were on a journey. Accidentally Sue pressed the starter and the car started down the street. Dick dashed after them. He scolded Sue, and while busy with the engine, she and the children slipped away. Dick was sorry.

The next day Dick succeeded in begging her pardon. Then he escorted her home. She rushed in and began to tell Mrs. Clancy about Dick. He saw the extreme poverty, tried to give money to a tot, but Sue refused to accept charity.

Dick and Sue fell in love, but she felt his feelings were caused from pity. Mrs. Clancy went after Dick, demanding to know why he was trifling with the child's heart. The boy replied that he wanted to marry Sue.

Sue refused to work at the store and looked for another position. She was unsuccessful. One day she found the children gone and hurried to Mrs. Clancy's. The older woman suggested she ask Dick for assistance. This Sue decided to do as a last resort.

Mr. Calhoun had been told by Dick of his love for Sue. Dick came for the children and took them to his home. Sue was admitted by the butler and faced Dick, who made a effort to appear stern. While fighting back her tears, she told him of the children's disappearance. Dick went to the adjoining room, where his father was trying to keep the tots quiet, and had them march in. They told her that her Fairy Prince wafted them there. She couldn't help surrendering to Dick, and Mr. Calhoun herded the curious youngsters from the room.

When he discovers that his son Jack is interested in his stenographer, Jane Godfrey, he tells the young man that he will not countenance love-making between the two. To be certain that nothing comes of their growing friendship, he discharges Jane.

Jack, incensed, feels that his father has no right to control his friendships; and, while in this mood, he chances to meet Steve Rowe, who is a thief. Rowe intimates that if ever the time comes when it is necessary to make some easy money, he will help him.

As a birthday present for his wife, Walter Stoddard buys a valuable jewel. Jack, estranged from his father, has been unable to secure work, and is discouraged, especially when he discovered that Jane has been discharged. One night he happens to see Jane on the street and finds that the girl is suffering from want of food. He remembers Steve's suggestion, and tells the girl that he will soon have plenty of money, and that they will marry that night. Leaving her for a short time, he steals home and secures the jewel his father bought. He hunts up Steve, and the latter takes him to the place where he can dispose of the jewel, but lets Jack go in alone.

Jack enters the place and approaches the counter where two gloved hands take the jewel and give him the money. Suddenly the hands flash a light on Jack's face. Jack tries to throw the light upon the old man. In the struggle, Jack hits the old man, and, thinking he has killed him, rushes from the place. He finally confesses to Jane what he fears he has done. The girl tells him that she will not marry him, and begs him to go home and tell his people what he has done, while she waits outside.

Stoddard, coming home, discovers the girl and takes her inside. In the library, he has a talk with his son and shows him the jewel. It turns out that Stoddard himself is the fence through which the crooks dispose of their ill-gotten goods. The old man now awakens to the fact that he is a thief maker. He consents to the marriage of Jane and Jack.

Some friends invited Westie to a supposedly stag affair, but many girls were there. Westie tried to escape from the house. Finally he decided to say he was engaged; and, asked who the girl might be, manufactured the name, "Annie Smith from Calliope Center." After this he enjoyed himself. The host came to the conclusion that Westie was lonesome and wired to Calliope Center to Annie Smith, asking her to spend the week-end with his wife.

Annie Smith, the editor of the paper, had become interested in Westie through the newspaper articles. Urged by her boss, she consented to accept this invitation.

Annie was approaching the house when Westie bumped against her. She showed him the telegram, and they planned that she should play the part of his fiancee. The host and the guests insisted that Westie and his fiancee should be married right away, Westie wired to a friend to send a fellow to impersonate a minister. Annie consented to take part in the fake marriage.

A minister arrived, who failed to see why Westie nudged him and winked. After the ceremony, Westie watched his chance to sneak downstairs. He realized he loved Annie. Pondering over the situation he met a man who handed him a note. The note said, "This man will do the work all right." Westie woke up the host to ask if that was a real marriage. The host thought him crazy. Westie rushed to Annie's room and found her in bed. He told her that it had been no fake ceremony, and that he couldn't say he was sorry, and she remarked: "Well, don't expect me to be." He was stunned, and delighted.

MANNING THE NAVY (May 14).—How a raw recruit is made into a real U. S. Navy "jackie" is depicted. The picture was made at the U. S. Naval Training Station at Lake Bluff in Illinois. This station, on the west shore of Lake Michigan, is the greatest of its kind in the United States, and it is there that the youths destined for service on our fighting ships are taken to learn their trade of war.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 32 (June 12).—The Gaumont Company may be said to specialize in islands from time to time in its "Tours Around the World" series, two being pictured in this issue. These are Capri, the celebrated island south of Naples, Italy, and Antigua, a British possesion in the West Indies. A third section of the reel is devoted to Versailles, a royal residence of France just outside Paris.

Capri, twenty miles south of Naples, has many picturesque spots. The famous Blue Grotto was known in Roman times. The coast is steep and rocky. "The Rocks of the Sirens" make a bit of coast where so many shipwrecks have occurred that the ancients claimed the cailors were lured to their doom by the singing of sirens.

Antigua is a small island, but its chief town, St. John, overlooks one of the most beautiful harbors in the West Indies. It was at one time the chief British West Indian naval base.

The grandeur of a French royal residence is well understood after one has gazed upon the Gaumont pictures of Versailles. A comprehensive picture from an airship is one of the most unusual views of the palace and grounds. Among the interiors shown are the Gallery of Mirrors, where the great court receptions were held, the Royal room, where Louis XIV. died after a reign of 72 years, and the great staircase. The exteriors include the balcony from which Marie Antoinette and Louis XVI. were forced to salute the rioting populace, the Palace of the Grand Trianon, the Petit Trianon, the gardens, the Grand Canal, and the Villa des Nains.

REEL LIFE, NO. 59 (June 14).—When Gaumont releases on June 14 its fifty-ninth issue of "Reel Life" there will be presented an entertaining series of pictures of how magazines by the million are turned out by one of the largest publishers in the United States. The establishment employs 3,000 people, and prints twelve million copies of its magazines each month. The pages, end to end, would wrap around the earth forty-five times. So enormous is its business that each day 40,000 letters are received.

The spectator is taken on a tour of inspection of the mammoth plant. There are visits to the press rooms, the photo-engraving department, the type setting division, the bindery, and the shipping department. The government has to provide five hundred mail cars each month to get the product to the readers of the magazines.

A second section of this reel shows the great task that faces our coast defence forces in emplacing one of its great guns. The pictures show how a 14-inch gun is eased from the cars on special cribs, how it is warped into line for its tedious journey, and how it is moved by mules which march continuously around a capstan. The gun weighs 70 tons.

The hemp industry of rural Roumania provides views of peasant life which combine the unusual with the picturesque. The crude instruments used show how far removed from modern factory methods are the processes of the Roumanians.

The reel concludes with pictures of the Koala, a strange Australian animal which has characteristics of the bear, the rabbit, and the kangaroo.

As a result of dime novel reading Jeff Hillington, a young man of education, frets along within the confines of the crowded city in anticipation of the day when he will sit astride broncho and shoot Indians in the west. What then could be more fortunate than a visit by a committee from Bitter Creek, Arizona, to induce Jeff's father, a railroad president, to run a line through the town connecting the borax mines with the outer world? Here is the opportunity which Jeff has been longing for and his father commissions the adventure-seeking youth to investigate the proposition.

Matters take a more serious turn, however, when Steve Shelby, a grafting Indian agent learns of the affair and decides to take advantage of it. Knowing that he is about to be caught by the government in his lawless pursuits, Shelby decides to turn one more trick and then to cross the border into Mexico. At the town hall he hears a plan for a spectacular holp-up to be staged for Jeff's benefit and enters into the idea, stating that he will help out by having his Indians perform an uprising.

Jeff arives and a whole program of western stunts is commenced. He falls in love with Nell Larrabee, a girl of the plains whose chief excitement hitherto has been the repeated refusal of Shelby's proposals of marriage. The time of the uprising arrives and Shelby prepares for the execution of his plans which result in real tragedy. The Indians appear on the scene, and soon the people begin to realize that the joke has become a serious matter. In place of blank cartridges the red men are using real bullets, and in the midst of the excitement Nell is kidnapped by Shelby. The entire crowd is kept in the dance hall surrounded by the howling Indians, while Shelby starts for Mexico with the girl. The matter is explained to Jeff, who rounds up the band of Indians, rescues the girl, completely foils Steve, and becomes the hero of the hour.

A DOLL'S HOUSE (Five Parts—June 11).—The cast: Nora Helmer (Dorothy) Phillips; Torvald Helmer (William Stowell); Nils Krogstad (Lon Chaney); Dr. Rank (Sidney Dean); Christina Linden (Miriam Shelby); Anna (Helen Wright). From story by Henrik Ibsen; directed by Joseph De Grasse.

Torvald and Nora Helmer have three children. The early years of their marriage have been fraught wth poverty. Nora organized in order that Torvald's salary may support the household. The husband falls ill, and Nora takes him to Italy, where he fully recovers. In after years he is made manager of the bank.

Torvald believes Nora has borrowed, from her father, the money spent during his illness. She has, in fact, obtained a loan from Nils Krogstad, who worked in the same bank, forging her father's name. Through eight years Nora had saved and skimped to find money to redeem the note.

When Torvald is made manager he deems it his duty to discharge Krogstad, whom he knows to be an embezzler. Krogstad calls upon Nora demanding that she protect him, and threatens to expose Nora. She knows Torvald would consider her action an egregious offense.

Christina Linden, lately widowed, comes to the Helmer home to visit. She had been in love with Krogstad but married for money. Nora urges Torvald to give Christina a place in his bank where the woman may support herself. This Torvald does, giving her Krogstad's place.

Krogstad makes good his threat and writes a letter to Nora's husband, dropping it in a letter-box to which only the husband holds the key. Nora sees the letter and uses strategy to keep her husband from opening and reading the accusing missive.

Meanwhile Krogstad has relented and written another note, recanting his charges. When Torvald reads the letter in which Krogstad accuses Nora, he is wild with rage, declaring his own reputation will be ruined. Then he reads the letter in which Krogstad recants and encloses the note Nora has given as security for the loan.

Torvald tears up the note and evidences relief that his good name shall not be tarnished by his wife's sacrificial action. When he begins to lecture Nora for her conduct the wife revolts. She tells him her love had been killed by his revelations of personal selfishness—and she goes out into the dark Norway night, never to return.

From story by Kate Douglas Wiggin.

Carol Bird, child of wealthy parents is an invalid. Her contact with the world is confined to her father, mother, her nurse, Elfrida, Uncle Jack now sojourning in distant lands, and the Ruggles family who live in the house in the rear. An occasional letter from Uncle Jack with a trinket and the surreptitious visits of one or more of the Ruggles' brood constitute Carol's only diversions. She is more spiritual than earthly, cheerful and universally beloved.

Carol conceives the idea of inviting the nine Ruggleses to the Christmas feast. A letter also arrives from Uncle Jack who begs them to let him in for the holidays.

Christmas morning Mrs. Ruggles laments the absence of her spouse who will not be there to see their "children enterin' s'ciety." She borrows a pair of stockings for "Peory," makes Sarah Maude, the eldest, give them all "sech a washin' an' combin' and dressin' as they never had before," makes a dress for Larry, washes and patches Clem's "other shirt," takes "the rags out o' Kitty's curls," wheedles and coaxes, begs and storms and finally with satisfaction surveys a hard day's work. Mrs. Ruggles instructs Sarah Maude to say it was sech a pleasant evenin' and sech a short walk that yer lef' yer hats ter home." Unhappily Sarah gets it all twisted and Clem complicates the situation by explaining, "It was so very pleasant that we hadn't hats enough to go all around!"

Uncle Jack officiates at the head of the table. Carol's bed is moved to the dining room. And when it is all over, and the happy neighbors take their leave weighted down with presents, Carol tucks her face into her mother's arm and whispers, "Mother, I do think we have kept Christ's birthday this time just as He wanted it done."

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER (Edison—Three Parts—June 11).—The cast: Evelyn Shelby (Nellie Grant); Colonel Barron, U. S. M. C. (Herbert Evans); Roger Shelby (Paul Kelly); Sergeant Wilkins (Fred Gleason); Billy Prebee (Cyril Hughes). Story by Mary R. S. Andrews.

Roger Shelby, an American, is being educated in England. His mother, a widow, consents to marry Colonel Sherwood Barron of the United States Marine Corps. To Roger all things American are distasteful. "Of course, I like Colonel Barron, but, oh mother, I wish you were going to marry an Englishman!" His mother reminds him that he himself is an American, but he bursts into laughter: "I may have been born in America, but I've lived over here all my life. I'm not an American, mother; I'm English!"

Four months later Colonel Barron is in command of the Marine detachment at the Bremertom Navy Yard in America. Roger is expected to arrive from England. In hope of awakening in him a spark of love for his country, she drapes a small American flag over his dresser.

Roger is met by Sergeant Williams and several privates. Roger's air is patronizing, and he makes no effort to hide his amusement.

As they enter the Navy Yard gates they see the lowering of the colors. The sergeant and Billie, an officer's son, stand at attention. Roger looks with amused tolerance. "Why didn't you take your hat off," calls Billy. "Because Im an Englishman," laughs Roger.

Wilkens reports to the colonel. "Sergeant, what did you think of him?" The sergeant finally blurts out: "He seems to be a clean cut lad, but he wouldn't salute the flag!" Roger removes the American flag from his bureau and replaces it with a British flag. Not very long after, when the sergeant has been drilling a squad of recruits, Roger makes his appearance. "Why don't you teach them to mark time properly—the way they do in the English army?" asks Roger. The sergeant tells Roger that, although they may mark time that way in the British army, they don't do it that way in the Marine Corps. Roger roars, "The United States Marine Corps! That's rich! Why, your whole country's a joke. Your army's a joke; your navy's a joke; and your Marine Corps is the biggest joke of the lot." For a moment it seems that Roger shall pay for his blasphemy, but Colonel Barron comes on the scene.

Later the colonel tries to make Roger see the error of his way. "Your grandfather's grandfather was with Washington at Valley Forge; your grandfather was killed at Gettysburg. Can you look me in the eye and tell me that they suffered and died for a joke?"

A week later his mother finds Roger reading a book. To hide his embarrassment, Roger takes his gun, saying he is going to shoot rabbits, and runs from the room. His mother finds it to be a history of the United States.

Roger meets Bill Prebee. "Do you know what the men say about you?" asks Billy. "Why they say they wouldn't mind the way you act if you were a real Englishman. But you're an American, an' you're a traitor; an' they guess good Englishmen haven't any more use for you than they have!"

That evening Mrs. Barron takes counsel with the colonel. Roger has not yet returned. The colonel finally calls for volunteers, and the whole regiment advances.

Roger, who has broken his ankle, lies delirious, screaming as the visions of American warriors cast at him his words of scorn. Before long Roger is lifted back to safety. After a long illness he gets well. The story of his rescue has been repeated to him, and his words, "The Marine Corps is the biggest joke of the lot," come back to him with shame and repentance.

Once more the sunset gun, as the colors are lowered Roger stands at reverent attention, with a feeling of exaltation, a strange thrill, he calls "I guess I'm an American, Mother!" And now his vision broadens, and he sees Old Glory alongside the colors of America's Allies proclaiming democracy to all the world.

When it was decided that Giovanni was to die, Luigi cast longing eyes on beautiful Lucia. In her he saw a means of enriching himself. THE GREATEST POWER (Rolfe—Five Parts—June 18).—The cast: Miriam Monroe (Ethel Barrymore); John Conrad (William B. Davidson); Albert Bernard (Harry S. Northrup); Randolph Monroe (Frank Currier); Bradford Duncan (William Black); Eric Johansen (Cecil Owen); Prof. Poole (Fred Truesdell); Major General Foster (Redfield Clark); Williams (Rudolph de Cordova); Captain Herbert (W. M. Armstrong). Story by L. R. Wolheim, directed by Edwin Carewe.

Miriam Monroe, daughter of Randolph Monroe, is interested in chemical research, and has discovered a cancer cure called exonite. It is also the basis of a powerful explosive developed by John Conrad. The production is expensive, and Conrad is too poor to continue his experiments. Prof. Poole introduces him to Miriam. He points out that exonite is a cure for war, since if its formula is published every nation will be afraid to wage war on account of its destructive power. Realizing its use will do the greatest good to the greatest number, she gives Conrad the exonite she has on hand, and works with him to produce more, and to discover the formula that will make the product stable. The two young people become closely in sympathy with each other.

Randolph Monroe receives news that the United States may be drawn into war. He calls his partners, Bradford Duncan and Albert Bernard, to discuss the possibilities of exonite. A village is built to test the explosive's power, and a little destroys the entire village. Bernard, who is really a spy, determines to obtain possession of the formula, and encourages Conrad to perfect it, which he succeeds in doing.

At the ball Major General Foster says that the first blow may be struck any moment. Miriam and Bernard have one thought—to secure the formula—Miriam for the United States, Bernard for the enemy. Miriam arrives first at Conrad's laboratory. She tells him the situation, and makes her request. To her amazement, he refuses. He is still for peace, and refuses to give up his formula for any one country. He expresses surprise that a woman should be working in the interests of war. Miriam reminds him of the part women have always played in the nation's history. He remains deaf to her pleadings.

Miriam pretends to faint, and when Conrad leaves to get a restorative she extracts the formula and the exonite. She tries to escape by a rear door, but it has been locked. She is about to face Conrad, when Bernard enters and demands the exonite. Conrad refuses. Bernard pleads, threatens, attempts bribery, and when Conrad still refuses, leaps upon him. There is a struggle. Bernard tries to use his revolver, but Conrad knocks it out of harm's way, and Miriam secures it.

Bernard, finding the exonite gone, tries to escape, Miriam levels his own gun at him. Secret service agents enter and take him into custody. Conrad, disgusted at the methods of the alien spy, gives his consent to have Miriam offer the formula to the government. The complete understanding is followed by an early marriage.

He is stunned when he meets the intruder and finds that she is none other than Mary Davis, the prettiest and sweetest girl he has ever seen. They quickly become friends, and she brings a softening influence into his grim life.

THE FALSE FRIEND (Peerless—Five Parts—June 11).—The cast: William Ramsdell (Robert Warwick); Virginia Farrell (Gail Kane); Robert Farrell (Jack Drumier); De Witt Clinton (Earl Schenck); J. Carleton Clinton (E. J. Rollow); Byron (Louis Edgard); Marietta (Pinna Nesbit). Story by Florence Bolles. Directed by H. Davenport.

William Ramsdell, working his way through college, has a wealthy but weak-willed friend in De Witt Clinton. At the football game Ramsdell is presented to Judge Farrell and his daughter, Virginia. For the holidays, Clinton returns to his father, who threatens to disown his son should he marry Marietta, a cabaret dancer. Clinton agrees to break off his relations with Marietta.

Minna Byron awaits the approach of starvation. Her husband, unable to get work, is persuaded to help pull off a crooked job. Marietta shows Clinton letters mentioning marriage. Clinton catches Byron breaking into the house. When Byron pleads for mercy, Clinton agrees to free him on condition that he get the letters from Marietta's desk.

Byron gets the letters, but Marietta covers him with a revolver. In the struggle that ensues, Marietta is shot. Byron escapes, gives the letters to Clinton, and receives one hundred dollars. The case is pronounced a sucide. Returning home, Bryon finds his wife dead.

Several years late Ramsdell makes a speech, which so impresses ex-Judge Farrell that he takes Ramsdell into his law firm as a partner.

Mrs. Farrell looks on Clinton as eligible for Virginia, but the girl prefers Ramsdell. Clinton recognizes the Farrell butler as Byron. Clinton insinuates to Virginia that ugly stories had been circulated about Ramsdell.

At a week-end party, Clinton has Byron drug Ramsdell's tea, and after Ramsdell has gone to his room, Byron injects a drug into Ramsdell's arm, then puts the hypodermic needle under Ramsdell's pillow. Locking the door from the inside, Byron leaves through the window. The next morning Ramsdell's door is broken down, and Farrell finds the hypodermic needle, Ramsdell thinks it a joke, but is horror-stricken when he cannot convince his friends he is not addicted to the drug habit. The last blow falls when Virginia cannot believe his denial.

Broken in spirit, Ramsdell finds the public favor turned against him. When he reads of Virginia's engagement to Clinton, he takes to drink and goes rapidly down hill. Later, a sudden hope causes him to rush from a saloon. He hurries to a railroad, and two days later stumbles into a lumber camp.

Virginia takes up the broken threads of her life again and marries Clinton. Returning from their honeymoon, Clinton realizes Virginia avoids him. Ramsdell stays at the lumber camp, and in due time he is made manager. Nearby, Clinton and Virginia are spending the summer. While tramping through the woods Virginia is overtaken by a storm. She seeks shelter. As the door is opened she finds herself face to face with Ramsdell. The storm over, Virginia returns to her lodge wearing Ramsdell's coat. Questioned by Clinton, she says the coat belongs to a lumberman.

Robert goes to America, where he becomes a mine operator. Susan and the Prince are often together in the secret grotto where she dreams her day dreams. One day the Duke see him kissing Susana. Michael makes a wreath and crowns the girl, using a ring which had always served as the token of an engagement in the Sylvanian Court. A letter recalls Prince Michael. The Prince goes to the grotto, but Susan does not appear. Giving a farewell letter to the Duke's servant, Michael departs. The Duke intercepts this letter. He says Michael asked him to bid her farewell. Susan is heartbroken —Michael, in Paris, is grief-stricken.

Susan goes to the Duke for news of Michael. She swoons and the Duke takes Michaels ring. Susan comes to and pleads with the Duke to help her get a message to Michael. She misses the ring. The Duke forges a letter, presumably returning the ring. At a reception the Duke delivers this letter. The Prince breaks down, but the Duke tells him he must master his grief. Michael writes Susan, bidding her good-bye, and saying he will never see her again.

When she reads it her faith is shattered. In her desperation she writes her brother. Her father, seeing the letter, drives her from the house. She goes to her grotto, where the goatherd finds her. A year later Susan, with her baby, is living in the goatherd's cottage.

Princess Sonia, betrothed to Michael, is spending a week at the Duke's castle. The Prince arrives. They go to goatherd's island, where they find Susan's baby on a rock.

Susan recognizes the Prince. When they left, she comes to her child, and tears up the note for 100 francs which had been left under the child's head. She tells the goatherd the Prince has been there.

Michael tries to banish the memories that haunt him. Robert, home from America, learns of Susan's tragedy. He comforts her. He swears vengeance. Susan tries to dissuade him. He arrives at the Duke's castle during a reception, breaks through the guests, and tells Susan's story. Robert forces Michael out of the castle, and is seen struggling with him at the edge of a cliff. The Duke's servant shoots Robert, and he topples over. Susan sees her brother fall, and finds him dead. Bending over his body, Susan looks up to see Michael. She swoons. Her head strikes a rock. She is taken to the goatherd's cabin by the Prince.

When she comes to the Prince is by her side, and she forgets that they had been separated, the shock having deranged her mind. She pays no heed to her child, but is very tender with Michael. She falls asleep in his arms. When the goatherd takes Michael to task, explanations ensue, and they realize the Duke's duplicity. The Duke explains it had been for his King and country. Michael leaves. He breakes his engagement with the Sonia, saying he must make amends for a great tragedy.

Susan dresses in the clothes the Prince liked best. Michael again crowns her with the daisies. She is delighted. She wanders along like a child, picking daisies. In trying to reach a flower her foot slips, and she falls into a stream and is carried down by the current.

The old shepherd dog brings the goatherd and Michael to where Susan lies dead with her daisy crown on her head. In later years Michael and his son go often to Susan's grave, which is at the mouth of the grotto.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

GIVING BECKY A CHANCE (Morosco—Five Parts—June 7).—Becky Knight (Vivian Martin); Tom Fielding (Jack Holt); Ross Benson (Jack Richardson); Mr. Knight (P. H. Sosso); Mrs. Knight (Alice Knowlan).

Becky Knight is the only child and is pampered by her parents, who keep a small general store in a village. By economy they find they can send Becky to boarding school. There she meets a number of wealthy girls, who, when she mentions Rosemere, assume that that is her country home, and Becky permits the deception to continue.

At Christmas time she is invited to the home of one of the girls and there meets Tom Fielding, the girl's brother, a young doctor. Tom falls in love with Becky and believes she is what she pretends to be. Tom proposes and, although she tries to explain her real position, Becky is not given the opportunity.

Tom goes on a hunting expedition with Ross Benson, son of an inn keeper, and while going through the village where Becky lives, is called to the bedside of her mother, who has collapsed from overwork. Becky, seized with homesickness, returns home and meets Tom in the shabby litele house. He chides her for her deceit, and Becky is unable to respond.

Becky learns that her father is in debt and his creditors are about to foreclose. Ross Benson, who has seen her dance at the house party, hears of this, and wishing a dancer for his cabaret, offers Becky $500 for a two weeks' engagement to appear as a masked dancer. Becky accepts and dances in the road house. On the last night of her engagement, Tom drives through the rain and runs across Becky struggling with Benson in his automobile. He takes her home and there Becky gives the checks to her worried father, and Tom takes her into his arms.

JAGUAR'S CLAWS (Lasky—Five Parts—June 11).—The cast: El Jaguar (Sessue Hayakawa); Beth Thomas (Fritzi Brunette); Phil Jordan (Tom Moore); Nancy Jordan (Marjorie Daw); Harry Knowles (Tom Forman); Marie (Mabel Van Buren).

El Jaguar, a bandit, rules the northern states of Mexico by fear. He demands tribute from the manager of the American oil fields, but the man, in fear of his life, resigns, and the company sends young Phil Jordan as its representative.

Phil brings with him his little sister, Nancy, and, on the day of their departure, marries Beth Thomas, she agreeing to join them in Mexico shortly. El Jaguar sees Nancy and starts to make love to her, but is discovered by Phil and given a thrashing. El Jaguar leaves, vowing vengeance. He attends a wedding, seizes the bride and takes her to his home.

Beth joins Phil and Nancy and one night shortly after her arrival, El Jaguar sets fire to one of the oil wells and while Phil and his superintendent, Harry Knowles, are trying to fight the flames, the bandits steal Beth, taking her before El Jaguar. Phil is also captured. The bandits, having overlooked Nancy on their first visit, are sent back to get her and the three are brought before El Jaguar. Knowles, hearing of this capture, rides to the border and secures the aid of the rangers.

El Jaguar then offers Phil his choice: he can take one of the girls and go, but must leave the other one with El Jaguar. Phil can not decide which to take, but Beth finally declares she will remain. She is taken into another room by Marie, El Jaguar's cast-off sweetheart. Phil and Nancy ride away and meet the rangers. They all dash to El Jaguar's house, and he, drunk, is trying to break through the door, but just as he is about to enter, and Beth is preparing to kill herself, the bride whom he has stolen leaps into the room and stabs him. Marie, seeing her lover dead, kills herself over his body just as Phil and Nancy run in and take Beth into their arms.

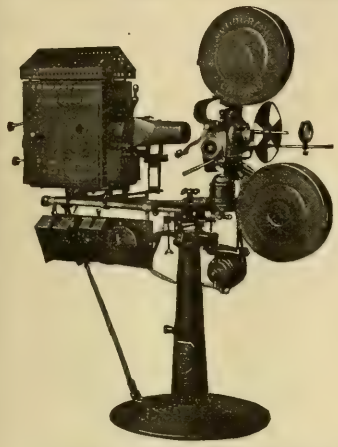
Motiograph - Satisfaction



EVERY MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNER and MANAGER should read the following letter from Kansas City, Mo.:

Dear Sirs:

Many times I have been considered as a radical man in my views regarding the equipment that I use in the Sapphire Theatre, but the fact that I am compelled to run at such a high rate of speed and run so continuously from early morning until midnight, I feel that I must use only the equipment that gives the best results and costs me the least money to maintain.

In my experience in the show business (which started seven years ago), I have used every make of machine with the exception of one, and until such time as you persuaded me to install the Motiograph equipment I had been buying new machine heads every six months and in many instances I had to have my machine heads overhauled thoroughly at an expense of from ten to thirty dollars. I have had the two Motiographs in service running at the rate of from five to eight minutes per reel for more than seven months; the expense so far has been eighteen cents, and from what my operators advise me they are good for another six months' steady running without any more expense.

If any of your customers desire any further confirmation of this letter (that is, if you show this letter to anyone), have them write or see me, for I know good equipment when I see it and will be only too glad to assist any manager towards locating the most practical moving picture machine that to my knowledge has been manufactured.

Yours very truly,
A. E. Elliott, Prop.,

Thoroughly Tested By Men Who Know

One Reason Why Silvertips Have Won

Before placing the new, negative, projector carbon—Silvertip—on the market, this company carried on a most thorough investigation as to its possibilities. Among those conducting these tests were not only skilled illuminating engineers, but also expert moving picture men, men who knew every phase of the projection lighting problem.

It is due to the care with which these preliminary tests were carried on that Silvertips have attained their present enviable reputation. The exhibitors who are purchasing them in such large quantities know they are buying a tested product—a product that has become the standard in its field in a very short time.

"MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER
FOR REAL SUN-LIT PICTURES

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" polyphase converter is maintained constant, so that the startling of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

Simplex

We offer more real value for every dollar invested in Simplex Projectors than any other manufacturer on earth.

The Final Test of Superiority is Comparison

Visit any distributor or dealer and examine each projector, part for part, and if you are the least familiar with absolute worth in material, you cannot help but truthfully agree that Simplex outclasses all other makes, and if it were sold at its value would command nearly double the price asked for other projectors.

You will naturally wonder why and how we could meet competitive prices up-to-date.

HERE ARE A FEW REASONS:

The demand for our product has doubled within the past year, enabling us to purchase and schedule in larger quantities.

To manufacture parts in larger lots.

To facilitate and standardize production through the scientific layout of manufacturing Departments.

To operate efficiently at low expense.

To install equipment that represents the last word in manufacturing facilities.

Thus Scientific and Advanced Methods is Your Gain

Simplex

Projectors will out-perform any other Motion Picture Machine in the World. Catalogue E tells why.

ARGUMENT

ARGUMENT WITHOUT PROOF IS USELESS—WITH CORROBORATION, IT CONVINCES AND JUSTIFIES PREJUDICE AND PRACTICE.

WHEN WE ARGUE IN FAVOR OF "SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS," WE ARE WILLING TO PROVE EVERY STATEMENT.

THE FACTS ARE:

That a combination of a Speer "Cored" upper and a "Hold-Ark" lower will improve your projection.

That the hard core of the "Hold-Ark" assures absolute steadiness of the arc.

That ghosts and aggravating shadows are eliminated by the brilliancy of the light.

That every carbon is uniform and can be depended upon for efficient results.

That a mere trial of "Speer Carbons" will cause you to use them unhesitatingly thereafter.

That samples will be supplied willingly, to those who desire additional proof of the foregoing arguments.

"The Carbons with a Guarantee."

A Tribute to the Flag and The Safest Investment in the World

"Wars cannot be conducted without money. It is the first thing to be provided. In this war it is the most immediate help—the most effective help—that we can give. We must not be content with a subscription of two billion dollars; we must oversubscribe this loan as an indication that America is stirred to the depths and aroused to the summit of her greatness in the cause of freedom. Let us not endanger success by complacent optimism. Let us not satisfy ourselves with the reflection that some one else will subscribe the required amount. Let every man and woman in the land make it his or her business to subscribe to the Liberty Loan immediately, and if they cannot subscribe themselves, let them induce somebody else to subscribe. Provide the Government with the funds indispensably needed for the conduct of the war and give notice to the enemies of the United States that we have billions to sacrifice in the cause of Liberty.

"Buy a Liberty Bond today; do not put it off until tomorrow. Every dollar provided quickly and expended wisely will shorten the war and save human life."

Secretary W. G. McAdoo,
May 14, 1917.

Don't Be a Business Slacker

The man who allows fear to paralyze the hand he writes checks with, is more dangerous to our country than the crank.

Now is the time to drive your business harder than you have ever driven it before; and if we all drive hard, prosperity will result.

No matter what comes—don't be a business slacker.

We propose to keep right on building and selling and creating, and we know that the whole motion picture industry feels exactly the same way; America cannot avoid being the most prosperous Nation the World ever knew.

We are the largest manufacturers of musical instruments built especially for motion picture theatres; we have done a wonderful business, and expect to do the biggest business in the history of our Company during the coming season.

Good business with us means good business with you;—means attracting a patronage that will rave over your house and praise your pictures and delight in your music;—that will bring them back again and again and make your business successful.

The name and fame of the Fotoplayer is world-wide—we have instruments for small and large houses;—instruments that will more than pay for themselves in a short time.

The Fotoplayer is supreme—it makes every action on the screen life-like and intense. It may be played by hand or by using ordinary piano rolls, all under the control of one man.

Have you heard our Vox Mystica? A solo celestial voice that stirs the very depths of your soul.

We design and build orchestral pipe organs; you should know about our exclusive features.

Write Immediately—Do Not Delay.
It Means Your Success!

"SEVEN CUTEY PUPS"

Vincent Colby's World Famous Drawings Come to Life in Moving Pictures.

A distinct novelty is now being booked through the Universal Exchanges throughout the country. Wherever post cards are sold Vincent Colby's puppies are known. Millions of these have added to Uncle Sam's postal revenues and now they are to have even wider fame and popularity through the medium of the screen. "Seven Cutey Pups" is the attractive title of this latest animated cartoon which shows the sad (?) fate of each in a screamingly funny way. The clever drawings are not merely outline as are most of this class of subjects: they are shaded or modeled and the effect is to make the pups unusually lifelike. Everyone who sees this novelty one-reel feature will enjoy it to the limit. It will please them all, young and old alike. It can be booked through any one of the 73 Universal Exchanges, or direct from the home office.

Popular News Weekly Features Timely Subjects in Current Release.

Preparedness activities continue to fill the public mind and the Universal Animated Weekly subjects reflect this attitude. In the current release are pictures of Liberty Loan Parades; the first big ship of the new merchant marine flotilla; Harvard soldiers in review; French troops honor dead American aviator; 5,000 cavalry at Ft. Ethan Allen; official French war pictures; marvelous views of the formidable "tanks" in action, and other patriotic views of like nature. There are also some remarkable scenes of the recent Western cyclone; an Italian earthquake and the ever popular cartoons by the world famous cartoonist, Hy Mayer. The whole makes up a one reel feature that is constantly increasing in popularity, and maintains the standard established by the U. A. W. which has given it the prestige which it now enjoys. The U. A. W. is released every week on the regular Universal Program but may be booked separately if desired thru any Universal Exchange.

THE WORLD'S WORK

The current issue of the ever popular Universal Screen Magazine shows a variety of subjects that is sure to please any audience. The making of ice-cream on a large scale shows many interesting operations, including the official inspection of the product from the raw material to the final delivery to the consumer. Preparing tests for seed corn is shown by courtesy of the New York College of Agriculture and proves most interesting in these days when nearly everyone is raising a garden as a patriotic duty. Preparedness is represented by views of the making of battleship armor plate; science is recognized in teaching deaf mutes to talk; the marvelous miracles in mud, animated sculpture by Willie Hopkins, produces a patriotic subject, "The Spirit of '76," in a manner that will get enthusiastic appreciation. Each weekly release of the Universal Screen Magazine further enhances its popularity, and all Universal Exchanges report a constantly increasing demand for prints.

Fourth Release Increases Interest in Newest Topical Review

Unusually interesting subjects are shown on Universal Current Events in every number. If Exhibitors realized the immensity of the resources back of this marvelous news review they would not wonder at the consistent regularity with which it beats all competition. Printed on the day preceding release date, it is as up to date as your morning paper. When one considers that this record is maintained rain or shine, that the camera correspondent staff covers the entire globe, and that these men, numbering in all over 200, are all trained news gatherers, willing to risk life and limb to get the sort of subjects the Exhibitors like to

COMEDIES OF WIDE APPEAL

Eddy Lyons

The popularity of Universal Comedies is no doubt largely due to their infinite variety. In Nestors the fans see those popular favorites, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, in the funniest parlor comedies that are being released anywhere today. In L-KO'S they get Phil Dunham, Merta Sterling, Lucille Hutton and other funny folks in stunt comedies that call for the last word in skill and daring on the part of these resourceful and clever people. In Joker Comedies you get William Franey, considered by many the funniest man on the screen today; Gale Henry, by all odds the premier comedienne of the screen, together with a supporting cast whose individual abilities are of stellar caliber. A comedy night made up of Universal Comedies makes a bright spot for the fans any week and never fails to draw capacity. Book through any Universal Exchange.

The suggestion that we put out this play as a special has come to us from various quarters.

This is not our way of doing business. It is neither the first nor the tenth time we have refused to participate in extra profit at the expense of the exhibitor.

We are irrevocably committed to the program. We are under bond of decent business to keep faith with our associates, the exhibitors. We are THE ONLY MANUFACTURER IN THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY THAT NEVER DEPARTS FROM THE PROGRAM PRINCIPLE BY SO MUCH AS THE BREADTH OF A HAIR.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS EXCHANGES

JUNE 23, 1917

JACKIE SAUNDERS IS AGAIN A HOYDEN IN "A BIT OF KINDLING"

THE week of June 18th another five-act, Jackie Saunders-Mutual Picture will be released. It is entitled "A Bit of Kindling." Once more Jackie is a typical tom-boy and has a role in which she can romp about to her heart's content and the infinite delight of the picture fans who seem to like her best in this sort of characterization. Sherwood MacDonald directed the picture, which is from the pen of Douglass Bronston. The cameraman was William Beckway.

A Fascinating Star.

Jackie Saunders and her sunny personality seem especially made for the sort of plays like "A Bit of Kindling." In this picture the fascinating star wears boy's clothes and allows her golden curls to peep out through the rags of a slouchy hat. She enacts the role of "Sticks," a girl newsboy, who is forced to don boy's clothing in order to stand an equal chance with the opposition "newsies." Good looking Arthur Shirley has the role opposite Miss Saunders as a young civil engineer, whom drink holds fast in its grasp. "Sticks" and the young engineer are thrown together by chance and a quaint attachment springs up between the two. When at length the engineer turns over a new leaf and applies himself to hard outdoor manual labor, "Sticks" does much to aid him in his struggle back to manhood. She effects his complete reformation only to see him snatched away, later on, by the pretty city girl to whom the engineer had been engaged for months. Then the wheel of Fortune revolves again and little "Sticks" falls upon happier times. She is adopted by a rich old gentleman who educates her properly and ultimately she emerges as a regular butterfly girl. And then—but your satisfied patrons will tell you better than we can how satisfactory is the end of this five-act Mutual Picture.

Fourth of Series.

"A Bit of Kindling" is the fourth subject of the Jackie Saunders Series of Mutual Pictures. Already released and now showing to big receipts are "Sunny Jane," "The Wildcat" and "The Checkmate." Ensure your theatre good summer business by booking the entire series now at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

Russell Working on "Weakness of the Strong"

William Russell of the American Film Company, Inc., has begun work on his next Mutual Picture, which will bear the title "Weakness of the Strong." Edward Sloman is directing.

"The Immigrant" Is The Newest Chaplin

As announced last week, the eleventh and newest Mutual-Chaplin Special is entitled "The Immigrant." The inimitable Chaplin is shown coming to America in the steerage of a vessel bound for the "promised land" and surrounded by a swarm of immigrants that put to shame any similar collection ever assembled at Ellis Island. Just to look at them is to laugh. Later on the action shifts ashore and Chaplin creates a perfect gale of merriment by his "business" in a restaurant. His discovery that he is short of the funds with which to settle his bill and his efforts to delay actual payment are simply indescribable. The scenes mentioned include, of course, only a tiny fraction of those which make up the production as a whole, but serve to indicate that Chaplin's originality is unlimited and that as time goes on he can create more and more situations that in themselves alone abound in untold comedy possibilities. "The Immigrant" is the eleventh Mutual-Chaplin Special, and any Mutual Exchange will be able to arrange bookings for you on "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "One A. M.," "The Count," "The Pawnshop," "Behind the Screen," "The Rink," "Easy Street," "The Cure" and "The Immigrant." Make your reservations now.

"Melissa of the Hills" Next Minter Subject

"Melissa of the Hills," from the pen of Maibelle Heikes Justice, will be the next offering of Mary Miles Minter. It is a story of the Tennessee hills and was originally entitled "The Circuit Rider." Reservations should be made without delay at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

"THE DAZZLING MISS DAVISON" FEATURES MARJORIE RAMBEAU

AS THE fifth offering of the Marjorie Rambeau Series of Mutual—"Big Stars Only"—Pictures, Frank Powell presents "The Dazzling Miss Davison. This is an adaptation of Florence Warden's novel of the same title which has been read by hundreds of thousands of people. Mr. Powell himself directed it. It will be released in five acts the week of June 18th through all Mutual Exchanges.

A Mystery Story.

"The Dazzling Miss Davison" is a mystery story that keeps one guessing right up to the very end. Who is the dazzling Miss Davison is a question that will instantly occur to every one who witnesses the picture. She is a remarkably pretty girl—that is instantly evident. But what is her real occupation? Why does she appear and disappear in the most unaccountable manner? Who are the mysterious individuals she appears to be in communication with at frequent intervals? Why have they the authority to cause her to change her plans at a moment's notice? Is she an international spy of some kind? Is she a criminal? Just who and what is she? Every one of these questions will be raised during the run of the picture. And when the real secret of Miss Davison is finally disclosed there won't be one in a hundred of your patrons who will have guessed the answer. It's the kind of a picture that will cause a lot of comment—one of the kind that lead the critics to observe that motion pictures are constantly improving. The exhibitor who runs "The Dazzling Miss Davison" for several days will certainly discover that the word-of-mouth advertising will increase his patronage from day to day.

A Box-Office Asset.

Marjorie Rambeau, famous star of "Cheating Cheaters," who draws houses of $12,000 and $15,000 weekly at the New York theatres, is alone a box-office asset of untold value. When she appears in a picture like "The Dazzling Miss Davison" this value is still further increased. The week of June 18th is the release date of this, her latest picture.

Famous Rialto Theatre Runs All Gaumont Films

Manager Rothapfel of the famous Rialto Theatre of New York City has paid a well deserved compliment to the Gaumont-Mutual subjects by arranging to run on his screen every one of the Gaumont single reels—"Tours Around the World," "Reel Life" and the "Mutual Weekly."

PARALTA PLAN

HIGHER Rentals! That's all very fine, but how in the world is the exhibitor to pay them? Two big men, each connected with a big company, are out in trade papers with suggestions that rentals be advanced. To pay more the exhibitor must get more. Where is it to come from? Increase in admission prices? Sounds easy, but can the exhibitor afford to experiment? If the public responds, all's well and good. But suppose the public does not respond—who pays the loss in both patronage and money?

THE chief complaint of the exhibitor is that he cannot do business on any basis of certainty—that he is always kept in doubt; that he is continually subjected to arbitrary changes that affect his financial interests. And now when his rentals are as high as his receipts can stand, a proposition is made to raise them again. Here is where the Paralta Plan comes in.

A PARALTA Plan exhibitor, doing business under a Paralta Exhibiting Franchise, works on a basis of absolute certainty. He owns and controls his Paralta Plays for one year at a fixed rental, which cannot be changed. The Paralta Plan helps him develop his territory—to get more; but it differs from the "System." It lets him keep what he gets.

NEW FILM BIDS ALL TO ENLIST

Review of 'Our Fighting Forces' Shows Powerful Appeal to Patriotism

LE B

Walt r

Before a critical audience of military experts now stationed in Los Angeles, newspaper men and civic officials, a special preview of "Our Fighting Forces," a forthcoming release by the Pathe Exchange, was given yesterday at the Pathe Headquarters, 729 South [illegible] street.

The picture is composed of engrossing scenes taken in various parts of the United States, which, when assembled at Fort Lee, N. J., received the attention of high military officials.

President Wilson, Secretary of War Baker, Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, are shown in the cinema, which holds a distinctive patriotic appeal. It was "shot" solely through patriotic motives and will be released to thousands of "movie" houses throughout the country to stimulate recruiting.

Somewhere in the United States are seen squads of soldier "rookies" receiving training, somewhere else are shown cavalry battalions in practice, while some of the most interesting scenes of national preparedness ever shown are projected in revealing the [illegible] of the new superdreadnaughts of the United States submarines, submarine "subs" and subchasers of the navy. Finally, aviators of four junkets and seaplane and recruiting going on in various parts are shown.

The [illegible] principle of "Our Fighting Forces" is an argument for enlistment.

At the [illegible] termination an inspiring picture on "liberty" pairing in the [illegible] ... [illegible] calling upon the men of America to [illegible] defense in Battle Line for [illegible]

Two episodes showed more than [illegible] emphasized a patriotic necessity of having every man, [illegible] the President's call with a personal response and willingness to [illegible] defend its institutions and integrity. The [illegible] makes a novelty from a dramatic standpoint, while photographically it is a [illegible] picture. It will flash the message [illegible] upon its release, which is to be [illegible]

Surely the Shoe Fits Goldwyn

FRANK E. WOODS, a thoughtful factor in motion pictures and author of "The Spectator" column in The New York Dramatic Mirror, says in his article of June 9:

"Motion pictures will keep on improving. Having reached the limit of length, the producers will now improve in quality. Nothing stands still.

"Experience and the constant flow of new brains into the business can mean nothing but advancement . . . the late recruits are coming from the more intelligent of the public —the literary and the educated.

"It is this very fact—the coming of more enlightened brains into the field—that must tend eventually to crowd out the undesirables."

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, with its imposing array of competent, brilliant and successful specialists, takes pleasure in repeating Mr. Woods' sane comments through the medium of an advertisement.

Goldwyn Pictures will reveal to exhibitors and the public what tremendous advances can be made in this most wonderful of the modern arts.

Facts and Comments

IF there is any doubt in the minds of organized exhibitors as to the sincerity of National President Ochs we would suggest their careful consideration of a letter from the Secretary of the Manhattan Local, printed elsewhere in this issue. We have previously referred to the methods of President Ochs and have said that he was elected last year primarily to enable him to further his own personal interests. Despite his seeming frankness and protestations of loyalty to the interests of exhibitors throughout the country, we say again and now that he is seeking re-election to serve his own purposes, and the tactics he and his friends will adopt to secure his re-election will be just the sort they have always used and need surprise no one. It is high time the Exhibitors' League ceased to be the football of scheming politicians.

RIGHT is might every time. Our nation is on the side of right again, as we believe she has been always, consequently there can be no question as to the final outcome. Let our moving picture industry also always be right and we may be sure that we will win against the unjust discrimination and political oppression of censorship, and against the manipulation of those who would control the industry from motives of purely selfish and personal interest. The moving picture belongs to all the people as much as the press, it is the great popular entertainer, and it should be as jealously guarded as any of the free institutions of our country.

EXHIBITORS should beware of films that are exploited under the guise of teaching morality or the evils of vice. Those who exploit such productions point to indorsements by ministers and others who usually view them solely from a propaganda point of view. Films of this sort will kill off theater patronage quicker than anything else. The public is looking for entertainment, and such films are not that in any sense of the word.

WE still have the producer and director who persists in making films that are objectionable. Confound his persistence. Many of our responsible manufacturers have dispensed with the services of the director who wallows in filth that meets with the disapproval of censor boards. We are hoping that the jail sentence predicted by W. A. Brady will soon fall to the lot of one of these panderers. This would make them sit up and take notice and probably do more to discourage them than the strongest disapproval of the trade, whose opinion they seem to care little for.

A DUTY the moving picture industry owes itself and one that should be taken in hand forthwith is the appointment of a representative body inside its own ranks which will undertake the prosecution under the law of those producing and renting companies and individuals that continue to discredit the whole industry with their vile productions. We believe that some of the existing organizations might readily undertake this very necessary duty but none of them seems to have the inclination, however much they may have noted the necessity. It is nothing short of an outrage that the whole moving picture trade should be made to suffer by offenses against decency of an almost negligible minority. There are hundreds of new films placed on the market every month in this country and it only requires one or two out of this large total to damn the whole in the eyes of a large number to furnish the necessary material for agitators of censorship. Rid the industry of the panderer by putting him behind the bars where he belongs.

BUSINESS going on as usual" is a good motto and an exceedingly appropriate sign for the U. S. A. to display at the present time. Of course there will be necessary readjustments in every part of our business, professional and domestic life, but success of the whole undertaking of our country in the present crisis will be largely dependent on the successful continuation of all our agricultural and business pursuits and their maintenance in as nearly normal and highly efficient condition as formerly. This will not only mean success in the prosecution of the war but will immeasurably help to readjust conditions after the war is over when the whole world must face a grace period of settlement and readjustment in business and social conditions. Let us plan to carry on our various activities as before and let "Business go on as usual" during this period of world "alterations."

The Devil's Pet Salad

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE is with us an urgent necessity
For men who know how to think clearly,
Who can portray our methods of living.
In life art finds its true sanction.
It takes skill to arouse curiosity,
To satisfy it with the beautiful,
To stimulate while entertaining,
To set our hearts all a-glowing
With pleasure, the whole while serving
Some purpose of human activity.
First come the acts we're performing.
Art follows in varied reflection,
Is identified with our own judgment,
And not simply as individuals,
But according with grouped opinion.
It should find audience minds responsive.
Mass consciousness is the human spirit.
True art is a self expression
In a form which delights our fancy.
Though none of these lines go to show it,
An art in blank verse there is, really.
We should start with some very clear thinking
And consider the medium thereafter.
Why attempt to interpret the novel,
Or be on speaking terms with the drama?
A law unto ourselves we should be.
All arts can unite in spreading
Some radiant truth universal,
Yet each keep to its own function
That is bound to come, believe me,
When we stop robbing our neighbors,
And with it will come a new dawning
Of intelligence in moving pictures.
They will then appeal to the civilized
Quite as well as to minds primitive.
Oh, what a raw salad we are!
And a very bad mixture at that,
From conglomerate herbs of falsehood,
Chopped up and undressed variously,
Though now and then nicely seasoned,
Made palatable with devilish cunning.
What a hodge-podge of heroes and heroines
And villains to snare the unwary.
The unjustly accused, the portiere
Where doors should be at a conference.
That outworn device of dropped letter,
Two people of fatal resemblance,
The American who rescues a Princess
In an absurdly mythical kingdom,
The political boss with cigar uptilted,
The ragged and forlorn little ingenue
Who at last becomes a dream in chiffon,
The cowboy in circus costume
Who is reformed by the beautiful "Easterner."
All that stuff which gets our capra
Latin for "goat" with a rhythm
Which "goat" hasn't got in our lingo.
Where in common social experience
Do we find such raw ingredients?
What is there in them to awaken
In our minds a new sense of pleasure,
Make happiness fuller and deeper?
These stale old devices theatric
No longer rouse audience emotion.
That sizzling bomb anarchistic!
That weary feud of Kentucky!
That dime novel of deferred vengeance!
That really painful travesty
Of mankind made by the heroine
When she puts on her brother's breeches
And goes about unrecognized,
Her snicker, wiggle and duck-walk
Credulity's final exhaustion!
A woman's a woman, thank heaven!
A carload of breeches can't change her.
Only as one is she plausible,
At best when pictured in beauty,
With a dash of charming intelligence,
Quite as winning in sweet dependence
As in bolder mood of assertion,
Earth's most priceless treasure
Until she thinks she can spin it
Around her dear little finger,
Thus jarring our pet prerogative.
My prayers for the progressive author
Who dares to portray real women
And men with the infinite variety
Of Nature, in all their complexity
Of character, soul and feeling!
My prayers, because he will need them
And all loose change he can gather
Outside of his chosen profession.
Plays are barred from screen presentation
Which are symbols of common experience,
Which are channels of spiritual feeling,
Which have high imaginative value,
Which appeal to minds not primitive.
They are headed straight for rejection
Unless they can be torn to fragments
And patched up in a wobbly vehicle,
Mere posters for star publicity.
Till this art asserts its democracy,
Exists for the people, not the actors,
It can only be representative
Of an early stage of art crudity.
Until it is designed with intelligence
For the massed social sense universal,
To spread truth, beauty and happiness,
It cannot reach full expression,
Do itself and audience full justice.
We are traveling in a dull Sahara
Of imitation and methods theatric,
Occasionally glimpsing the mirage
Of a far-off City Beautiful.
On we wander panting and thirsting
For something beyond personality;
For the mystery of life and its meaning,
For views of ourselves, our passions,
Our self struggles, for the bitterness
Of unachieved hope and ambition,
For all that sets our blood pulsing
And rouses us from sordid lethargy.
We'll see someday that artistry
Implies much more than workmanship
On the part of skilled interpreters.
What they are asked to interpret
May yet attain some significance,
But not so long as mahogany
Craniums and gourds empty
Have to do with production.
We may someday use mind projectiles,
Instead of loading huge cannon
Of costly and artistic production
With big-noise blank cartridge and spit curls.

An Exhibitors' or a General Convention

Sam Spedon

THE annual exhibitors' national convention the week of July 14-22 will mark the beginning of another year in the history of motion pictures. These yearly get-togethers mark the beginning and ending of the motion picture calendar.

If the national exhibitors' convention has done nothing else it has established in the minds of the industry the need of a convention to bring everybody in the business together to discuss their interests and let the world know we are an industry of equal importance as any in the world.

An Annual Convention of the Industry.

Every year the industry is assuming larger proportions, extending its borders and reaching out into every corner of the earth. It is too large to be controlled by a few men who may arrogate to themselves the power to rule its destinies and dictate its policies. Naturally it should have a central body of representative men from all branches of the industry selected for their fitness on their records as men of ability and influence by a convention that will elect its officers according to the dictates of its best judgment and wisdom and not through political intrigue or local cliques. We have been debating in our minds whether it is a wise thing to continue the National Exhibitors' Convention as a convention of exhibitors only or whether it would not be a better idea to hold annually a convention of the whole motion picture industry, embracing every branch and ramification of it. If we must have an exposition with the annual convention, have it for the benefit of the central or national body for a fund to oppose unjust legislation as affecting the interests of all. We believe this is the only logical way for the industry to get together in one concrete business whole. The experiences of the past year have convinced us of this and the several appeals to the National Association for its co-operation in matters of nation and state legislation warrant our conclusions.

Everything Points to a General Convention.

What makes us bold to state our conclusions is the desire expressed and published by the National Exhibitors' League to bring into their convention this year all branches of the industry in joint conference to debate and discuss questions touching upon and pertaining to the general welfare of the industry.

Another thing that points to a general convention is the disposition evinced by many local and state bodies of exhibitors to organize independently of any central league to govern their own affairs on their own initiative and discretion. This seems to indicate that a general annual convention will be the one centralizing meeting place of the whole industry, just as the representative of all the Rotary clubs representing all kinds of business meet in an annual general convention.

The Skeptic Differs With Us.

We think we hear the skeptic say: "If you think it is possible for the producers, exhibitors and other components of the motion picture industry to amalgamate in convention or any other general conclave you had better forget it. It isn't any more possible than it has been for the wholesalers and retailers to get together in the commercial world; each branch must have its own separate and district assembly of interest." We are not so sure of this and we do hope that it may be proven that it is possible for all branches of the motion picture industry to establish an annual general convention to bring them together for its own good.

Don't Miss It This Year.

Unless we miss our guess, there is going to be a whole lot doing at the Chicago Convention in July and it will be worth going many a mile to attend. Everything suggests a busy session, plenty of free speech and no bouquets. Everybody who has anything to say will say what he means and then some. We predict the week of July 14-22 will be one that will go down in the history of motion pictures and all who attend will be part of the history. Representatives of the industry and delegates from exhibitors' organizations in all parts of the country will be there. We can meet those we know, make the acquaintance of those we don't and learn a whole lot that is worth knowing.

The War Tax on Motion Pictures

By Sam Spedon.

THE industry has reason to congratulate itself on the favorable recommendation of the Senate Finance Committee to place but one tax on motion pictures and that it is placed on the admissions and public, which was substantially the tax recommended in the brief presented by the exhibitors and endorsed by the producers in their conference at Washington on the morning of May 12. It was also recommended by Wm. A. Brady, president of the National Association of the industry, in his address to the Finance Committee.

Whatever prompted the Finance Committee to recommend this single tax to the Ways and Means Committee is a matter of conjecture; the results so far speak for themselves. But we must give the handful of exhibitors and producers in Washington at the time full credit for their belated but nevertheless strenuous and commendable efforts to do the best they could under the circumstances. It is true that the National Association could have done more if it could have induced all the representative members of the industry to contribute their time and interest to get together in earlier conference and action, which it claims could not be done. It is certain that President Brady was not slack in his duty, for he is and was on the job and it behooves others to do likewise.

The danger is not entirely past yet. The admission tax has been recommended by the Finance Committee to the Senate and now it will have to go before the Conference Committee, which may have something to say about it. Do not forget in the meantime that your personal presence and plea to your Senator for his support may mean the success of this recommended tax when it comes before the Senate for final action.

The admission tax referred to as recommended by the Finance Committee is the 10% tax on all tickets exclusive of theaters charging five to twenty-five cents admission; no tax will be placed on them—only on admissions of more than twenty-five cents. This explanation of the tax is given for the benefit of those who may not have followed the reports published in the Moving Picture World issues of June 2nd, 9th and 16th.

Bone-Headed Censorship

By Sam Spedon.

THE Houston, Texas, board of censors "hogs" the supply of ivory in its ruling to exclude all war pictures, including "Civilization," being shown in the capitol city of the lone star state. It claimed that such pictures have a bad effect on the morals of the people. This reminds us of a similar action in Ohio where the censors said pictures of the Kaiser would have a bad effect on the minds of the people of that State.

The Houston City Council sustained the board, deciding that it should be upheld or abolished and the people have decided to abolish it, with the help of the press. We wish we could help them. When we hear of such assinine exhibitions of bone-headed stupidity words fail and we have an irresistible disposition to dip a vitriolic pen point into the reddest ink and say some things that we know would not pass these self same boards of censors.

Note the Distinction.

We are not in favor of capitalizing war for gain or to make an appeal to brutish instincts or sensationalism, but there is a distinction between such presentations and those that arouse patriotism and a righteous desire to resist despotism and cruelty by force of arms to establish peace. The United States government has requested the motion picture producers and exhibitors to aid it at this crisis in the showing of motion pictures of the latter kind. Needless to say the whole motion picture industry has responded, not only in this way by presenting the government with films for its own use and assisting it in every way it possibly can.

You're Quite Welcome.

We like to write this; it relieves our mind of a whole lot of thoughts and we sincerely hope it will be read by those whom it will displease as well as those whom it will please and possibly amuse. By the former we mean the censors to whom it applies and the people who selected or appointed them; by the latter we mean our regular readers. If it isn't read by either, then our labor is in vain and we have wasted some perfectly good printer's ink.

In a Few Words

By Sam Spedon.

THE less we write the more folks are apt to read it; that's the reason we have hopes. If you read what we have to say you are apt to be pleased because you will have wasted very little time even if you do not agree with us.

Show Us All You've Got.

Almost every day exhibitors write us asking why reviews of the one and two reel pictures of certain producers are not published. We will answer these inquiries by again asking the exchanges who distribute these pictures, why they do not allow the reviewers to see these pictures or let them know where they can be seen? It is the earnest desire of the Moving Picture World to give space to the review of every picture produced, but the producers themselves are alone to blame if they will not show them or tell where they are shown. We think it very poor business policy on their part to neglect their customers and lose prospective ones by failure to have the reviews published in the medium that reaches the exhibitors—the consumers.

A Bad Rule.

While we are on the subject of reviews: Do you know that some of the feature producers in New York City have discontinued the showing of their pictures in their projection rooms, to the reviewers? They claim some of them do not take their work seriously enough. This claim applies in some few instances, but they are the exception rather than the rule. Most of the reviewers take their duties very seriously, otherwise they could not hold their positions. This ruling of the producers works a hardship, not only on the reviewers, who are obliged to chase all over the city to find the theaters where the features are shown, but it delays the publication of these reviews so they do not reach the exhibitors in time to be of the same value as before this ruling was made. We cannot see why the many should be made to suffer for the few. If the producers want to exercise discipline why punish everybody, including themselves?

A Wise Man.

"I read my trade papers from beginning to end every week. They are responsible for my motion picture education." This is the acknowledgement of C. W. Meighgan, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Portland, Oregon. It was made in course of conversation. He is the owner of several large theaters in Oregon and head of the People's Amusement Company. The position and success he has attained speaks well for the education he has derived from reading what others in his line of endeavor are doing and keeping abreast with the industry as a whole. The Moving Picture World we venture to assert is the most complete library of information and instruction to those who wish to promote themselves and their business interests. It takes pride not merely in the great number of advertisements it contains, but with even greater pride to the vast amount of solid reading matter and news it presents every week for the benefit of its readers. Do as Mr. Meighgan does, read it through from cover to cover and you will find yourselves as well informed as he and you may be able to progress in like proportions.

To the Men and Women of the Motion Picture Industry:

A PROCLAMATION!

THE motion picture industry has been asked by the Government to lend the screen to important and immediate messages to the people of the United States. The appeal has been made to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and as president of the association I am transmitting this important request to all the branches of the industry and to all its members.

All of us want to do our duty—and more. There is much to be done—through the screen and by every individual.

The first work asked of us was to spread the gospel of the Liberty Loan. Slides, films and posters telling the public about this important measure have been issued during the past few weeks. Exhibitors, distributors and producers and their employees can, by their patriotic endeavors, bring this message to the whole public. The Liberty Loan may, of itself, end the war. At least it will go far.

Let us all strive to promote this measure. The time is short. On June 15 the loan is closed. But the screen is a great and effective agency. Let us show what the screen can do for patriotism!

And let us show what each and every individual in the industry can do. Every man and every woman should subscribe, as their means may permit, to the Liberty Loan; and these subscriptions should all go forth as from the industry, indicating that over and beyond the power of the screen, this industry stands high in individual loyalty and patriotism.

Notify the National Association what amount of bonds you have subscribed for, or intend to take, so that we may announce on June 15 the total subscriptions to the Liberty Loan from the industry.

WILLIAM A. BRADY,
President National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Anson Describes His Work at Albany

By Grant Anson

Chairman of State League's Legislative and Judiciary Committee Tells How Wheeler Bill Was Killed

ON Jan. 23, 1917, the Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State was held at Hotel Ten Eyck, Albany, New York. Exhibitors traveled there from all sections of the State to seek relief from the dangers of a possible and very probable adverse decision in the now famous Bender Sunday opening case which is pending before the Court of Appeals to secure freedom from hostile city authorities who had never permitted the exhibition of Sunday motion pictures in their respective localities. Therefore, the cardinal issue, the main question before the convention, was the question of Sunday motion pictures, and it was the consensus of opinion that there was only one redress and that was through legislative action, not through the medium of a local option bill, but through a Sunday opening motion picture bill which would open the entire State—a mandatory bill to override the respective mayors and other local governing authorities on the question.

It was at this convention that I was appointed Chairman of the Legislative and Judiciary Committee of the Motion Picture League of New York State and authorized to present a bill to the New York Legislature which would keep faith with the intent of that convention in an attempt to open the motion picture theaters of New York State on Sunday. I realized that any form of amusement on Sunday by legislative act was a large and difficult task, having in mind the fact that New York State is ruled in the legislature by "upstate" people and that the representatives from the rural districts play a very large part in all legislative deliberations. But I understood the position.

Meanwhile, before the introduction of the Walker-Perlman Sunday opening bill, the legislature appointed a joint committee to investigate the motion picture industry, with orders to report back to the Legislature whether we were a fit industry to be taxed. I realized then as Chairman of the League's Legislative Committee that I was going to have two important matters to deal with—namely, taxation and Sunday opening, with very little chance of consummating both our objects at one session—that is, we could not kill the State license bureau bill and then secure Sunday opening and we could not secure Sunday opening without getting hit with the state license bureau.

I saw the situation had become so serious that I practically moved from New York City to Albany and remained there throughout the full session. Our Sunday opening bill was introduced and was referred to the codes committee. The question of Sunday motion pictures was a new question to most members of the Legislature and a campaign of education had to be inaugurated. During this time I was approached very often about throwing this bill into a local option bill. My reply to that had to be "No," because I could not do that and keep faith with the State Convention which oppointed me, and I could not abandon up-state exhibitors when their only relief lay in a Sunday opening motion picture bill on a statewide basis.

After some delay we got the codes committee of both branches of the Legislature to hold a joint meeting on March 21. It was before this committee that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry showed its real worth. Under the able and efficient management of Frederick Elliott a fine representative gathering appeared at Albany in behalf of Sunday motion pictures. It was here that William A. Brady delivered a speech which was considered a masterpiece—a speech which caused wide comment in legislative circles whenever motion pictures were mentioned.

After the hearing the subject of Sunday motion pictures became seriously impressed on the legislators' minds, and the codes committee at their second executive session favorably reported the Walker Sunday opening motion picture bill, which was a great step forward.

After the Walker bill has reached general orders in the Senate the Wheeler motion picture investigating committee made its report to the Legislature. This found we should not be taxed, but recommended a state license bureau. This bureau combined everything vicious and detrimental to our business. It conferred on one man, the commissioner, powers of censorship, to revoke an exhibitor's, producer's or exchangeman's license for cause.

The "for cause" might dwell in the commissioner's imagination and still our industry had no appeal from his ruling.

I wish to point out to the exhibitors of New York City the serious dangers just avoided: a deputy commissioner was to be appointed for the city of New York, with powers equal to your present city license bureau. This deputy, if he saw fit, could inspect your theaters and revoke your theater license for the smallest infraction of the municipal laws. This deputy also had charge of all studios, film exchanges, producers' quarters, etc., in the City of New York, and could revoke licenses at will.

Realizing how serious it was I notified the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and here again it responded. At the hearing before the judiciary committee of the Senate on the bill all branches of the industry were well represented. Meanwhile our Sunday opening bill had been advanced to the order of third reading in the Senate. The Wheeler bill had been favorably reported by the rules committee of the Assembly, and was passed in the Assembly by 84 to 53. Then the rules committee of the Senate favorably reported the Wheeler bill and the battle was on. Our cause was hanging on a thread. Our Sunday opening bill and the Wheeler bill were practically traveling side by side in the Senate. It placed us in position where we were asking for the killing of the Wheeler bill and praying for the other important bill favoring statewide Sunday opening.

It is enough to say that the liquor local option bill was passed one or two evenings previous to a vote on the Sunday opening bill. And those senators who were forced to vote for "liquor local option" bill thereby lost the so-called "wet vote" in their respective districts. Two nights afterward came the Sunday opening bill and a vote for that meant losing the so-called church vote in their districts—and some members of the Senate, although our ardent friends, decided not to vote at all.

It was this decision, due to voting on the liquor local option bill, that caused the defeat of the Sunday opening motion picture bill in the Senate. But whatever can be said for or against the proposition, bearing in mind the fact that it is easy to criticise but not easy to do, these two facts remain: Firstly, we have kept faith with upstate exhibitors whose only hope of securing Sunday motion pictures is through a mandatory Sunday opening motion picture bill on a statewide basis, and secondly we have paved the way to pass a Sunday motion picture bill next year. It may be that the next year's bill will have to take the form of a local option bill.

If that be true, I regret it, because it will cause a fight and expense to the industry in every city where Sunday motion pictures are permitted. I am not prepared to venture an opinion on that score at this time, because no one realizes more than I that legislation is more or less a question of luck and choice and it is hard to estimate the amount of damage the liquor local option bill and the Wheeler license bureau bill did to the Walker Sunday opening bill.

This bill being disposed of for the time being we buckled down to the fight of preventing the passage of the Wheeler license bureau bill in the Senate. Here we were confronted with serious obstacles. The Legislature had expended quite a sum of money in its investigation. It was only natural that it wished to show some tangible results for these expenditures. The main leaders were in favor of putting this Wheeler bill through the Senate, so the fight simmered down to a question of votes.

Inasmuch as the Assembly had caucused on this bill and made it a party measure, it was naturally presumed that the Senate would do the same thing. The Senate, however, held a conference on it and decided to have the rules committee report it favorably to the Senate. It was then that the real battle for votes commenced. For one whole week, the closing week of the session, we had to fight and fight hard. When the adjournment came and with it the defeat of the Wheeler License Bureau Bill, the chairman of the legislative and judiciary committee of the New York State League felt his duty by the industry had been properly performed and the responsibility reposed in him had been discharged.

To the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry must be given well-deserved and justifiable credit. It came into this serious fight with a vim and played a large part in determining the result. Also credit must be given to William Brandt and Mr. Louis Levine of the Brooklyn organization. I wish to pay substantial credit to Arthur

Friend of the Famous Players-Jesse Lasky company and Mr. McCarthy of D. W. Griffith's office. Last but not least, I want the exhibitors and manufacturers to know that Frederick Elliott rendered invaluable aid. His daily interest and advice to me on all matters helped greatly.

I did my duty, at great personal sacrifice and with very limited funds at my disposal. I kept faith with upstate exhibitors when my own conscience repeatedly warned me that this was a year of local option bills in the Legislature—that local option was the by-word of the hour and therefore a Sunday opening local option bill had the best chance of success. All I ask is fair judgment from my brother-exhibitors and let them judge by the actual results at Albany—namely, the defeat of the Wheeler license bureau bill and the laying of the foundation for a Sunday opening bill next year.

My Recommendations.

There is no question in my mind that the future is fraught with grave legislative dangers to us. The cheap brass band advertising methods adopted by our industry has contributed in a large part to these dangers. We are now classed in the realms of legislative thought as "big business," and "big business" is always susceptible to legislative attack.

What we need at the present time is the formation of a Legislative Bureau to deal with legislation not alone in New York State, but all over the country. This must be done and the exhibitors must furnish and make available the picture screens, so that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry can raise the proper funds for the work either through advertising schemes or otherwise. We need less law and less legal advice and more personal equation.

Personal equation counts largely in any legislature. Senators and assemblymen are only human. Legal briefs on questions are fine, but in the large masses of mail received by every legislator they are usually lost in the shuffle. In other words, they are often consigned to the silent and pathetic waste basket without even being read. The exhibitors and manufacturers must be made to realize that the support of this legislative bureau should be part of the regular routine of their business, the same as paying rent, exhibiting pictures, producing pictures, etc. Every senator and assemblyman knows what salary Charles Chaplin draws and what Mary Pickford gets, and then his knowledge of our business stops. He doesn't know of the struggling exhibitors, of the companies which have ceased to pay dividends, and of the companies which have fallen by the wayside.

I wish to issue this note of warning to both exhibitors and manufacturers. If this legislative bureau is not established so that competent men can deal with future situations as they arise—men who know what to do and how to do it—I venture this prediction: that the motion picture industry will get hit on the back in New York State alone with a "big bat" which will cost the industry of New York State alone hundreds of thousands of dollars per year. In the rising tide of increased legislative expense all over the country, new fields must be found to tax, and it is only natural with the cheap advertising attendant on our industry—it is the logical sequence of events—that legislatures should turn to the motion picture field, a field just permeated with people who try to impress the outside world with the spirit of "Do-Well," when in reality they are barely getting along and making both ends meet in the fierce competition which permeates the motion picture industry of today.

Goldfish Talks About Goldwyn

Does Not Foresee Elimination of Stars—Believes in Use of Great Decorative Artists.

PRACTICALLY on the eve of showing the first of the Goldwyn productions to the nation's exhibitors at the various Goldwyn branches in the United States and Canada, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has for the first time talked personally about his organization's productions.

Goldwyn's first trade showings at its exchanges will be held in July and not less than four pictures, with as many stars, will be ready for inspection.

"We have deliberately set out in our Goldwyn Pictures," says Mr. Goldfish, "to show both exhibitors and the public that there is a great deal more that can be put in a motion picture than the featured personality known as the 'star.'

"I have a feeling now that goes much deeper than the feeling I had four years ago when I founded and organized the Lasky company, whose productions were innovations in the film industry. I believe that today and for a long time into the future the quality of the story and the manner of its production will be the essentially big factors of successful pictures.

"I make no prediction about the lessening influence of stars, nor do I forsee the elimination of the star system. In Goldwyn we frankly recognize what we term star values by having exclusively in our service immensely popular women known everywhere and having box office value everywhere. We expect exhibitors to advertise and exploit these stars because of their powers of audience attraction, but we know from within our organization that we can make the production itself our greatest mercantile asset. Incidentally, we make the stars themselves much better through the medium of powerful stories produced and directed by important artists.

"The splendid successes achieved by Edgar and Archibald Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Arthur Hopkins, who are the associated owners of Goldwyn, as well as the achievements of the other distinguished factors we have enlisted with us, could not fail to exert a great influence for good in the world of motion pictures.

"We have inventive, creative, imaginative artists in our service and we have not wanted them to think and work under excessive pressure. In other words, we have taken our time and will continue to do so.

"I feel that the day of the specialist is at hand in picture-making. I believe that the time has come to utilize the ablest and most resourceful American painters and creative artists; the men who have done the decorations of the distinctive public and private places in America's great cities. This accounts for our getting Hugo Ballin, Everett Shinn and William H. Cotton into the Goldwyn producing organization. They began by applying their artistic skill to our settings and quick developed into directors of pictures. They, together with other associated men and women, have given our pictures an air of distinction and novelty.

"Experts in stage lighting, working with the lighting experts of the screen, have brought new and undreamed of effects to our productions. We have sought technical and mechanical ability persistently, and our photographic departments have revealed to us that the field of the camera is filled with possibilities almost beyond present conception.

"It was our original thought that the authors with whom we dealt should play an active part in the making of their pictures by Goldwyn. We have carried this thought out in practice. With us the author is consulted about and works on every detail of the picturizing of his story or play. His contact does not cease until he has helped cut, assemble and title his own work. In our studios Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Irvin S. Cobb, Roi Cooper Megrue and other authors devote days of their time to this work, neglecting new creative work for the time being to make their former successes have the same degree of finish on the screen as they had on the stage.

"All of these things constitute the 'new idea' in the production of motion pictures. We do not minimize the star—we make her bigger, better, abler than it would be possible for her to be with a poor story perfunctorily directed and mounted. Made with such intelligent effort and industry, I think Goldwyn has not taken merely the next step ahead in the screen art, but the next four or five steps, and we expect to go still farther because we are permitting well balanced brains to exercise their proper function of thinking."

Oregon League Has a Real Time

Coast Exhibitors Hold Convention and Ball—Many Interesting Addresses—Those Who Were There.

THE first annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon met at Portland, at the Multnomah Hotel, May 29 and 30. This is the first real bona fide convention of motion picture men ever held in Oregon, and although from a standpoint of instructiveness and business the convention accomplished but little, from the standpoint of creating a sociability and a fraternal feeling among Oregon's exhibitors and exchangemen, it was a success beyond the hopes of its promoters.

The convention was scheduled to open at 10.30 on the morning of the 29th; but owing to late arrival of delegates the opening was postponed until after the luncheon given by the League to both exchange men and exhibitors at the Multnomah Hotel. At this luncheon Dorothy Dalton, who was also present at the grand ball which concluded the convention on the evening of the 30th, was the guest of the exhibitors and exchangemen.

W. A. Graeper, vice-president of the League, officiated at the luncheon, and at the convention following it, in the absence of C. W. Meighan, president.

The delegates assembled at the Convention Hall immediately after the luncheon, where speeches of a general nature were delivered. The following was the program: Address of welcome, W. A. Graeper, Union Avenue theater, Portland; response by Lew Cullins, Casino theatre, The Dalles; "The Progress of Pictures," by Melvin G. Winstock; "The Strength of Union," by Abraham Nelson; "The Federal War Tax," by F. Langerman.

At the time of the convention a delegation of United States Senators was in Portland, and a committee composed of F. Langerman and E. Shainwold, Portland, and A. Bettingen, The Dalles, was appointed to interview the visiting senators on the war tax issue.

On the evening of May 29 a box party was arranged at the Majestic theater for the visiting women of the convention. Vaudeville acts from local theaters entertained the delegates later in the evening.

Proceedings on Memorial Day.

Instructive lectures were the order of the next day. J. S. Haughey, secretary of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 159, spoke on the subject of Projection. A. H. McDonald, Rex theater, Eugene, Oregon, addressed the convention on "The Oregon Exhibitor, Past and Present," giving a reminiscence of the early motion picture activities in Oregon. Mr. McDonald, who operated one of the first film exchanges in this state, was a particularly fitting person to speak on this subject. J. A. Koerpel, manager of the World Film Corporation, Seattle, was the exchangemen's spokesman at the convention. He made a particularly convincing address upon "The Relation Between Exhibitor and Exchange." G. T. Holtzclaw, of the Circle theater, Portland, closed the convention with a patriotic address, "The Spirit of the Day."

The luncheon at the Multnomah Hotel on May 29 was attended by W. A. Graeper, Abraham Nelson, G. D. Jackson, C. H. Smith, J. J. Parker, J. A. Koerpel, Melvin G. Winstock, R. C. Montgomery, Will Rosenthal, E. Shainwald, F. Langerman, F. M. Simonton, Ed I. Hudson, C. F. Hill, Mon Randall, Mrs. J. Hamilton Dalton, Dorothy Dalton, John Adams, I. Leeser Cohen, H. L. Concluding the convention came the grand ball, utilizing three ball rooms, entire lobby and mezzanine floor of the Multnomah Hotel. The public was invited to this affair, and the public sure did come. Newspaper estimates of the attendance give the number of dancers as three thousand. It is conceded that there was not room for one more couple on any of the dance floors. Guy Robinson was marshal of the floor, and W. A. Graeper, W. E. Tebbetts and J. B. Washtock were floor managers.

Miss Margarita Fischer, who, by the way, is an Oregon girl, was featured as the star of the event. She led the grand march with Judge W. N. Gatens, of the Circuit Court of Multnomah County.

During the ball the exchange men's exhibits were open to the public, and the moving picture stars made their headquarters in the different booths. The exhibits were all splendidly arranged, each exchange trying to outdo the other in making a showing. The exchangemen also contributed much to the success of the ball.

The success of the affair was due to the efforts of C. W. Meighan, president; J. J. Parker, treasurer; Guy Robinson, secretary; W. A. Graeper, vice-president; W. E. Tebbetts, John A. Jennings, John Adams, C. E. Mitchell, C. H. Smith, C. H. Phelps, George Maple, Sam Sax, H. C. Phillips and a score of other exhibitors, and J. A. Koerpel, of the World Film Corporation, whose experienced superivision of the grand ball enabled it to be pulled off without a hitch.

When Exhibitors Got Busy on War Tax

Story of What Happened Following Visit of Theater Men to Capital City.

ANOTHER little band of film patriots came into being last week when a delegation of representatives of the film industry, led by "Colonel" Harry B. Varner, of Lexington, N. C., and including Isadore Stern, of Philadelphia; Carl F. Senning, manager of the local Fox Film Company's exchange; Harry A. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, and Percy Wells and A. F. Sams, two more residents of the Tar Heel State, visited Washington. The party was later augmented by the arrival of C. W. Meighan, of the People's Amusement Company of Portland, Ore., and president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, and A. Lucas, who is connected with the Wells interests in Atlanta, Ga.

The outfit reached Washington early Thursday, May 31, and after shutting themselves up in a room in a local hotel they commenced an all-day session on what they could do to undo that which had been done. This is to use Colonel Varner's own words, whispered to the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World. For seven hours they wrestled with the problem, certain members of the delegation being somewhat "peeved" at what had occurred before, and at last they produced the masterpiece, the brief filed with the committee, which, aided and abetted by verbal arguments made by the members of the delegation to individual members of the committee, did the work.

The brief in full is as follows, the World correspondent regretting his inability to report what transpired at the conferences with the individual senators, other than to state they showed what a hardship the tax would prove to be upon the poor people who cannot afford to pay anything additional to the charge made for admission to the motion picture theaters:

AMENDED BRIEF PRESENTED BY REPRESENTATIVES OF ALL THE MOTION PICTURE THEATER OWNERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

To the honorable members of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate:

Gentlemen: This amended brief concerning Section 7, on admission for amusements, is presented by and on behalf of all motion picture theater owners in the United States.

Up to this time there was a difference of opinion between the motion picture theater owners as to the rate of admission which should be exempt from taxation. The gentlemen from North Carolina up to this time wanted the five, ten and fifteen cent houses exempted from taxation, and the people from other parts of the United States wanted no exemption whatsoever. The owners, however, desiring to assist your honorable committee in arriving at a proper adjustment of tax on admission, so far as they relate to strictly motion picture houses, have decided to recommend to your honorable committee that it would be agreeable to all the motion picture theater owners of the United States to have all motion picture theaters exempted from taxation where charge of admission is up to and including twenty-five cents, the reason for this being that the motion picture industry furnishes the poor man amusement and that the tax should not be imposed upon those who can afford it least. People who seek amusement and can afford to pay over twenty-five cents can best afford to pay the tax.

We all, therefore, join in recommending to your honorable committee that this suggested exemption be accepted.

P. W. Wells, President, North Carolina Exhibitors' League.
H. B. Varner, Secretary, North Carolina Exhibitors' League.
A. F. Sams, Attorney North and South Carolina Exhibitors' League.
Isadore Stern, Attorney for National Exhibitors' League.
Harry Schwalbe, Secretary and Treasurer, First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

When asked if they believed that the Senate would ratify the action taken by the Finance Committee in exempting theaters charging an admission fee of twenty-five cents or less, members of the film men's delegation declared that they were not at all apprehensive over any adverse action being taken by either the Senate or the House of Representatives after the bill goes back to them following its adoption in the Upper House.

FOX CONGRATULATED ON TAX FIGHT.

William Fox is in receipt of a bunch of telegrams from exhibitors all over the United States congratulating him on his efforts on behalf of the trade in its fight against the 10 per cent. tax rate which congress proposed to levy on picture theaters. Mr. Fox, personally and through his organization, sent many telegrams and letters to friends in Congress, among whom was Thomas F. Smith, leader of the New York delegation in Congress. There can be no question that his efforts in behalf of the exhibitor had weight in Washington and materially aided in winning the fight against the tax proposed.

Virginia Exhibitors Organize

Meeting Held at Richmond on May 25 and League Formed Under the Direction of National Organizer Herrington.

THE fulfillment of a long-cherished wish of the exhibitors of Virginia came to pass on Friday, May 25, in Richmond, where an enthusiastic and representative band of theater men gathered and with the assistance of National Organizer Herrington the first meeting of The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Virginia was held. Credit for the initiative in this matter is due Messrs. Jake Wells and Harry Bernstein of Richmond. The officers elected are as follows: President, Jake Wells, Richmond; vice president, E. D. Heins, Roanoke; secretary, Chesley Toney, Richmond; treasurer, C. E. Geoghegan, Chase City; Board of Directors, Messrs. M. M. Collins, Covington; J. F. Pryor, Danville; W. F. Crall, Newport News; J. H. Hart, Farmville, and J. Henkey Henry, Winchester.

Delegates were also named to represent the league at the National Convention in Chicago and the North Carolina convention.

Important resolutions were adopted, among them a protest to the Virginia senators against the impending war tax; the unfair treatment accorded by some exchanges; the deposit system and others.

Plans were laid for a movie ball to be held at Ocean View sometime in August, to which the prominent heads and stars of the industry would be invited.

On the whole there is a bright outlook for the maintenance of the league and a campaign to bring the other exhibitors into the fold is now in progress. Needless to say, that if enthusiasm and diligence will bring results, the success of the league is assured.

WISCONSIN DELEGATES TO CHICAGO.

At a meeting held in Milwaukee, Wis., recently, the Wisconsin Exhibitors' League elected the following delegates to the Chicago convention: J. Sherwood, J. Graumann, George Fischer, Henry Trinz, T. A. Lee, J. T. Rhode, T. Langenback, F. Fischer, Frank Cook, Frank Bremen and I. Langheinrich.

A resolution indorsing a plan for a general closing of picture theaters for a term of four weeks during the summer was adopted.

Maine Exhibitors Meet

Complete Organization at Bangor and Discuss Trade Outlook —To Meet at Augusta June 19.

THE Maine Exhibitors' League held its second meeting at the Penobscot Exchange, Bangor, Thursday afternoon, June 7, with twenty-four exhibitors present. Nine new names were added to the membership list, and permanent officers were elected as follows: Alfred S. Black, of the Maine Theatres Co., Rockland, president; James W. Greeley, of Portland, secretary; Fred M. Eugley, Westbrook, treasurer. It was voted to hold another meeting at the Augusta House, Augusta, on Tuesday, June 19, at which time it is expected that delegates will be chosen for the Chicago convention.

Though several attempts have been made to form exhibitors' associations in Maine before and have failed, the men who are in this league, which, by the way, is the first in Maine to be connected with the National Exhibitors' Association, are confident that they will make a go of it. There are about 140 exhibitors in the State of Maine, so the twenty-four pioneers of this organization are only a fraction, but they intend to keep right on coming until they have every moving picture man in Maine in their organization. At the first meeting fifteen were present; at the Bangor session twenty-four were present, and every man who came was enthusiastic over the league, and voted to constitute himself a committee of one to get new members. Each man present is going to try to get at least two more exhibitors to come to the Augusta meeting, and if success greets this effort the membership will jump to the 100 mark right away. This organization is going to be a permanent thing the exhibitors say with all seriousness, and they mean it.

Said the World man to Vice-President Greeley of the new association at the Bangor meeting: "When I was in New York this spring the Moving Picture World editor asked me point blank, 'Are the exhibitors of Maine making money?' and I was unable to give him an authoritative answer. Now I will ask you, as a well informed and representative Maine exhibitor, are the moving picture men of this state making any money to speak of?"

Mr. Greeley replied without an instant's hesitation. "No, they are not. The film producing companies are making the money in this business, and the theater men of Maine are pretty near on the status of salaried men running the theaters for the film companies, turning over the profits to the producers, but not having for themselves even the certainty of employment and financial return that the salaried man enjoys.

"Why does this condition exist in Maine? Because, I regret to say, the exhibitors bid against each other. In other states the exhibitors get together in their league meeting, consider a feature proposition or other service, and after coming to a decision, inform the producers' agent how much they will pay for that film. After they have reached a decision they do not change their minds, and no exhibitor pays more than that amount. In that way each exhibitor is enabled to make a fair profit. In Maine there is no protection, and the exhibitors have to pay whatever the producer asks; they are at his mercy. We have got to get together and stay together for our mutual protection. It's an old saying, but true, 'United we stand, divided we fall.' Never was it more true than at the present moment with the exhibitors of Maine.

"When a strong league is going in Maine on a permanent basis we will begin to make money here, and not until then." Motto: Let every Maine exhibitor join this organization. Be at the Augusta meting on June 19. Give us your co-operation. We are here to stay.

"Mr. Greeley," the World interviewer asked, "why didn't the other Maine exhibitors' associations endure, or rather, why were they failures?"

"They were not failures," replied the Portland theater man instantly. "When those organizations were formed the trade in this state was threatened with perils that promised to drive exhibitors out of business. The organizations defeated in each instance the evils that confronted the exhibitors. They did their work, and then they gradually lost influence. None of them were connected with the national organization. The very fact that we are willing to try a fourth time to organize an association shows that it must be worth something."

Among the subjects discussed at the meeting was the matter of taking features on percentages. One well-known feature is about to go through the state of Maine on a 60-40 percentage, the exhibitor to take the small end. The exhibitors declared that if they had an association they could obtain this feature on a 50-50 basis.

John Goodwin, the energetic and explosive Hallowell exhibitor, remarked at this juncture, "I've never taken a picture on percentage in my life, and I am never going to."

"Well what do you do when they put up a proposition on the 60-40 basis, you for the 40 and nowhere else to get the big feature?" asked another exhibitor.

"Why, I simply say to the film man, 'I'll sell you my house.' In a couple of weeks he is back with his feature. No percentage basis for me," he concluded.

Mr. Goodwin put forth a novel proposition which was immediately agreed upon by the members of the association. Maine is a big state. The exhibitors who attended the Portland meeting from northern Maine traveled over 600 miles, and the expense is great to them. On Mr. Goodwin's suggestion, it was voted that at the next meeting in Augusta the transportation bills of all members be pooled, and each member of the association shall pay an equal amount for the railroad fares. In other words, Mr. Goodwin, who would ordinarily pay only a five cent trolley car fare to ride from Hallowell to Augusta, or ride up for nothing in his Packard Twin Six, will help to pay the fare of John Hone, who has to pay you from $10 to $12 in riding 400 miles from Presque Isle to Augusta.

The new members added at the Bangor meeting are: W. B. Williamson, Augusta; O. B. Fernandez, Old Town; Fred Mason, Livermore Falls; William E. Reeves, Portland; A. J. Burns, Gardiner; J. J. Hone, Pasque Isle; William P. Sherbourne, Dover; Wilbur A. Shea, Eastport.

Others in attendances were W. E. Reeves, W. Blumenburg, Porland; L. A. MacCracken, Boston; William Green, Portland; E. B. McAllister, Rockland; S. Schultz, Boston; Arthur Allen, Charles M. Stern, Stephen Bogrett, Bangor; H. W. Stithan, Pittsfield; G. J. Corbett, Bangor; P. P. Peakes, Mile; A. L. Ehrgott, Boston; Leo Ferguson and John Hone, Presque Isle; Claude Fredericks, Boston; A, J, Grady, Boston; George Roberts, New York.

Gerson Protests at Ochs' Action

Secretary of Manhattan Local Charges National President With Attempting to Outlaw New York State Delegates.

Editor Moving Picture World:

As secretary of Manhattan Local No. 1 of the Exhibitors' League I desire to protest against the high-handed action of Lee A. Ochs at our meeting on Wednesday, June 6.

It seems that our worthy National President has absolutely no regard for such things as constitutions, by-laws, parliamentary laws, and regularity. It was generally acknowledged that the last State convention of the New York State League at Albany was the finest and the most largely attended convention ever held in this State.

At that time, in the regular order of business, and according to the constitution and by-laws of the National League, delegates were duly elected to represent this State at the convention to be held in Chicago next July. For some reason, known only to Mr. Ochs, the delegates legally elected in Albany did not seem to please that worthy gentleman, so he determined to have delegates more friendly to his candidacy elected here in New York. In spite of the fact that our national vice president, Samuel H. Trigger, protested that such action would be irregular and illegal, Mr. Ochs insisted on having these new delegates elected, stating that his credential committee, whom he would appoint at Chicago, would decide which delegates would be seated in the convention.

Since the inception of this local no election for officers or delegates has ever been held without due notice in writing being previously sent to each of the members; and in the notice sent out for this meeting of June 6, no mention whatever was made of the fact that an election of delegates was to be held, as no action of this kind had even been discussed or mentioned at any previous meeting, so that even had it been legal to elect delegates here, in spite of the fact that delegates had previously been elected in Albany at the State convention, an election in our local without due notice being given to the members in advance is certainly illegal and it cannot hold.

It was a sorry spectacle to see our national president, Mr. Ochs, who is an active candidate for re-election and last year was president of the State League, state publicly at our meeting that the New York State organization was a joke, and really did not exist, and that its officers were worse than useless.

He was probably tempted to make these disparaging remarks about our State organization and its officers with a view of justifying his action in attempting to throw out delegates who were duly and legally elected at the State convention in Albany.

Among the delegates elected at Albany was myself, and I had already made arrangements to attend the convention in Chicago, at my own expense, knowing that the state treasury did not have sufficient funds at this time to pay the expenses of all its delegates; and I still intend going to Chicago, and I further intend making a fight for my rights as a delegate to a seat in the national convention, in spite of the efforts of Mr. Ochs to keep me and the rest of the State delegates out.

It is time for the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America throughout the country to rise and protest against the steamroller tactics of Mr. Ochs in his desperate efforts to re-elect himself president of the League.

M. J. GERSON,
Secretary Manhattan Local No. 1, M. P. E. L. of A.

Seventh National Exposition and Convention Prospects Are the Best

Manager Schindler Greatly Enthused Over Success in Selling Floor Space in Coliseum and with Bright Outlook For Large Attendance of Stars.

LUDWIG SCHINDLER, manager of the National Exposition, sends word from New York to his Chicago office that his success in the metropolis during his present trip has been away beyond his expectations. He states that many of the manufacturers and feature film men who were undecided a few weeks ago because of the unexpected turn in national affairs have come to the conclusion that nothing should be allowed to dampen the enthusiasm taken in the success of the coming exposition, and they have eagerly taken up advantageous space in the Coliseum.

Leading manufacturers have assured Manager Schindler that not only will they be represented at the exposition, but that they will send at least one or more of their stars to assist in centering public attention on the exposition.

Furthermore, press representatives of nearly every office interested in moving pictures have promised to put their shoulders to the wheel and co-operate in every possible way with Manager Schindler. As the result, a great flood of publicity in the many dailies of the country will spread to every point through their efforts.

The exhibitors of New York have also aroused enthusiasm among the eastern contingent which will visit Chicago during exposition and convention week, and this large delegation is working hard to have the eastern cities well represented.

William J. Sweeney, the popular national secretary of the National League, has received information that Wisconsin is planning to send a party of at least 100 exhibitors to the convention. The time will be favorable, as most of the boys desire to take a week off, and they consider they cannot spend it to better advantage than by attending the big show in Chicago July 14-22.

Wisconsin will be represented at the convention by the following delegates: Mr. Sherwood, Madison; Messrs. Grauman, Fischer and Trinz, Milwaukee; T. A. Lee, Fond du Lac, and J. Rhode, Kenosha. Also by the following alternates: Mr. Fisher, Madison; Messrs. Langmack, Brinmer, Langheimerk and Cook, Milwaukee, and J. C. Smith, Oshkosh.

Exhibitors everywhere are reminded that the Seventh National Convention and Exposition will be a great get-together meeting, at which all branches of the industry will thrash out the evils that threaten it. They are also reminded that valuable ideas, which may be used to advantage in their home cities, will be gathered during the various conferences.

Manager Schindler's Chicago office declares that exhibitors throughout the United States are becoming much interested in the great July meeting, and many exhibitors have promised to attend even though they reside in states which are not organized under the National League. A letter received by Manager Schindler from J. B. Wilson, owner of the Photo Theaters in Sherman, Texas, writes that he, his wife and boy will attend the convention and exposition, and he asks for all information possible. Texas, he says, is not organized, but he is determined to come just the same.

Manager Schindler thanks Mr. Wilson for his promise, and wishes there were more like him in the Lone Star state. When Mr. Wilson arrives in Chicago he will be immediately appointed as a committee of one to go back to Texas and organize it for the league.

Before leaving Chicago last week, William S. Hart gave assurance that he will positively attend the Seventh Annual Motion Picture Convention in July. Owing to the energetic reception given him during his visit, one of his friends suggested that he had better come equipped with a coat of mail; but Mr. Hart smiled and replied that the greetings of his friends in Chicago were not a circumstance to some of his experiences before the camera.

During her visit last week Theda Bara visited the headquarters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in the Masonic Temple, and also pledged that she would come to Chicago and appear at the exposition. Manager Schindler assured her that her presence would mean an enormous attendance of women and girls every night that she is featured, in order to guard their husbands and sweethearts.

D. J. Sullivan, assistant general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, signed a big contract for space last week. While signing it, he said:

"I think we are going to have a great exposition and convention in July. The Mutual Film Corporation is going to do all in its power to make this the biggest success in the history of the industry, and when I make that statement I mean that we are going to have Charlie Chaplin present; also Helen Holmes, James McGowan, and the dainty little star, Mary Miles Minter, who is loved by all."

Others who signed for space last week are Tom Phillips, the "slide man" of Chicago; Marquette Piano Company, Chicago; Nicholas Power Company, Simplex Machine Company, Sunshine Film Corporation, Chicago; the Hump Hairpin Company, Chicago, and the Frohman Amusement Company.

Manhattan Exhibitors Hold Regular Meeting

Postpone Action on Music License Question Until Court Cases Are Decided.

SIXTY members of the New York Exhibitor's League Local No. 1 attended the regular monthly meeting Wednesday June 6. The music license which the American Music Authors, Composers and Publishers Society is trying to impose on motion picture theaters was discussed. William Dobney, representative of the society, stated the terms of the license and answered questions. Mr. Dobney stated that theaters of 300 seating capacity would have to pay a fee of $30, 600 capacity $45, and so on up to $300. These terms were final and the society would enforce them.

The league resolved to wait until the Haring and Hartzen cases had been settled before it decided as a body that it was obliged to pay the license. Some of the league members have already paid the license.

The league treasury subscribed $500 for Liberty bonds. It was also voted that all individual members of the league who wished to purchase Liberty bonds might subscribe through the league. President Trigger offered to take $1,000 worth if other members would combine to take a like amount. Over $1,200 was subscribed at once.

C. W. Meighan, president of the Portland (Oregon) Motion Picture League, was introduced by the National President. Mr. Meighan said the Oregon League, only eight weeks old, now has 89 per cent. of the exhibitors of the state enrolled and 98 per cent. of the exhibitors in Portland. The treasury of the league was in excellent shape and could boast of more money than the National organization. Since he left Portland, two weeks ago, the local had held a ball which three thousand persons attended, the largest assemblage that has ever gathered at any affair held in that city.

The following delegates and alternates were elected to the Chicago Convention: Delegates, Morris Needles, William Hilkermier, Charles Steiner, H. Haring, Sydney Asher and Syd Cohen; alternates, Ben. Title, S. Rhonheimer, O. Lederer, J. W. Brandon, J. Pearl and Jack Swartz.

Louisiana Working for Members

Will Hold Convention at New Orleans on July 4—Committees Appointed to Get Exhibitors Out.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Louisiana has made arrangements for a big drive formed about four months ago with twenty or thirty of the suburban exhibitors as members, but since that time nothing of any great consequence has been done toward enrolling other exhibitors of the city or state.

On July 4 a state convention of exhibitors will be held in New Orleans and a large attendance of up-state showmen is expected to be present. At this time the benefits of a healthy state organization will be pointed out to the visitors and it is hoped to form an effective state body. True to the New Orleans traditions, liberal provisions have been made for the entertainment of everybody present. There are to be banquets, smokers and automobile rides. Major Behrman will deliver the address of welcome and it is expected that Governor Pleasant will be present and give the visitors a talk as will other prominent politicians of the state. A motion picture of the principal events of the convention will be taken and each exhibitor will be furnished with a print to run in his theater

The committees appointed to look after the visitors and the convention are: Finance committee, E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement Company; M. Baer, Napoleon theater, and N. Sobel, Washington theater.

Entertainment, Mr. Tansey, Folly theater, Algiers; Ross Hardenbrook, Royal theater; Mr. Mars, Mars theater.

Publicity, B. F. Brennan, Iberville theater; M. H. Jacobs, Poplar theater, and R. J. Brunett, Harlequin theater.

Invitation, Nathan Ehrlich, Isis; J. Alsins, Famous theater, and Bertrand Kern, Happy Hour theater.

The F. I. L. M. club members will assist in the entertainment of the guests and subscriptions to the entertainment have been liberal.

Changes in Maryland League Officers

Secretary Goldberg Retires in Favor of L. A. De Hoff, Also Becomes Organizer as Well.

THERE has come about quite a change in the official list of the officers of the Maryland Exhibitor's League. The changes, which have taken place, were acted upon on Saturday, May 26, at a meeting which was held by the officers and directors of the league at their headquarters in the New Theater building. The action taken at the meeting follows:

Thomas D. Goldberg handed in his resignation as secretary of the league at this meeting. The resignation was accepted by the officers present.

Louis A. DeHoff handed in his resignation as first vice president. His resignation was accepted. Mr. DeHoff was then duly nominated and appointed as secretary and organizer of the league.

Louis Schlichter was then nominated for the position of first vice president and duly appointed to act in that capacity.

No reasons for the changes have yet been given out. From our personal knowledge, however, we wish to state that all three men affected, are very hard workers. It is also announced that Louis Schlichter and Julius Goodman have been appointed as a committee to investigate and locate a point of vantage in the central section of the city, where exhibitors from all sections can leave their film to be exchanged and distributed to one another. The tax to be imposed on league members will be 10 cents, while 25 cents will be charged to non-members who wish to take advantage of the arrangement. After all arrangements have been completed, the exchanges of this city will be notified.

ALBERTA MANAGERS ORGANIZE.

On May 16 the film exchange managers of Alberta, Canada, met at Calgary, Canada, and formed the Film Exchange Managers' Association of Alberta. These officers were elected: President, D. G. Walker; vice president, W. R. Marshall; secretary-treasurer, N. W. Davidson.

Jack Richardson Joins Triangle

JACK RICHARDSON, who makes his first appearance on the Triangle program in the heavy part opposite Louise Glaum in "Love or Justice," is one of the authentic veterans of the silent drama. It is more than six years since Richardson began work before the camera. Previous to that he had filled a minor role in "The Royal Chef," a musical comedy, and had played a variety of parts with various stock organizations.

Richardson is a native of New York City, but early in life moved with his parents to Cleveland. He was educated in the public schools of that city and at Culver Military Academy. Upon graduating from the latter institution, it was his parents' wish that he should enter the legal profession, but he had already become hopelessly enamored of the footlights.

Jack Richardson.

Figuring his connections with the Selig, Bison and American, Richardson has appeared in about 325 pictures. In nearly every play he has taken the heavy part, and has the reputation of having been killed in the films more frequently than any other villain in captivity. Not long ago he won a valuable diamond trophy in a contest held by one of the magazines to decide the screen's most popular heavy, polling more than 900,000 votes. The new Triangle bad man stands a fraction less than six feet in height and weighs 190 pounds. Off the screen he is the liveliest of companions and never frowns except on a straight salary basis.

Ivan Subject Heads Benefit Performance

"One Law for Both" Chosen for Feature of Russian Ambulance Entertainment.

IVAN ABRAMSON'S spectacular film drama of Russia and America, "One Law for Both," which is playing at the Lyric theater, New York City, was accorded a signal honor by the executive staff of the American Ambulance in Russia, last week, when it was selected from among all the attractions now playing on Broadway as the feature of their benefit performances during the past week. The events were of especial prominence and the entire metropolitan press devoted considerable space to the stories of the entertainment. Special added attractions were daily features at the performances—Mme. Frances Alda, of the Metropolitan Opera House; Mme. Marguerite Sylva, of the Opera Comique, in Paris; the male chorus of thirty voices, sailors from the Russian cruiser Variag, the Russian Balalaika Orchestra, the famous Kosloff's Imperial Russian ballet, and address by men of national prominence, were daily features at the Lyric theater, in addition to "One Law for Both." Tickets for the Friday and Saturday performances of the picture sold for five dollars each, and a substantial amount was realized by The American Ambulance in Russia for the furtherance of their work of mercy. The organization was formed to provide funds for the purchase and maintenance of three hundred ambulances and an adequate corps of doctors and nurses, to be utilized on the battle fields of Russia. A number of the most prominent names in America figure in the list of the officers of The American Ambulance in Russia.

The Roll of Honor

RICHARD TUCKER, formerly of the Edison studios stock company, whose work before the camera has always measured up to the 100 per cent. standard, has temporarily forsaken pictures and enlisted in the Marine Corps, where, at present and until he is assigned definitely he is engaged in the publicity department as lecturer. Mr. Tucker will visit a great many theaters during the next few weeks and lecture on life in the Marine Corps.

H. Clark Mooney, of Brooklyn, who has been prominently connected with the Triangle theater of that borough and also active in the affairs of the Associated Exhibitors of Brooklyn, has received a commission as lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps. Mr. Mooney, who is a former officer, will leave shortly for Fort Hancock to take up his duties.

PAULINE FREDERICK NEARLY ASPHYXIATED.

The most thrilling scenes which have been staged at the Famous Players-Lasky Fort Lee studios since their acquisition by that company were filmed last week under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, when the fire episodes in "The Love that Lives" were enacted before the camera.

Pauline Frederick, star of the production, is depicted as being burned to death in an office building, while her son, a young fireman, rescues his fiance from the same room. These scenes provided several thrills which were not originally intended by Scudder Middleton, the author of the story. As a result of the operations Pauline Frederick was nearly asphyxiated; Pat O'Malley, who plays the fireman, was severely burned about the hands and face, and Violet Palmer, who plays the fiance, fainted while being carried down the ladder by O'Malley.

Paramount Gives Details of Open Booking

Announces Full Scope of Plan Which Goes Into Effect August 5—Statement by Adolph Zukor.

THE full scope of the open-booking plan of the Paramount Pictures Corporation which will go into effect August 5, and which plan will bring about a co-ordination of the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, was announced this week. The plan marks a big step forward in bringing about the presentation of better productions by the most direct and extensive co-operation with exhibitors ever known.

The new scheme of open booking of Paramount pictures is not an arbitrarily established selling rule, but has come through the natural evolution of the industry, guided more or less during the past five years by one man, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, controlling Paramount Pictures Corporation, Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Cardinal Film Corporation, Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures. The change from the program system of booking Paramount pictures to that of open bookings is in response to the great national demand for this system of distribution, and for the consummation of this important action the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have been laying definite plans for many months.

All Paramount and Artcraft Pictures after August 5 will be booked in star series, exhibitors taking such series as they may desire to select, and the stars whom their patrons prefer. The popularity of stars fluctuates in different sections of the country, and by this new method it will be possible for the exhibitor to give his patrons all the stars they desire. Under this plan, through Paramount, Mme. Petrova will make eight pictures, Marguerite Clark eight, Pauline Frederick eight, Fannie Ward eight, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff eight, Sessue Hayakawa eight, Vivian Martin eight, George Beban three, Billie Burke three, Ann Pennington two, Julian Eltinge three, and Wallace Reid eight.

Other stars will be added to this list during the year to make series of pictures, as it may appear that their popularity and box office drawing capacity warrant their inclusion in the Paramount and Artcraft rosters.

Under the former Paramount plan of distribution a condition existed by which Artcraft and Paramount productions were competing with each other, in many of which the same stars appeared. For instance, the new and important Artcraft productions starring Mary Pickford met the national competition of the old Paramount-Pickford productions, thereby making it impossible for exhibitors to obtain the fullest possible returns on these subjects.

Under the new co-ordinated system the forthcoming Pickford productions will be booked without the opposition of this star's previous releases, the latter appearing only where they will not interfere with the fullest returns to the exhibitor who presents the newer subjects.

To this end exhibitors will be enabled to choose their list of pictures for the forthcoming year. The producing companies have already formulated their entire schedule for the year, beginning August 5, and for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry the exhibitor may choose his entire program a whole year in advance, obtaining the opportunity of planning his exploitation further in advance than he was before enabled to do. Enthusiasm is evidenced on all sides from exhibitors over the new plan, who declare that at last there has been a plan devised that is built on fairness, equity and co-operation.

Commenting upon the great national response to the advantage contained in his new plan of distribution, Adolph Zukor said:

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is in a very fortunate position in outlining its future plans for improved production and distribution of photoplays, because it feels that the trade will believe its past endeavors in these directions to indicate the future progress we are determined to make. When we promise, therefore, to increase the cost of our productions and to make this increased cost buy its full measure of merit and artistic advancement in our productions, the promise is backed by five years of effort to present, consistently, the most meritorious photoplays in the world.

"We have the experience and the years of development behind us, besides the necessary organizations that come only of long duration in the business, to enable us to make any promise with the fullest assurance that it will be fulfilled.

"We have the stars, the directors, the scenario writers, the studio forces and equipment, and all the mechanical and personal resources necessary to the completion of the greatest series of motion pictures yet presented.

"We have already secured some of the greatest literary and dramatic masterpieces of the day as vehicles for our stars. We are constantly obtaining the exclusive original works of the greatest authors and fictionists throughout the world. Our own force of trained scenario writers is constantly adding the most talented and capable originators of screen creations.

"In our studios at Los Angeles, Hollywood, New York and New Jersey the combined ideas of what I am pleased to call the largest organization for the production of motion pictures are being molded for transference to the screen and presentation to the public."

"Not because it is the desire of myself and my associates, but because I know that all these factors which I have enumerated cannot result in anything but complete success, I hereby promise that the future releases of Paramount and Artcraft will revolutionize all past standards of motion picture production."

Artcraft Announces Plans for Coming Year.

The plans of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation for the forthcoming year in acccord with the new Paramount-Artcraft co-ordinate booking policy, was officially announced last week at the headquarters of the big distributing organization. Thirty-six productions are already scheduled for release under this trade-mark for the coming year and plans are now under way for the presentation of additional attractions that are in keeping with the present high standard of Artcraft pictures. The star series selective booking policy inaugurated by Artcraft at its inception and which has met with popular approval will be continued. In the exploitation of its productions Artcraft will co-operate with the exhibitor in every way possible.

D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson, Geraldine Farrar, Cecil B. De Mille and George M. Cohan are the celebrities among others to be announced in the near future that will present their best efforts under the Artcraft trade-mark the coming year.

Mary Pickford, the first super-star to appear under the Artcraft trade-mark, will present eight productions on the new schedule. Seven photoplays will be released by Douglas Fairbanks, conceded to be the greatest male attraction in the film world. At the head of his own organization he promises pictures that will duplicate the record-breaking business displayed with "In Again—Out Again," his initial Artcraft subject. Mr. De Mille has already commenced plans for the initial Farrar-Artcraft picture which he will stage and upon which Miss Farrar will commence actual work shortly. In addition to this, Mr. De Mille will contribute four productions to Artcraft's schedule.

George M. Cohan will begin work on his second picture in the near future. The famous "Yankee Doodle Boy" will appear in two Artcraft pictures during the coming year.

The inauguration of the Paramount-Artcraft co-ordinate booking policy, on August 1, will also mark the first anniversary of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

K-E-S-E ANNOUNCE A CHANGE IN RELEASE.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce a change in its release schedule July 9. On this date Edison's five-reel feature with Shirley Mason in the leading role, "Light in Darkness," will be substituted for "Little Orphan Annie," the Selig release. The release date for the latter picture has not been announced.

"Light in Darkness" has an especially strong cast, Shirley Mason being ably supported by Frank Morgan, William Tooker, J. Frank Glendon, George Tremble, Bigelow Cooper and William Wadsworth.

Ira Aronson

FROM a losing proposition to one of success is the space bridged in the life of the Cameraphone theater, Pittsburgh, by strict adherence to the policy of cleanliness in all things on the part of Ira Aronson, general manager. When Mr. Aronson took charge of the theater three years ago it was losing money. Today it is one of the bright spots on Fifth avenue. Mr. Aronson deserted the real estate field to become an exhibitor. He applied business principles and won out.

Ira Aronson.

The first thing he did to the Cameraphone was to clean it out and make it a place pleasing to the eye and conducive to comfort. He installed a ventilating system and gave his patrons good music. He studied conditions in the neighborhood and, as he puts it, "plays only clean and wholesome productions—those which mothers and fathers would not blush at if they brought their children with them." Mr. Aronson found that clean pictures pay by a close study of his patrons. Before he became manager the house had been playing almost anything, but now Mr. Aronson passes personally on every production before it is allowed to be shown on the Cameraphone's screen.

Mr. Aronson sums up his success and gives the reasons for it as follows: (a) clean theater, (b) good air, (c) good projection, (d) appropriate music, (e) clean pictures, (f) bright front, (g) study of patrons.

NEW MUTUAL PLAYER.

Kathleen Kirkham, but recently added to the American players, will first appear in support of William Russell in "The Weakness of the Strong," which will be released through Mutual some time in July. Miss Kirkham has an important role in the production. She appears as an adventurous married woman who loves to play with fire and is not content unless she is carrying on a flirtation with some young admirer.

This will not be Miss Kirkham's first appearance with Mutual. She will be remembered as Marion Dane in "The Devil's Assistant," in which Margarita Fischer was starred. Miss Kirkham made her screen debut with the Reliance company and since that time has been seen in Balboa, Morosco, Clune, Pollard, Fine Arts and Universal productions.

Steele Shifts Berth in Paramount

Resigns Secretary-Treasurership to Become District Manager With Offices in Pittsburgh.

JAMES STEELE, secretary and treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation for the past year, has resigned that position in order that he may continue his residence in Pittsburgh. He will hereafter be located in the Iron City, acting in the capacity of district manager over the Paramount offices in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland and Indianapolis. Mr. Steele will also retain his directorship on the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, controlling Paramount, Artcraft, Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas, producers and distributors of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

When Mr. Steele accepted the position as secretary-treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation a year ago it was with the full understanding that it would only be temporary, as his family remained in Pittsburgh, and the ties binding him to that city were too strong to be severed entirely. When Paramount absorbed its exchanges some months past, Mr. Steele endeavored to retire from the position he held in the home office, but the time was not propitious and he deferred taking the step until last week, when the final arangements were made for the merging of the Artcraft and Paramount business, which move made it possible for him to resign and take up his work in the Middle West.

Schayer Retires from Selznick Staff

Publicity Man to Take Belated Honeymoon and Resume Fiction Work in Maine Woods.

E. RICHARD SCHAYER, who has been director of publicity for Lewis J. Selznick since the organization of the Selznick Enterprises, has resigned, and will be succeeded by Randolph Bartlett. Mr. Schayer, who, prior to entering the film business a year and a half ago, had achieved a wide reputation as a newspaper man, war correspondent and magazine writer, intends to spend the entire summer in the Maine woods, where he expects to complete a number of stories for which he has been accumulating data during recent months. This vacation is in the nature of a belated honeymoon, as it will be remembered that Mr. Schayer married last summer, during the height of the activities of Mr. Selznick's first productions, and was unable to leave New York for a wedding trip. During the year that Mr. Schayer presided over the publicity and advertising of the Selznick operations he achieved an enviable reputation.

Mr. Bartlett, who succeeds Mr. Schayer, entered the film world nearly a year ago as press representative for Herbert Brenon. Following his publicity campaign for "War Brides," he joined the Selznick central organization, and for several months has been collaborating with Mr. Schayer in the publicity department. He is well known for his magazine articles on various personalities and phases of the picture business.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 10 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"On Trial" at the Rialto.

"On Trial," Elmer L. Reisenstein's notably successful play, was given its first presentation in photoplay form at the Rialto the week of June 10. The production was made by the Essanay Company with a cast which includes Barbara Castleton, Sidney Ainsworth, James Young and Little Mary McAlister. The film has the distinction of being the first one purchased by the recently organized First National Exhibitors' Circuit. "On Trial" makes a particularly powerful picture because of the photoplay methods used in developing the original stage version.

Glimpses of the ever fascinating geishas of Japan formed part of "The Land of the Rising Sun," the added attraction. Beautiful effects of architecture and illumination were found in the second installment of "The Thirteenth Labor of Hercules," the official pictures of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Greek Evans and Gaston Dubois were the soloists.

"Her Strange Wedding" at the Strand.

The Strand Theater presented Fannie Ward in "Her Strange Wedding," adapted by Charles Maigne from George Middleton's popular story. The supporting cast included Jack Dean, Tom Fornan and Billy Elmer. Another interesting film feature was "Gold that Glitters," one of O. Henry's most famous stories, in which Mildred Manning appeared in the leading role. Victor Moore was seen in his latest comedy. There were also scenic and educational studies and the latest American and European news pictures. Louise Patterson, Mary Qentay and Walter Vaughn were the soloists.

"The Bar Sinister" at the Broadway.

The Edgar Lewis production, "The Bar Sinister," is in its third week at the Broadway.

Bill at the Eighty-first Street Theater.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater a new series of pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dorothy Dalton in "Wild Winship's Widow" and Billie Leslie in a Triangle comedy, "His Marriage Failure," were the picture features. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Charles Ray in "The Millionaire Vagrant" and the Keystone funmakers in "A Royal Rogue" were on the program.

Walter Richard Stahl

WALTER RICHARD STAHL, aside from being one of the youngest author-directors in the motion picture art, is also an assidious bookworm. He can be located at almost any hour of the night in his apartments digging into some frayed volume on art, science, sociology and many kindred subjects of which he had to inform himself in the production of "Hate," a seven-reel feature soon to be released by the Fairmount Film Corporation.

Mr. Stahl is a stickler for facts in portraying the simplest detail in the silent drama, and before he began work on "Hate," and long after he was in the story, he made certain that his interpretation of his subjects were correct before he gave the cameraman the order to shoot.

Walter Richard Stahl.

"There are three things a director must keep foremost in his mind in the making of a photo-drama," Mr. Stahl explained. "His first idea must be toward the selection of a story which will interest the masses. My idea of an ideal story is one which involves a big vital problem; something which confronts the people of the world. And I don't mean to infer that we should burden the theater-going public with such problems as war. Rather, I mean that authors should seek out some problem that has a heart appeal.

"The second idea should be in making it certain that the story conveys an accurate interpretation to the public. Directors and writers should not attempt to fool their audiences, nor to burden them with fantastic or immaterial subjects. People go to the picture theaters to be informed as well as to be entertained, and after they have seen a picture with a gripping problem, and are enlightened as to its most intricate phases they will reflect, and it is safe to assume that they will soon look to the motion picture drama for knowledge as well as pastime.

"I have found it true that the most powerful photodramas are those with the simplest appeal; those pictures which can be grasped by those who have but a very limited knowledge of worldly information. I believe that there is a decided tendency among producers of today to aim to these ideals. Some of the recent releases indicate, at least, that producers are striving for the best there is in fiction for the benefit of the screen."

RED MEN INVADE WHARTON RESERVATION.

Fifty Indians from the Onondaga reservation have arrived in Ithaca, N. Y., to take their places before the camera and their place in the films. But they came without their war paint and their feathers, for they are to do something beside just "act natural." The Indians are to appear as the inhabitants of a cannibal village, which is a part of one of the comedies which the Whartons now are producing. They are under the command and guidance of Chief Isaacs.

Richardson Crosses Line Into Canada

Discovers a Large Amount of Genuine "Southern Hospitality" in Western Canadian Country

Bellingham, Washington.

THE Bellingham Union was another organization which, through fault of the secretary, I am told, had failed to reply to letters, and being extremely weary and near to a breakdown I decided to remodel my itinerary to the extent of placing that city in the discard and going straight through to Vancouver from Everett, thus garnering unto myself one perfectly good night of rest. But alas, for the best laid plans of mice and men, which 'tis truly said, gang aft aglee. We clambered off the train at Bellingham at least for the moment to set foot on the soil where four years ago we had that wonderful fish dinner, which all the delegates to the I. A. T. S. E. Convention will remember.

No sooner had our feet hit the platform than a pipe of tremendous size approached, from behind which came a voice: "Is this Mr. Richardson?" We pleaded guilty, whereupon the aforesaid pipe was removed, disclosing a smile belonging to Brother F. W. Dorr, president of Local Union 117, seconded by Brother Robert Miller, E. H. Southern, secretary 117, and Brother G. E. Keplinger. "Where's your baggage?" inquired Dorr. "Why," said I, "I am not going to stop. I've not had a word from you boys in reply to my letters." When Dorr recovered from his faint he informed me that the Union had a banquet arranged for 11 o'clock, and that all the managers were invited, and both his hands went up in the air, registering wild despair. I had my ticket paid for to Vancouver; also my parlor car ticket, but under the circumstances it was, of course, up to me. And thus I was picked off the train like a ripe cherry from the bough.

The boys treated me finely. Local 117 is a mixed union, and President Dorr is a stage hand, but he took just as much interest in the matter as though he were an operator. There was really a nice spread at Bellingham's swellerino restaurant, and gathered thereat was a 100 per cent. attendance of operators and managers, as well as several stage men.

Conditions as to Bellingham operating rooms are just average. There is much that might well be improved. I visited the Grand Liberty, Bell and American. The Grand auditorium lighting is bad; operating room fair, but flooded with daylight at matinees; lens system not right. The Liberty has a good operating room, but light-flooded; picture light brilliant. The Bell has but one machine, which seems queer at this stage of the game, in a city the size of Bellingham. The American, a large high-class theater, has its operating room on the main floor, opposite the screen; also it is a real operating room. L. Rose is manager and C. C. Keplinger operator. The walls of the operating room are dead black, the ventilation fair, the size ample, the mercury arc rectifier in an adjoining room, the lens system O.K. and the shutter at the dissolving point of the light ray. The floor is covered with linoleum. The machines and room were clean as a new pin.

The men expressed themselves as well pleased with the lecture, and the last word, as the train pulled out, was "come again."

Vancouver, British Columbia.

A most interesting city of the Northwest, surrounded by forests of giant timber, with great, snow-capped mountains in the distance, Vancouver lies beside one of the finest land-locked harbors in the world. In normal times it is a city of 175,000, but war has reduced this to probably 105,000.

When the train pulled in a man approached with the inquiry: "Is this Mr. Richardson?" "It is," I replied, and we shook hands all around, while my grips were grabbed. At the head of the train was a circus advertising car, and I towed the delegation up to it to introduce the committee to the I. A. boys therein, and find out for them when the lecture was to be, as their number included some operators who wished to hear it. I had but started introductions when a man with an I. A. button stepped up, stuck out a friendly hand and said: "Is this Mr. Richardson?" introducing himself as J. R. Foster, president M. P. M. O. Local Union 348. About then one of my new found friends asked: "Say, what Mr. Richardson are you?" Just then a man who had been in the parlor car with me came lonesomely forward and a howl of laughter went up. He was Professor Richardson, of some University in Seattle, who also was to deliver a lecture in Vancouver that night. I had unwittingly swiped the poor man's reception bodily.

Having turned his committee over to him, and rescued my grips from their kindly care, I grabbed my own reception committee (J. R. Foster, president; Al Hansen, secretary-treasurer, and Edward Hornby, member M. P. M. O. Union 348, and J. R. Muir, owner of several theaters and a film exchange), which hustled me into an automobile. The professor, his dignity sadly ruffled, also climbed into a machine. My name was next to his on the hotel register; his initials being O. H.

Vancouver proved to be a surprise in many ways. Far off in an out-of-the-way corner of the continent, it is a thoroughly modern, right-up-to-the-minute city. It has a skyline of modern skyscrapers, and a hotel which would not need to feel shamed to sit beside the Plaza at Central Park, New York City. Its stores are as modern as those of Gotham, and its theaters, or such of them as I saw, are very good, and some of them more than that.

My reception was cordial indeed, and the meeting and banquet at the Hotel Vancouver were in many respects among the best I have held on the entire trip. The audience was distinctly high class, and intensely interested. It comprised operators, theater managers, film exchange managers and Province of British Columbia officials, including the censor and examining board. The affair was given by M. P. M. O. Local Union 348. What would you think about New York operators giving a banquet in the Waldorf-Astoria or the Plaza? Well, the Hotel Vancouver is the equal of either of them—some class, my boy—some considerable class.

The operating rooms of Vancouver are mostly of good size, one being fully 25 feet square, ventilation is, however, none the best. The walls are mostly dark colored. The projectors are nearly all Powers', with a few Simplex and one Baird. Supply is 110 and 220 volt A.C., rectified by motor generators or mercury arc rectifiers. Most of the motor generators are General Electric compound-wound machines driven by three-phase motors. The generator capacity is mostly 35 amperes in the smaller houses, and 60 to 120 in the larger ones. Operating rooms are, for the most part, opposite or nearly opposite the screen. The union scale is $20 a week for a six hour day, and no split shift. Much of the projection machinery is old—averaging, I am told, about five years.

In the Dominion theater I saw a truly remarkable lighting system. It consisted of an ornamental art glass square in the ceiling, about 25 feet square, above which were lights. The design was an immense circle, filling the entire square, with ornamental designs in the corners. The circle was laid out like a giant wagon wheel, the lead division being the spokes and the glass the open spaces. It was beautiful. The prevailing shade was amber, with ornamental corner-filling designs of green and red.

This glass circle is at the top of an insert in the main ceiling, about six feet deep, the sides of which are solid plate glass mirrors, which convey the effect of a glass ceiling extending back under or over the auditorium ceiling. It fooled me all right—makes the glass circle appear to be one circle (the real one) and four halves (reflections). Off to the side, under the main ceilings, are four chandeliers on each side, with two green and two purple lights in each, the same being surrounded by cut glass pendants. These lamps give off no illumination. They are but mere points of light in the darkness. The effect is odd, and very pretty. J. R. Foster is chief operator and S. Haigh assistant. There is a very clever electric port shutter dropping device, which Brother Foster has agreed to describe in the projection department.

During the afternoon the committee autoed me through the wonderfully natural park of 1,000 acres, owned by the city, in which trees six to eight feet in diameter are common, and those fifteen feet through not unknown—I saw at least one. In front of the Courthouse in Vancouver is a flag pole 285 feet high, made from a single stick, or tree, and at that they had to cut off about 35 feet before they could hoist it.

At the Globe theater I saw a really clever stunt, the invention of Brother J. O. Thomas, operator. It will be described in the department later. When friend Thomas opens has lamphouse door that act automatically drops an asbestos shutter in front of the condenser inside the lamphouse.

I had heard considerable concerning the examination of operators in British Columbia, and it was with much pleasure I accepted the invitation of the board of examiners to inspect their plant. The board is composed of Messrs. C. L. Gordon, chairman Board of Censors, who is also chairman of the examining board; W. A. Oswald, theater inspector for British Columbia, and J. R. Foster, chief operator Dominion theater, Vancouver.

The examination equipment is valued at $4,000. There is a special testing board, with many switches, all alike on its front, with interchangeable connections at the rear. There are 440, 220 and 110 volts on this board. At the top is a bank of incandescents, and at one side a bank of rheostats. Mr. Applicant is presented with test lamps and that outfit, and his troubles begin. Take it from me, if he gets past what they hand him in that room he will not only be competent, but he will be busier than a chipmunk with a whole bushel of nuts. There is a blackboard on which questions are written. Here are three which remained on the board from the dose presented the last candidate:

"How would you connect (2) two 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostats as a 220 volt D.C. line, and what amperage would you get?"

"Given 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostats and three 110 volt 50 ampere rheostats, how would you connect them to get approximately 90 amperes; supply 220 volts? Connect four 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostats, so as to get about 60 amperes on a 110 volt D.C. line?"

There is a big motor generator set, and accompanying switchboard. The candidate must first ascertain whether or not the same is in shape to run, select his fuses from a large box of mixed fuses, put them in and connect the machine up to the arc lamp, strike the arc and get everything running properly. There is a dissembled objective lens on a table; also condensers of various focal length. You must assemble the objective, figure out proper condenser combination for a given case, explain dissolving point of light ray and its position and effect, explain relation of intermittent speed to shutter blade width, and—well, if you get by you can bank on it that you nearly know something.

The examination is a comparatively new thing. When it went into effect but few got by. When a man failed he was given a three months' working permit, and informed that unless at the end of that time he was able to pass he could work no longer. Result: Operators forming educational classes and buying books, the purchase of which they had before declared to be a waste of good money. Since this awakening I am informed that projection in Vancouver has been decidely improved.

The board attended the lecture and were unanimous in declaring it to be of large value. They are courteous men whom it was a pleasure to meet. I shall in future have great respect for a British Columbia license. Joe Estey, Local 306, New York City, was in the city with "Intolerance." He says he is going to buy a gold frame for that particular license.

Victoria, British Columbia.

Victoria lies on Vancouver Island. It is reached by a delightful 80-mile sail through the sound, with headlands jutting out and islands nestling in the most unexpected places. During a portion of the voyage hundreds of snow-white but prettily marked seagulls follow and circle the boat, often sailing along opposite to and within fifteen feet of the upper-deck passenger for considerable distances.

Victoria itself is another wonderful northland city. Beautiful it is in a quiet way. But it is too quiet. It is like a deserted city. The terrible war has drained its very lifeblood, until its streets are like empty canyons in which one can but instinctively listen for the tread of ghostly feet of those departed.

At the wharf we were greeted by Brother R. A. Jones, business agent Local Union 168, and Eugene Clark, manager Columbia theater—fine fellows both, but as common clay compared to the chauffeur, Mrs. M. F. Macdonald.

Conditions in Victoria stack up about as follows: The operating rooms are of fair size, but have light walls, and, for the most part, too much light in the rooms. In the Columbia and Empress operating rooms ventilation is not good; in the others it is fair so far as fresh air goes, but it is not properly done. The current is 220 volts three-phase, which is rectified by Westinghouse and General Electric motor generator sets. The average picture size is 16 feet, and most of the houses use about 45 amperes at the arc.

I visited four theaters. The picture light varied from good to just fair, and in some of them it was not very well handled. In all cases, except one, the Variety, the auditorium lighting was bad, and in the Columbia it was very bad indeed. It was here I learned to recognize an "Irish exit." At left of screen was friend clock, brightly lighted with green light. Below it was a glaring red light about ten by eighteen inches, upon which by close peering one could trace the letters "Exit." Both the piano and the violin music reflected back into the eyes of the audience a blare of white light. There were six of the unnecessary side lights, and at the rear, on the ceiling of the balcony, were three very bright lights, under diffusing glass, but so placed that the eyes of those seated back of that point must peer under them at the picture. And to cap it all there was, to the right of and close to the screen, an unshaded bright green light, which the manager explained (when I referred to it in my lecture) was an exit—whereupon one of the audience remarked, to the accompanying laughter: "It must be an exit for the Irish."

The lecture was preceded by a banquet in the Dominion Hotel grill room, and I talked until 2 a. m. The managers of Victoria are paying $25 for eight hours, six day week—the union scale. Victoria operators impressed me as a body of enterprising men, working under rather difficult conditions. But the managers, too, are working under present great difficulty, and are likely to for some time to come. Depression in business of all kinds, both in Vancouver and Victoria, but particularly the latter, due to war conditions, is something pretty serious indeed.

Before boat time next day, in company with Brothers W. F. Macdonald, R. H. Jones, M. D. Macdonald and Mrs. Macdonald and R. Foxgard, I was motored out twelve miles to the Dominion observatory, where through courtesy of the attendant, we examined and had explained the workings of what is now the largest telescope in the world—a 72-inch lens. The road winds up the side of the mountains, at sharp grade, and in places a few feet to right or left would mean serious disaster.

Leaving Victoria I sailed back to Vancouver, was met by a delegation of "the boys" who kept me company during a two-hour layover, and then I climbed into a Canadian sleeper and settled down in the hay for a night of untroubled sleep, to be followed by a day through some of the most magnificent scenery on the American Continent.

Edmonton, Alberta.

Edmonton lies between 350 and 400 miles north of the United States boundary line. In normal times—times when humanity is not engaged in playing the game of war—its population is 70,000, and it claims to be the farthest-north city of size in the world. Lonely and alone it lies far out on the interminable black-as-ink-soil prairie of the northland. But it is strictly modern, and has many miles of well paved streets. Its leading hotel, owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, is easily the equal of many New York high class hostelries.

To reach Edmonton from Vancouver, one may travel by way of Canadian Northern, direct, which only runs a passenger train every third day, or over the Canadian Pacific to Calgary and thence north 199 miles to destination. The C. N. trains would not fit into my schedule, so I chose the Calgary route, and the last part from Vancouver to Calgary was far ahead of anything I had ever viewed in the way of mountain scenery. The different views of Mount Stephen alone are the sight of a lifetime.

From Calgary to Edmonton one sees some genuine surprises. A portion of the country might easily be mistaken for New York or Massachusetts. There is timber, rolling through low hills, and prosperous looking farmhouses. At other places the land lies very flat and looks unpromising; also for long stretches the settlement is sparse and the country new and raw.

In Edmonton, men treated me well. They are few in number (five theaters running), yet they did things up brown, ending with a banquet in the banquet room of that splendid hotel, the MacDonald. During the afternoon John Hazza, manager of the Empress theater; W. B. Allen, president Local Union 310, and Brother A. M. Malley motored us around the city, and in the evening we gave the Empress, Monarch, Dreamland and Rex theaters the once over.

Edmonton operating rooms are of good size, with one exception, and that is not objectionably small. In the Monarch and Empress operating rooms there are wash basins with running water. There is glass in all the ports. Projectors vary from Powers' Six B in the Empress to Edison Model B's in the Dreamland. Current is rectified by motor generator sets—take note of the facts, you United States managers who are using A.C. at the arc. 'Way up here, half way to the north pole, such out of date practice is not even considered. Motor generator sets—good ones, too—are in all theaters.

Auditorium lighting varies from bad to fair. It needs attention in all the houses, and it needs it badly.

The Edmonton men are a progressive body. They literally demanded that I visit their city, offering to defray all the expense if only I would come. After the lecture there was a general expression of satisfaction on the part of both managers and operators. The gathering was necessarily a small one, but what it lacked in size it more than made up in enthusiasm. The following were at the lecture and banquet, which lasted until 3.30 a. m.:

Operators—William Hayden, P. Barber, W. B. Allen, E. J. Grace, A. M. Malley, W. H. Miles, F. Packenbusch, A. J. Hosmer, J. Haley, T. Joy and M. M. McLean.

Managers—O. J. Halgrimson, John Hazza, M. Allen, A. Entwhistle, R. McDonald and F. McQueen.

Calgary, Alberta.

I know where to begin, but how is another question. I have had many experiences of many kinds along the first ten or eleven thousand miles of this trip, but it has remained for Calgary to pull the star number, and put itself in a class all by its lonesome.

Ugh! Heap Big Chief! Chief Manhattan! Chief Pulled-off the Train—Take your choice, and I am it Some distance up the line Brother Joseph L. Aaron, secretary of Local Union 302, got aboard, introduced himself and then shut up like a clam, particularly when I endeavored to ascertain what was going to be the programe in Calgary. On that subject an oyster was a loud noise compared to the good brother.

Peacefully the train rolled onward until at what I afterward learned to be the city limits of Calgary, it came to a grinding stop and passengers, including the writer, began to grab their valuables and peer out of the window in apprehension, because from without came fusilades of revolver shots and the most weird assortment of unhumanlike yells human ears ever listened to.

"Here's where we get off!" yelled Brother Aaron. I looked around to see him, together with my baggage, disappearing through the door. As I hit the ground a cavalcade of men, whom I afterward learned were real, sure enough, honest-to-gosh cowboys, galloped up, firing shots in the air promiscuously, and the loop of a rope lariat settled down over my defenseless shoulders, to the accompaniment of yells: "String him up—hang him!" Mistakes have been made before, and, forgetting for the moment my guardian, Brother Aaron, things were beginning to look real reasonably serious to your Uncle William. But at this critical moment a man I afterward learned to be D. G. Inverarity, manager of Calgary Pantages' theater, stepped up, placed over our shoulders an elaborate dingus made of approximately 680,460 beads, in various colors, and on our head the most fearsome, elaborate feather war bonnet imaginable, and in our hand a stone-headed, fur-trimmed war club, all genuine articles, I am told, secured from an Indian chief (there is an Indian reservation here).

Friend Inverarity then addressed us, first in Chinook, then in English, as follows: "We greet you, Big Chief Manhattan, and, here at the limits of our fair city, bid you welcome."

Banquet Given by the Calgary Exhibitors, Exchangemen and Operators.

There was much more of it, but I don't remember all the details. Things were coming too swift to be well remembered. Grouped in the distance I then observed five or six automobiles, covered with banners and plastered with mud. On the leading car was the following: "Chief Richardson, captured from the Wilds of Manhattan by Calgary Exhibitors, Exchangemen and Local Union No. 302, I. A. T. S. E. Now on exhibition." That aggregation had actually motored out ten miles, over roads that were, due to a week of continuous rain, simply all but impassable. Moreover, they had done it in the face of what looked very much like more, and immediate, rain. Another one of the banners read: "Welcome to our City, Hammer and All."

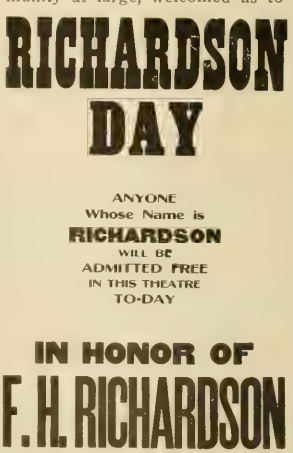
Well, we plowed (literally plowed) back to town over those awful roads. How they got away with it I don't know, but they did, though the engine got so hot we had to change the water in the radiator along the way. A procession was formed and I was paraded through the city in that perfectly fierce regalia, to the Mayor's office, where I was introduced to his worship (that is the official designation up here), and by him welcomed and presented with a key something like three feet in length, yellow in color, which he averred was made of solid gold, and which was supposed to fit all locks in the city. Some reception, quite some, I assure you. And at the end of the proceedings I was told that the Indian regalia was all my very own. I am glad of that, because in future when my squaw doesn't behave, I'll put on my headdress, grab my war club and scare her out of at least seven years' growth. At the Palliser Hotel I wasn't even allowed to register, that little function having been already performed, but was conducted to what appeared to be the bridal chamber.

I had got to bed a little before 4 a. m. the previous night, and, learning there were men who had come almost 400 miles to listen to projection lore, much as I disliked to, I was obliged to shoo the various committees out of the room, lock the door and sleep, else I could not do justice to that which I had come to the city to do. Previous to this, however, I had the pleasure of dining with Joseph Aaron, secretary Local Union 302; J. A. Brin, operator of Pantages' theater; N. V. Davidson, manager of Pathe Exchange, and A. Cloackey, representing the manager of Allen theater. Also I almost forgot to say that in front of every theater in the city appeared a neatly framed one-sheet printed poster reading: "Richardson Day. Any one named Richardson will be admitted free in honor of F. H. Richardson." It is said that in some mysterious manner, the tribe of Richardson suddenly increased marvelously, and past all understanding.

At midnight I was escorted to the beautiful grill room of the Hotel Palliser, where the Big Doings were to be, and were pulled off—yes, most decidedly they were pulled off. At the right of the writer sat Mayor Costello and on his left Toastmaster Inverarity. And here let me say Friend Inverarity is charged with fifteen thousand volts, produced by a generator wound in sections. One coil puts forth hustle, the next ability, and the third good fellowship. And they are all three good, vigorous coils, too.

The gathering was large, thoroughly representative and decidedly enthusiastic. The mayor lived up to what I found to be his reputation as a thoroughly good fellow.

Toastmaster Inverarity first called upon Mayor Costello, who in an address showing a surprising grasp of the work we are trying to do and a comprehensive understanding of the importance of the moving picture industry to the community at large, welcomed us to the city. D. G. Walkley, general manager of Universal for Western Canada, was then introduced and spoke upon the topic, "What Richardson Means to the Exchanges." Harry J. Allen, manager Famous Players Film Service, was to have spoken on feature films, but much to his disgust (he came to the station to see me off in Edmonton and was much perturbed over the fact that he could not be present) had been compelled to go to Edmonton on business. J. B. Cronck, manager Allen theater, voiced the exhibitors' viewpoint, and C. Anderson, president Local 302, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., spoke briefly on the topic: "The Operator's Version."



The banquet was the real goods. It was handled personally by E. H. Goodwin, manager of the Palliser Hotel. The menu contained, among other things, the following: "Relishes, Projected Shots a la Richardson; Fish, Shutter Flickers with spherical aberration; Roasts, Assorted Cold Meats, Short Circuit Style; Salad, Carbon Dust sprinkled with 3 in 1; Dessert, Rheostat Ice Cream; Cheese, Old Features; Nuts, Pickfords, Bushmans or Chaplins." At the back of the menu was printed a local poetical effort in the shape of a song, "The Operator's Hymn" designed to be sung to the tune "Throw Out the Lifeline," and that mob, led by Vocalist J. R. Hall and the orchestra, actually sang or howled that cussed thing at the top of their voices, while we sat there covered with our usual raiment, plus six layers of blushes.

There was really splendid music by an orchestra supplied for the occasion by Calgary's Musician's Union, Local 53 A. F. of M. Vocalist J. R. Hall sang several selections, among them a really beautiful song, "I'll Be Waiting There for You," composed by William Farrington, manager of Didsburg opera house, Didsburg, Alberta. There were large banners at either end of the table. The lecture lasted until 4 a. m., and even the Mayor remained to its end. Afterward he was kind enough to say that he had been deeply interested, and had thoroughly enjoyed every moment of it. One man who came more than 200 miles, came up after the lecture, shook hands and said: "I feel that all my trouble and expense in coming to Calgary has been more than justified by what I have heard." President C. Anderson of Local 302, said: "Well, Brother Richardson, I am free to say that I haven't nearly as large an opinion of my knowledge of projection as I had before you began talking." And Brother Anderson is an excellent operator, as operators go, too.

I had had about four hours' sleep, all told, the night before, and had rested a short while before the lecture, but at four a. m., after a two hour and a half talk, I didn't really feel very tired. For how could one become weary, talking to such a thoroughly appreciative audience, among such beautiful surroundings, particularly after such a truly royal reception.

At the end of the lecture another surprise was sprung, for no sooner was I seated than loud-voiced newsboys burst into the room, yelling at the top of their lungs: "Wuxtra, Wuxtra, all about Mr. Richardson's great speech." It was a midnight, or rather a four a. m. edition of the daily paper, with a cleverly written (Invararity is guilty) report of what purported to be my visit to the various theaters, with a big scarehead on the front page! Every manager in town was "hit" by the wit of the article. The boys reaped a harvest, for they sold from one to two papers to every one present, and papers in that country are five cents each.

During my stay I was motored over the city, and visited three of its theaters—the Empress, Princess and Bijou. I was photographed in company with Chief Starlight, heir apparent to the Saree Indian chieftainship. During my stay I was honored with an invitation to dine with Manager Invararity, and shall long remember his kindness, and the hospitality of his charming wife and family. If those two boys follow in the footsteps of their father, neither their mother nor their country could ask for more.

At 10 o'clock p. m., May 24, a committee of six appeared at the hotel, escorted me to the station, and, under the platform light, beside the sleeper, presented me with a most beautiful souvenir of my visit, in the form of a leather bound photograph book in which are mounted a complete, neatly labeled set of photographs of the "holdup," the banquet and other events which had taken place, a menu of the banquet containing the autograph of all those present, and other things.

I could not even begin adequately to express my thanks and appreciation to the men of Calgary for all their wonderful kindness to me during my stay in the city, but as the train moved, I softly hummed the song chorus: "Good-bye, Good Luck, God Bless You, Is All That I Can Say."

F. H. RICHARDSON'S VISIT TO VANCOUVER.

Vancouver, May 19.

ONE of the most memorable events that the motion picpeople of Vancouver have ever participated in occurred last night when the operators of the city tendered a banquet to F. H. Richardson, of the Moving Picture World's projection department. The banqueting hall of the Hotel Vancouver has never witnessed a more thoroughly interesting and enjoyable evening. Between sixty and seventy guests were present. These included the theater managers of the city, representatives from all the film exchanges, every union operator in town without a single absentee, and last but not least the provincial moving picture censor and the members of his staff.

The proceedings commenced at midnight, and after a feast that would have delighted the mast fastidious, speeches were delivered by President McVetie of the Trades and Labor Council, Manager Dewes of the Rex theater, President Rundle of the Theatrical Federation, and Provincial Censor C. R. Gordon. The latter caused considerable amusement by opening his speech with the remark: "Gentlemen, this is the first occasion on which I have had the pleasure of meeting you all face to face at a social gathering. I know you are all firmly convinced that the censor is not a human being. Well, here I am; take a good look at me!"

Then, to demonstrate that he really was human, the speaker indulged in remarks that made the room fairly ring with laughter. When the merriment had subsided Mr. Richardson took the floor, and for nearly two hours kept his hearers interested, thrilled, amused, and inspired by a lecture that will live in the memory of all who had the privilege of hearing it. To attempt a detailed description is out of the question. The field covered was so wide and comprehensive that nothing but a verbatim report could give any real idea of its import.

The main object of the lecture was to drive home the tremendously important, but often sadly neglected part that projection plays, or should play, in the presentation of the modern high class photoplay. That productions costing thousands of dollars, and on which endless labor and care have been spent, should to a large extent have their success in the operator's hands to make or mar, is a fact only partially realized by those most concerned. To assist the operator and to awaken him to a higher sense of the responsibilities of his calling was Mr. Richardson's chief aim and object. He did not mince matters, but attacked his subject, and some times his hearers; with a vigor and force that drove every word home with telling effect. He had his audience feeling very uncomfortable one minute, and rocking with laughter the next.

Richardson's humor, however, was not of the usual orator's variety, merely inserted to make the subject less dry. He had no need for such methods, and when he indulged in pleasantries it was with a direct bearing on the subject in hand, and only served to drive his point home with greater force. Any operator, exchange man, or exhibitor who could listen to such a lecture and not be filled with a higher and deeper respect for the great industry of which he forms a part would be too hidebound for redemption. The greatest enthusiasm marked the close of the proceedings. Both Mr. Richardson and the Moving Picture World are to be honored for the way in which they are unselfishly trying to better the industry in every possible way.

It would be a pity to close this account without mentioning a humorous incident which occurred as the party broke up. It was 3.30 a. m. when the boys left the hotel, and a dozen of them piled into a jitney car with a seating capacity of five. In the back seat sat the Provincial Censor, with a couple of operators on his knees. More operators sat on the front, and as the car started on its way, one of the latter, not knowing who was buried in the rear, turned and exclaimed: "Say, boys, that was a pretty good speech the Censor made. I didn't think he had it in him!"

WITH an embarrassment of riches in the offerings here since the last letter it is difficult to do half of them justice in limited space. At this writing we have "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," thanks to the enterprise of that live wire manager Thomas D. Soriero, of the Park. New Yorkers have seen it and realize the value of such a picture to inspire enlistments. This week Mary Desmond, the opera star, is soloist. Mr. Soriero scored again in having a sign in front of one of the recruiting tents on Boston Common, advertising the play at his theater—something never before permitted on that sacred soil. This speaks well for the value of the picture as an aid to the Government.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" was given a private showing for clubwomen in Tremont Temple last Saturday and is now on at the Modern. Strikes us that this is a powerful morality picture, combining some of the features of "Where Are My Children" (concerning malpractice) and the strong point brought out in "Blindness of Virtue," disclosing the fact that the mother did not enlighten her daughter, who happily escaped the awful fate of the young girl in this newer play. Zena Keefe, Jimmy Morrison, who had the trying part of the spoiled son; Arthur Donaldson, of "Prince of Pilsen" fame, and the others, gave us a treat rarely witnessed in a picture for individual characterization. I liked especially the author's conception of the four mothers so distinct in type, each playing a strong part in the denouement. Little Runa Hodges caught the house. Barring some of the titles, which had errors in spelling, etc., the entire production seemed flawless and well within the law, however the finicky may feel about calling a spade a spade.

What a wonderful play "The Bar Sinister" is, and what a cast! Mitchell Lewis, the dependable, is some find. Elaborate invitations went out from the office of Louis B. Mayer for the trade showing at the Park, when, by the way, the new house organ was played for the first time. In this offering we get a new angle on the race problem and a lot of red-blooded stuff which all like. Surely Edgar Lewis has produced the picture in a manner to delight the clever author, Anthony P. Kelly. Not having seen "The Barrier," another striking effort of Lewis and now on at the Boston theater, I could not compare, but settled back with the utmost enjoyment and did not find it too long as some critics aver. An evident pugilist fan sat back and applauded when the bar room fight was on—yes, and he said audibly, "Go to him, boy." Buck Moe was some character and put a lot of ginger into the scenes, many of which were so original as to place the entire picture near the sky line. It is a sermon in itself on the soul of man, no matter what his color or creed may be, so long as he is white within.

We are enjoying the O. Henry stories immensely, and the element of suspense catches the house as in "The Marionettes." We get these at the Fenway, where we heard a remarkable Italian singer last week called "Verona." Her voice is a joy, and in addition she plays a violin, singing the music without motion of the lips and toward the end down comes the instrument, her voice concluding the air which all supposed was played by the strings.

"Environment" was the best Mutual of the last week, and here we had handsome George Fisher playing a goody-goody part and winning the hand of little Mary Miles Minter. In the cast were the two Vosburghs, though not related by blood I hear. Alfred made his name long ago on the speaking stage and screen, and has been seen in quite pretentious pictures put on by Ince. Jack Vosburgh has already appeared in "My Fighting Gentlemen." "Environment" had good titles and a rain scene worth while.

Triangles when put on at the Exeter serve to fill the house and we get new releases. "Cheerful Givers," a small town comedy with Bessie Love and that couple in "The Birth of a Nation," Spottiswoode Aitken and Josephine Crowell, got a hand because it was absolutely human and Bessie is some heroine. "The Pinch Hitter" takes the cake for thorough enjoyment, and the college stuff is the best this season. Charles Ray is inimitable. "The Children Pay" was powerful in its preachment of divorce. What a splendid working out was here in the court scenes. Lillian Gish and that remarkably clever girl, Violet Wilkie, were pathetic in the extreme. Keith Armour did some clever railroad lovemaking at the end which the house liked. "Paddy O'Hara" was fine, the Irish atmosphere well preserved. I saw some Catholic priests in front and they did enjoy it.

From the World we had "Maternity," the best thing Alice Brady has done. "The Whip," you must know, went well here; also "The Crimson Dove" and "Yankee Pluck," with Montague Love in an unlovely part.

"In Again, Out Again" went strong here, and no wonder, for it is human, farcical and gets hearty laughs. Fairbanks' stunts are anticipated and he never disappoints. One of the impressive things was the surprise at the end when the guilty one turned out to be a pacifist. We read that over in Germany these peace-at-any-price persons have been caught blowing up munitions factories. Clever idea to work into this play, and little Anita deserves credit for it. In the cast we found two old friends—Walter Walker, so long a member of the Castle Square stock company, and Ada Gilman, the veteran who played with George Cohan many seasons.

Margaret Illington in "Sacrifice" was well nigh perfect and took the close-ups well. For her first picture and in a dual role she scores. We are anticipating her work in "The Inner Shrine," with Elliot Dexter playing opposite. I saw a Paramount old picture Sunday—"Davy Crockett," and liked it better second time. What a cast—Dustin Farnum, James Neill, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Herbert Standing and Winnifred Kingston. That's a mighty good picture for the young folks and the Lochinvar stunt is great. "Heart's Desire" was not up to the standard. Other Paramounts to please all were "The Primrose Ring," a charming fairylike play of equal interest to adults and kids; "The Lonesome Chap," with House Peters and Louise Huff, not a new story but well done by the Pallas players; "The Girl Back Home," with Jack Pickford and Vivian Martin, a dandy pair in wholesome play written by Beulah Marie Dix and directed by Marshall Neilan; "Her Better Self," featuring Pauline Frederick and Thomas Meighan, old plot but done with skill.

"The Soul of a Magdalene" did not somehow make any impression except that Petrova was too cold and her make-up was fierce. Two young men across the aisle said audibly "Say, but no feller would fall for that marble block. They need a new leading lady." The play was well constructed by Mrs. L. Case Russell and had a good twist at the end. Mahlon Hamilton was all man, and gave the play just the right taste in one's mouth at the close. "Her Secret" was a daring offering in one spot for the Vitagraph, but it was cleverly treated by two such artists as Alice Joyce and Harry Morey. I liked "The Hawk" and what dandy gambling sets! Earle Williams and Ethel Gray Terry do good team work, but a young thing remarked: "Gee, but I wouldn't like that face," meaning the other man, who certainly does not film well with his puckered brow. "The Law of the North" was very strong as a whole, but why in Heaven's name did the villiain wear Fifth avenue clothes in such a wild and wooly location. It was ludicrous. Great outdoor scenes and those dear dogs and sleds are a joy to see.

After reading the disclosures of Iliodor, the Russian monk, we are anticipating the screen play now being done by Herbert Brenon and Lewis Selznick, called "The Downfall of the Romanoffs."

A few notes. Francis Ferguson, with the Sherman Film Company, putting on "The Crisis," is being congratulated on the advent of an heir.

Jack Devereaux has followed in the footsteps of Taylor Holmes and is seen here in "America—That's All." He is a native of this state and last seen here in "Bunker Bean," in which Mr. Holmes starred.

Viola Dana is at Marblehead for locations and is making personal appearances.

"THE TANKS" BREAK STRAND HOUSE RECORDS.

"The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," the latest Official Government pictures to be put out by Pathe, enjoys the distinction of having broken all house records of New York's Strand theater from May 20 to 26 inclusive.

Over 90,000 persons saw the picture and thousands were turned away.

No, a "double exposure" does not mean a picture showing two actors on a snowy day in bathing trunks.

Why do directors pull this? Always cast a mother with gray hair. Picture the girl's elopement at midnight from the old farm while Plymouth Rock chickens in the back ground peck and scratch when they ought to be at roost? How can the villain open a door, close a door, cross the room and stand behind a couple who remain unaware of his presence? Why does an old Western pioneer in the back woods wear a three-carat stone in an 1842 picture?

"I love every bone in your head," said the director to the new extra.

Let's sing something.

But after the first trade criticism everybody became magnanimous and gave somebody else the credit for it.

The "Double's" Soliloquy."

I am the "double." I stand between the star and certain death. If the lead is injured he holds up the picture, but if I fall from a nag and put a dent in the macadam I go to the hospital. I am composed of concrete, solid ivory and genuine mahogany. If I break my neck, the star gets the credit for taking an awful chance, and if I don't the director gets sore because the picture was tame. I'm the guy who is pushed, shoved, dragged and drowned. I have been patched together so often that I resemble a crazy quilt, but the children need shoes, so I am the goat. I am the double.

Improvising (Part II.)

By Clarence E. Sinn.

IN ISSUES of April 21 and May 5 examples were given showing how we may modulate quickly to keys one half tone higher and to keys a whole note higher. As said before, one does not usually care to make such abrupt transitions of key, but at times it is essential; and at such times one may be glad to have these tables at his finger tips. The examples illustrated a direct modulation by means of one connecting chord. We now present tables showing how to change quickly from any key to a key one whole tone lower. Examples 20 and 22 illustrate how this may be done through a single chord. As in the preceding examples, we aimed at the dominant 7th of the new key, and not at the tonic chord. For instance, in the first measure of Ex. 20 we modulate from the key of C to that of B flat—one tone lower. Our first thought is, not of the chord of B flat (the tonic chord), but the dominant 7th of B flat—which is built upon the note "F."

Example 21 shows the dominant 7th of B flat in several positions (inversions) and how it naturally resolves to its tonic chord.

Observe that no matter what the position (inversion) of the chord may be, it still contains the same notes, viz.: F, A/C and E flat, and is therefore the same chord. (This holds good with any chord and its inversions.)

Let us return to Ex. 20. We wish to modulate from C to B flat. We are playing the chord of C, and the quickest way to modulate will be to change that chord of C to the dominant 7th of B flat (which is the chord of F with an E flat added). The first measure in Ex. 20 shows how this change is made. Of course the chords do not have to be in the particular positions given in the example. Other positions are shown in Ex. 21 (letter "C"), which illustrates different positions of the dominant 7th and shows each one of these chords resolving to the tonic chord (B flat).

The remaining measures in Ex. 20 show the same modulation to keys one note higher.

Example 22 continues the illustration beginning with the key of C flat (which is the same as B natural) and ending with the D flat modulating to C flat. These two examples (20 and 22) complete the circle of twelve keys, and illustrate a means of modulating through a single chord from any key to the one a note lower. Modulating from one key to the key a half note lower presents difficulties. For instance, if we are playing in the key of C and wish to change suddenly to the key of B natural (or C flat—they are the same), we find on examining the dominant 7th of the new key that it has not one note in common with the chord of C. Now in all of the previous examples we have found at least one note in the old chord which was the same as some note in the modulating chord. This we used as a "pivot." But in progressing from the key of C to that of B natural, if we try to go directly to the new keys dominant 7th (which is the chord of F sharp with an E natural added) there is not one note in common between the two chords—C and F sharp.

Ex. 24.

All my previous examples have shown modulations by means of a dominant 7th, and I wish this one to be the same; if not through a single modulating chord, then by means of two chords.

Example 23 and Example 24 give illustrations of how this may be done. It does not modulate through a single chord like the others, but it is sufficiently short for so abrupt a change. One does not care to make these abrupt changes unless one must, but it is good to know ways of making such quick transitions when they are needful.

These tables may be played just as they are sometimes when improvising; such sequences of chords will often provide an agreeable interruption between melodies. Indeed a melody can be made out of a phrase such as one of these tables give. Or a melody can be built upon such sequences of chords. Witness Wallace's "Prayer" in Maritana.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Udells.

DAVE UDELLS, of the Majestic and Crystal, Paxton, Ill., is in again with some samples and suggestions.

Dave writes:

Cuts, even if they are good ones, are difficult to place correctly in an advertisement. I've made a stab at it several times, but the results are not what I could wish for. Blending the type and story with the cut is no easy matter and if cuts are not going to improve the matter, what's the use of tossing them in just to fill up space. I wish the companies would send out line drawings instead of halftones. A line engraving always looks better to me and I know it prints better. Quotations in 6-point at the top are good teasers if they fit the subject. Please give us a a talk about cuts, attractors and quotations. Business is better than ever. S'pose I'll have to go to war next. I'm ready.

What Dave means by six point quotations is shown in this reproduction of part of an advertisement for "The Moment Before." The quotation fits because it is a part of the story and now and then "He said unto them, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness. Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me."—MATTHEW 19:18 and 21.

She Died After Hearing Those Words
The noonday sunbeams casting dreary shadows through the church windows shed a gloomy hue upon the grief-stricken Duchess of Maldron, who, after hearing those solemn words, left her world of sorrow behind.

type too small to be read quickly will be studied through curiosity, particularly if it rises to the top of the space where it does not seem to belong. Two other cuts show four examples of a new wrinkle Dave is using, the marginal make-up. The example above is also a marginal make-up well toward the top of the box and again at the bottom of the panel to let in the title. It makes a sightly display and the white space helps to throw the type into prominence on the page, serving much as would a heavy border.

Attractors cover too wide a field to be covered properly in short space. Much has already been said on the line cut and special drawing. Ralph Ruffner, One Hundred Per Cent Fullerton and other have sent in any number of "atmosphere" advertisements recently, and these seem to supply the answer to Dave's question. We do not believe that it would be possible for a company to supply drawn designs that will be generally useful to a sufficient number of exhibitors to warrant the expense. The drawn design must be specially drawn to fit the particular advertisement in which it is to be used. It is not possible to offer a sketch in two, three and four column widths that any exhibitor can take into his space. Line cuts of the scenes or stars will scarcely do. Portrait cuts in line are obsolete even in the patent medicine advertisements. Scene cuts in line would be even more objectionable. A drawn design must fit its space. It must be a part of that particular advertisement planned. It must "belong" to that identical combination of type faces. Not one exhibitor in a hundred who used the cut would get a decent result and we do not believe that a hundred exhibitors would use any particular cut. If you want to get drawn design effects, you msut get your own designing done, though, as we pointed out in a late issue, it is possible to get a bromide enlargement made of any design that strikes your fancy, ink in the lines and fade-out in the photograph. The result depends upon the skill with which the design has been copied. It will not pay the manufacturers to offer more than a frame design in line because there is not sufficient demand.

As to the use of photographs and half tones, much depends upon the skill of the advertising man. We are reproducing a pair of Dave's advertisements. One is a formal read-in-the-center use of a cut of Miss Gish. The printer has been to some trouble to kill the side spaces with a neat and not intrusive rule design, but there is little that will lift the curse from this placement. On the right hand Dave shows what he can do when he thinks it over. The cut is shoved over to the side and the live text is put right alongside of it. It is all a part of one advertisement and not a cut with a caption. Reading of that banquet scene gives one a desire to see it. It pulls business in just as the cut pulls the reader down to the advertising. If you will place a piece of paper over one of the advertisements and then reverse, the cuts can be studied singly without the disturbing influence of the other.

If a Hogarth caricature could come to life it would not form a more ludicrous picture than the banquet scene in

The next step from the straight right-angled cut is the vignette and this leads to the mounted photograph which you may vignette for yourself. Roughly cut out the photograph to the shape you want it. Paste it in its proper place on the card and with a sharp steel ink eraser of the short blade type cut away what you wish, finally softening the edge by rubbing down with a rubber ink eraser. All of this must be done after the photograph has dried down to the card and is bone dry. You can, if you wish, put two or more photographs or portions of photographs together by working one down and then adding the second, but it takes a nice sense of composition to get the best results and it is almost worth while borrowing from the library some good book on artistic composition in order to arrive at the fundamental principles. Placing cuts is just as much a matter of composition as arranging the lines of a picture you are about to photograph or paint—and it takes as much study. Yesterday we were printing up some four-word letter heads and we took the job off the press after a proof three times before we were satisfied with the spacing of the words and the relative proportions of the two-word lines, although we knew about what we wanted when we first set up the type. It's the same way with a cut. Lay out your space, then move the cut around and try and imagine how it will look in each position and how it will combine with the type.

And lastly, don't bother with cuts unless you can get a decent reproduction from your printer. The Paxtor papers give good results, but not all exhibitors are so fortunate. Use cuts only when they will show to advantage and not merely because you feel you should have cuts or because the other house uses them.

Attractors are something else again. An attractor may be a catch phrase or some special design. It is anything which attracts attention to the advertisement. The American Type Foundry catalogue has designs by the hundred, but they can be home-made. Some startling word at the top will get the eye, on the lines of the various "public notices" we have run from time to time. For a while the continuous use of a single word can be made an attractor. This week you use a four or five-line "Fire!" and it applies to the command given a firing squad. Next week it refers to a rescue in some feature and so on. In time people will look for your advertisement to see what you are going to do with the word this time. An absurd cut, trade mark, some special form of setting or a combination of rule work all serve as attractors. Dave has a lot of phrase attractors. One reads, "A comely actress and beautiful scenes." It is set in two lines. You pass it over. But he says, "The greatest sorrow of war," and shows a cut of a young man hugging a girl and you get the idea that parting is the greatest sorrow. The latter is an attractor. The former is almost a detractor because it is a trite statement. It brings no thrill. It rouses no curiosity. All picture actresses are comely and all scenes beautiful. You do not have to read to find out about that, so you are not apt to. Catchline attractors should run into body type. Picture attractors are more useful in gaining attention for display. A catchline attractor cannot have connection with the remainder of the story unless the connection is made clear through explanation, which calls for reading text. Cut or rule work is needed for display advertisements because these are, in themselves, big type lines and need something even stronger to win attention.

T. & D. Programs.

W. H. Jobelmann, publicity manager for the Turner and Dahnken circuit, is getting out a very useful little program for the Tivoli, San Francisco, and presumably the other houses. It is a four page four by six inch affair with the program for the week on page two and the underline for the following week on three, with house talk on four. The current program is not illustrated, but is given in proper program form with cast and description, but the underline is illustrated with cuts for the titles. With the show running an entire week, this gives a nice arrangement. The cut gives an idea of the Campaign Books.

Several campaign books have come in for various attractions. Mutual sends one in for The Railroad Raiders that is hurt by the fact it is printed on both sides of the sheet. It looks very pretty with its black and orange, but the beauty of the printer is lost on the exhibitor who has to copy off the stuff. The press copy is good and the stunts are sane and practical, not a merely stuff thought up to fill space, but if it is desired to hold to the color printing, the permanent part of the text should be bound and the press stories printed as a special sheet to be inserted. A smaller sheet is put out for Mary Miles Minter, in Environment. Here you can use either the ready-set ads or the press stuff, but not both, yet the stuff could all be gotten on one side of the page were the layout condensed a little. The exhibitor doesn't care for something that looks pretty. He wants something that will give him all possible help in making business. The same fault may be found with the Chaplin The Cure. The stuff is there, but not in its most available form.

The first Fairbanks'-Artcraft press book has seven pages of general stuff, all perforated ready to be torn out and set in typewriter reproduction. There are eighteen stories of varying lengths. There is also a complete cast and full synopsis in the same form. There are sixteen cuts available and the paper is shown in miniature in black and white. Every line of copy is available in the most practical form.

Beating Cohan.

For years George M. Cohan has been known as the champion flag-waver of the universe, but evidently S. Barrett McCormick has pinched some of the leaves from his laurels for he made the Indianapolis debut of Broadway Jones the basis of a spectacle that put it over the originator. The cut shows the setting prepared for the Circle Theater, and the description of the effects is given in Mr. McCormick's own words:

"The Top of the U. S. A." was the title of the stage spectacle and was presented as a curtain raiser to the All American Program which was presented three days following the declaration of war by the United States. The Circle Theater, which has its own paint force, constructed a striking stage picture representing the broad vista of New York's skyline as seen from a roof garden overlooking Broadway. The cycloramic drop which formed the background measured over one hundred feet in length and sixty feet in height. The scene was night and over the broad panorama the city was seen with its millions of lights, illuminated buildings and electrical displays.

"With lights gleaming and the stage bathed in the soft blue of night the curtain rose to 'Give My Regards to Broadway,' following an overture of Cohan musical hits, disclosing the state filled with gay diners. Ada Lee Chase as 'The America Maid,' gowned in a fetching costume of stars and stripes and wearing a dashing bonnet designed in the shape of an aeroplane, sang the new recruiting song, "It's Time for Every Boy to Be a Soldier,' and as she finished the chorus calling America's young men to the colors, a young man in soldier costume stood up in the audience and while a spot light singled him out sang a new chorus to the song, in answer, while a company of soldiers under command of an officer marched in upon the stage and formed the inspiring background to the patriotic scene.

Through the co-operation of Adjutant General Smith, of the Indiana National Guard, and with his hearty approval, Mr. McCormick made the stage spectacle an important publicity factor in the recruiting campaign. A separate day was set aside for each branch of the service, the state troops, regular U. S. Army, the Navy and Marines, the Artillery and Signal Corps each being given the chance to make their recruiting appeal.

As the song ended and the troops, following a short drill, marched from the stage the stage lights dimmed and the back drop showing Broadway slowly descended while over the towering roofs of the buildings the audience beheld a new scene, the illuminated New York skyline as seen from New York Harbor, with the bay stretching out and framed by the semi-circle of illuminated buildings. By the aid of a projection machine the waters of the painted drop were made to ripple while through them crept an enemy submarine stealing, like a phantom buccaneer, upon the city. Then across the stage and out over the harbor a mechanical miniature aeroplane soared in pursuit while, as the submarine sank below the waves, the fleet of the enemy was seen to steam into the bay and open fire upon the city. By a method of double projection and masking Mr. McCormick made it possible to show the mighty fleet of American battleships steam in to the scene firing upon the enemy and waging a fierce sea battle to victory for for the stars and stripes.

As the motion picture effects faded away, the scene again showed the peaceful harbor and as the vibrant strains of the Star Spangled Banner floated out over the house a beautiful woman draped as the Goddess of Liberty slowly rose from the waters while the gleam from her torch spread a radiant glow over the scene.

That sounds more like the main production than a curtain raiser to a film, and we wonder how Broadway Jones came through after all the red fire, but apart from that stunt was distinctly good as a timely flash, though it has no connection with the story of Broadway Jones. It would not surprise us if one of these special days films traveled with a carload of scenery—like Corse Payton.

Coming and Here.

The Kunsky houses, Detroit, use the same program, each house getting a page, and a right hand page, at that. Enough outside advertising is taken to cover expenses, but the program is not overloaded.

Earl Williams in "Apartment 29"—NEXT WEEK

DESCRIBED as a tantalizing mystery and love story, "Apartment 29," featuring the handsome favorite of the screen, Earle Williams, comes to the Madison theater next week, commencing Sunday afternoon, April 22.

Mr. Williams is a finished screen actor, recognised by many to be the greatest male star in films. The new Vitagraph picture provides him with another strong story which is sure to add fame to his name.

The story of "Apartment 29," written by Edward J. Montagne, tends to prove that no man can tell beforehand what he or any other man will do under given circumstances. A famous dramatic critic believes that no rational human being would act in real life as did the hero of a certain new play; and after he has made the statement events begin to pile up in his own life.

A woman quarrels with her husband, and Earle Williams, as the aforementioned dramatic critic, sees the trouble and interferes. Later he finds the woman dead in her apartment—Apartment 29. He investigates, stumbles over the man who killed her, and who killed himself. The finger of guilt of this double murder points directly to him. What can he do? A young girl appears on the scene, then her lover—who demands blackmail. How foolishly he acts. He, the biggest dramatic critic of the city, is utterly lost—while the bewildering events pile on so quickly.

Thrill after thrill, suspense upon suspense—and interest—building into a highly-keyed climax make "Apartment 29" a distinctively original photoplay with spectacular surprises which would spoil an evening's entertainment were it told you before-hand. To see it is to talk about it.

Earle Williams is recognized as an actor of rare ability. In his recent success, "Arsene Lupin," he scored a personal triumph. It is said that his role in "Apartment 29" is quite suited to his calm, leisurely manner of acting. Ethel Gray Terry is seen as The Girl. Others having prominent parts in the cast are Denton Vane, L. Johnston, Billie Billings, V. Stuart, Gerard Seigle, Frank Mason, Tommy Brett and other well known players.

Here is a question that is bothering us. Is it most profitable in the long run to mail the program in a sealed letter or send it unsealed? Also should we use a plain envelope or one bearing the theater name?

Of course this, as all other things, depends largely upon the temper of the town and the class of patronage, but it opens a wide field for discussion. Our personal belief is that the program should be made so attractive that patrons will demand it, when an envelope bearing the house card should by all means be used. Many managements, in various parts of the country, go still further and employ a special envelope for the program, differing from the regular one and often stating that the envelope contains a program of the Blank theater. For an established program we think this scheme by far the best and would recommend an envelope in distinctive color, specially printed. It need not be of a superlative quality, but it must be of reasonably good stock, and preferably printed in ink of the same color but of a deeper tint, a deep green on green stock or green on blue, or the reverse. The stock should be light in tint that the address may show up well. Red should not be used, nor even a pink. It is too gaudy and will offend fastidious eyes. The envelope should merely advertise itself and not the show, and any distinctive envelope will do. It does not have to be conspicuous, which is a different matter. If the idea is to reach those not likely to be attracted by picture theater advertising, then perhaps the white, sealed envelope would be best; but against this may be urged that the recipient, supposing it to be a personal communication, will be more than ever against the pictures, because resentful of the mild deception. The exceptions are so few that it is a safe rule always to use the house cards on the envelope and preferably a specially printed one; perhaps

THE PROGRAM OF

The House of Character
Waco, Texas.

If the program is mailed out under one cent postage (unsealed), add a note to the postmaster to the effect that return postage is guaranteed. This will bring back those not delivered. The question of sealing is largely a matter of choice. The sealed letter under a two-cent postage seems more important than a one-cent circular, but the difference is not always so great as to repay the added investment in postage. Under ordinary circumstances we think that one-cent postage is sufficient. For that matter, it is a growing custom to dispense entirely with the envelope and to make the sheet self-mailing, a return to the pre-envelope days. Mr. Larmour can arrange with the post office to mail his programs unstamped under a permit, if he mails in multiples of one hundred. To do this he must print or rubber-stamp the permit in the form required by the post office. This can be done on the back page, if he wishes, in the upper right-hand corner where the stamp would otherwise be placed. The house imprint can go in the upper left-hand corner. The remainder of the upper half of the page should be left blank for the address. The lower half should carry the advertisement of the theater; preferably the announcement of the features for the week. The program is folded once and clipped with a cheap paper clip or with a bit of gummed paper such as passeportout binding, which comes in rolls at small cost and may be had in many colors, white, gold and silver. The tape is about ⅝ of an inch wide. This should be cut in eighth-inch strips and one of these gummed to the front and back. It is a better plan than the paper clip and less expensive. Some of the largest circuits are now mailing out in this fashion with entire success. We do not like the anonymous envelope idea. It sounds and seems too much like "full particulars in a plain sealed envelope" stuff.

The page reproduced shows a clever arrangement of the space. The small type matter below the heading gives details of prices and times of showing. The underline gets a cross page head and is written up in eight point in the outside columns. The program runs in the center with the synopsis in six point below. It is compact and neat. The type page is 7 by 8¼. There is enough general text to carry the chance reader through the program, and several departments. The Madison is the top house of the string, and in one program mention is made of the Mezzanine Well, the rather unattractive name for a waiting room situated between the main floor and the balcony where patrons may wait to meet friends and at the same time hear the music without seeing the show. A waiting room is a great aid to business in a "downtown" house and helps a lot even in neighborhood theaters.

Something New.

M. W. Larmour, of the Queen, Waco, Texas, sends in some more samples of his programs. The third issue is the best yet. On page three he runs the program for the week and then takes up each section in a page to itself with dated days and the boxed titles of which we have already spoken. The cut will give an idea of the style. It shows two

Geraldine O'Brien in "A Woman's Flight"

It is a drama of particular interest to every woman. A man is expected to save his wife once and then settle down and become a respected and useful member of society. Will society let a woman live down a mistake? Can a woman, unjustly imprisoned, be blamed for using her only weapon to escape? Is any punishment too great for the man who blackmails a very repentant and now thoroughly good woman for what she has done in the past?

"Forgive us our sins" the minister preached, and the girl who remembered society her just prey heard him and was stirred by the beauty of the text and by the vibrant compassion of his voice. Neither knew it but love was to come to these two. Later they are married. She has not told him of her past life. Across the horizon a rebel lives a cloud drifts. There comes a great battle; it robs woman's heart between the desire to retain her husband's love and the necessity of confessing all.

Red Palmer an old miner of her old life appears upon the scene and situations are complicated. However, in the end "Red," though he'd shown a strain of true manhood, and in a novel manner happiness and complete understanding is brought about.

Mary Charleson in "Balzer's Private Den"

This is a photoplay of strong appeal and heart interest, in which are featured such stars as Webster Campbell, Hazel Daly, who played opposite Bryant Washburn in "Shinar's Dress Suit," and U. K. Hoopt and John Cessar.

Miss Charleson is pictured as a young stage girl, innocent of the world's ways, who finds herself unexpectedly plunged into a maelstrom of evil. The home to which she goes to visit, unknowingly is a home devoted against itself. All were Edith (Mary Charleson), who endeavor and suffer in making her life as uncomfortable as possible. In the midst of this unfriendliness, Miss Charleson Edith wins the spectator by her gentleness and a brave bearing of her burden. She shows the young reprobate of the house also a wholesome respect by deliberately knowing him down which he attempts to impose. Another heavy and thru revives him by applying cold water to his bruised temple. And strange to say this incident proves the turning point of their lives. Summed up this is a play of strong heart interest sure to please.

The Boston office of the Metro recently issued invitations to the trade to witness a showing of Miss Barrymore in The Call of Her People. The envelope was linen laid, printed in script in the corner "From Ethel," which was a good attention getter, but partly spoiled from the fact that the adrdess was put in by the addressograph. INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Leaders in Synopsis.

After wondering a long time why so many correspondents wanted to know how to write leaders into synopses, one inquirer threw a little light by remarking "Miss Soandso of the Blank writes that a synopsis should have plenty of good, snappy leaders, particularly at the start." Evidently someone told her that a play should have plenty of good leaders, and she is trying to pass the tip along; not realizing that there is small chance that the action of the author, as suggested in the synopsis, will be followed so exactly that the suggested leaders will fit. There is no reason why a synopsis should be loaded with leaders, and several why it should not, but if the exhibitor wants them and insists upon them, the only thing to do is to give them to her. About the best that can be done is to suggest snatches of conversation along the lines of these examples.

Harry comes racing after Bill and steps on little Georgie's express wagon. He does a somersault, picks himself up, looks at the cause of his downfall, remarks that he isn't doing a chariot race. He resumes the pursuit.

Bill asks Mabel's father if he can marry him. Father tells him "There isn't any insanity in our family, even if Mabel does want to marry you, and I don't want you bringing it in." Bill goes to tell Mabel he doesn't think her father approves. Mabel tells him "Father can't change his mind, but I can change it for him," and goes off to lecture dad.

Tom and Dick, a pair of tramps, roll out of a box car at a water station one morning and Tom remarks: "Dick, if I was two slices of bread hungrier than I am, I'd be dead of starvation." They go up town in search of a handout.

This sort of thing will mess the script up to the point where the story will become obscure, and we think that in the long run it will hurt the chances of a sale, even with the very lady editress who requests it, but that is the way it is done when it is done at all.

Results.

Some of the men who have worked hardest at photoplay have never sold a script and yet they have been repaid for all their hard work. One man worked three years and was cheated out of the only story he sold, but he is making good in another line through the things he learned writing plays. He was not fitted to be an author, but he is making a success on the production end. Others have found the work broadened their minds, and they perform their regular duties better because of the mental training they received. They made little or no money out of the sale of plays, but plays have helped them to make much more money in their proper vocations. Only the check grabbers have failed to gain any good from their work, and nothing but money ever can satisfy this type of person. Even if they did sell plays, they would be disgruntled because they did not get more for their work. It is a pleasant thing now and then to get letters from those who have dropped out and yet who have benefitted from their studies, and the number of such is larger than most persons would suppose.

Getting Plots.

One good way to learn how to get plots is to try and figure out how other authors got theirs. Of course this cannot always be done, but if you keep at it long enough and study a sufficient number of stories, you can in time get so that you can imagine how other authors work to their ideas. In a recent magazine there is a book-length story. Nearly at the end a little known, because little used, law is evoked to bring a situation. Knowing that the author is a lawyer and at present on the bench, it is easy to see how this law, coming to his observation, brought with it an appreciation of the value of the situation he could create from the invocation of the law. The author had to write about seventy thousand words to fit the idea, but once he has something to work to, the trained writer finds this easy. In Every Week a recent issue carried a humorous version of a supposedly dramatic story. It was in reality an excuse for using some still photographs from various film companies, and yet it would have been perfectly possible to have taken some of those pictures for main situations and have written around them a real feature. Don't wait for plot ideas to come to you, full grown, whiskered and with teeth. Grow them from the seed, and it does not have to be a very large seed at that, as the well-advertised acorn proves. Get a starting point for your plotting, remembering that the starting point of your work may be the climax of your story, and then round it out. The other day a synopsis was returned to us with the statement that the company was doing practically the same thing from a script by another author. Naturally we did not want to offer the story elsewhere, but we did not take the carbon out of the plot book. It is going to stay there, and some time it may serve as the basis for a wholly different plot. If it were worth the trouble, we would work it into a drama right now.

The most valuable practise the would be writer can have is plot twisting. Nothing will better serve to show the infinite possibilities of any single idea. Take a single situation. Work it into a plot, and then see in how many ways you can use that plot, each one presenting a different angle. In the course of time the student will come to realize that no idea has but a single fixed angle, and will then be ready to look for the most advantageous angle from which to treat the idea. It is not easy to sell plots now, therefore this is a good time to devote to plot study against the time plots come into demand again.

Success.

In the long run success lasts only if it stands squarely upon its foundation. The trickster, the thief and the accident will all be found out and dropped. We have seen a lot of them pass and we have our eyes on others who are passing. They make a lot of money for a little while, and then they have to give place to others. Be content with slow progress if you are building the proper foundations. In the eventual placement of values the author must inevitably rise above the producer. Then he will get what the producer now receives.

Keep Them.

"I'm through," writes a disgruntled correspondent. "I am convinced that studios are not buying and never will buy again, so when we let the furnace out for the summer, I took the whole pile of stuff down cellar, dumped it in and touchd a match. I felt like Nero for a moment, but I'm happier now." Perhaps he is happier now that he is not getting returns, but there is apt to come a day of vain regret when the market opens up and scripts come into demand. It is never possible to recollect all of one's work and the story the author cannot quite remember will always seem to him to be one of his best. This is no time for an impatient author to try to sell material, for the market is far too slow, but one is foolish to throw down ideas in a fit of pique. A story absolutely impossible may, later on, give the idea for an absolute winner. Keep all you write and when you grow discouraged, don't throw it away. Keep it still.

Accretion.

There is no one hard and fast rule for evolving plots, for the experienced writer may have half a dozen good ways of evolving suitable themes, some of which will work when others fail. One new way might give results to the methodical. The originator claims to have gotten good results from his scheme. He is so fortunate as to have a room used just as a workshop. On one wall he tacks up the germ of any idea that comes to him. When ideas do not flow he goes over to this exhibit, which sometimes displays forty or fifty ideas, and looks them over. He may add a touch here and a suggestion there. He may add a climax to an opening scene leaving the middle business still to be evolved, or he may carry an idea one or two moves ahead. Sometimes a slip will remain on the wall for months, and others may come down within a few days of their initial posting, but he declares that most come down as finished plot suggestions, and meantime he finds that studying these incomplete ideas often gets him into the mood for further plotting. There seems to be something in the scheme. For several years we have had a soft pine board hanging over our own desk upon which the thumbtack ideas we are not quite ready to use. It at least keeps them fresh in mind if the scheme serves no greater purpose.

Averages.

It's a good ball player who bats .300. Why expect to always stand 1.000 per cent.? It can't be done. No one ever has done it, so don't grouch if you fail.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

High Amperage.

Lester W. Bowen, chief operator, Rialto Theater, New York City, sends in the following argument in favor of high amperage. Brother Bowen is a member of Local Union 306; is president of the American Projection Society, and has charge of what is perhaps, everything considered, one of the most complete plants in the United States, or at least I am told it is very complete, although I have never actually seen his operating room. However, Lester Bowen is one of the best operators in the country, and what he says carries weight.

With regard to high amperage, Friend Bowen says:

> The question is often asked: "why is it necessary or even desirable to use from 80 to 100 amperes for the highest class projection, when a comparatively short while ago 25 to 30 amperes was the rule, and 40 pretty close to an absolute limit?"
> In reckoning the causes which have led to a demand for such great increase in amperage, the most important to be considered is the marvelous advance which has been made in photography. The motion picture of a few years ago was simply a series of quite crude snapshots, in which no attempt was made to bring out the finer details. For this reason the work of other days presented a really better appearance when projected with comparatively weak light than with a more intense illumination. More light would have served no other purpose than to emphasize its defects.
> In projecting the motion picture of today we, however, find a very different condition, many of the higher grade films being really handsomely executed and finished examples of the photographer's art, rivaling in beauty the very best work of the still photographer. In order to do justice in the presentation of a picture of this class it must be projected with sufficient light intensity to bring out the finer details with which it abounds. The use of less light would result in the absolute loss of many of the finer variations in shadows, and would also, to some extent, detract from the sharpness of definition.
> The change from the low amperage of other days to the high amperage now used in many places has come about so gradually that it has not been generally noticed. If, however, we go back ten years and compare the picture of that time with the picture of today, the difference will be something even more than strikingly apparent.
> Another point is that when we compare the size of the theater of a few years ago with that of the photoplay houses of today, we find there has been an enormous increase in capacity, which necessitates an increase in picture illumination due to increased angle of view, increased distance from the screen and increased size of the picture itself. To supply this demand the operator has been forced to follow the path of least resistance by increasing the amperage of the arc, and on account of the high percentage of loss of light between the arc and the screen, we have reached a point where it is practically impossible to obtain more light on the screen without an absolutely prohibitive increase in amperage at the arc. (Or an improved optical system.—Ed.).
> It has only been lately that the manufacturers have given attention to the elimination of some of the causes for the enormous loss of light in the optical system of the projector, and no doubt they will in time succeed in bringing about a large improvement in this respect. (What was it that brought this particular thing out in the open, Brother Bowen, and literally forced Mr. Manufacturer to get busy? The projection department of the Moving Picture World, was it not?—Ed.) But while we wait for these improvements to be brought about, the operator must continue to use high amperage. Given proper equipment, there should be no more difficulty in maintaining a 100 ampere arc than to maintain one pulling 30 or 40 amperes.

Lester W. Bowen.

> It may be of interest to note a few of the most important requirements for high amperage projection. First we must have a carbon of sufficient capacity to accommodate the amperage we propose to use. It is better to have the carbons too large than too small. If the carbon be too small, while it may to some extent increase the brilliancy of the light, it will often ruin a performance by causing the arc to become unmanageable. The solid negative carbon can be used quite successfully with low amperage, and may give a better result than can be had with the use of a cored lower carbon. But the cored lower is preferable with anything above 70 or 80 amperes, for the reason that it makes the arc much more stable. The cored lower holds the arc to the center of the negative, whereas the solid carbon by presenting a large area of surface of equal resistance to the arc causes it to travel from point to point as the negative burns away, and as every fluctuation of this kind causes a corresponding fluctuation and change in position and shape of the crater of the negative carbon, so that it becomes next to impossible to maintain a clear field on the screen. With 115 to 120 volt line service, using 100 amperes, the maintenance of an arc voltage at from 65 to 70 will be found to be the most satisfactory condition. This would require approximately ½ ohm resistance in the rheostat, while the resistance in the arc gap itself will be slightly more than this, or about 7/10 ohm. Under this condition the arc gap will be found to be approximately ⅞ inch.
> In handling an arc of this kind, all adjustments of the lamp must be accessible from the outside of the lamphouse, since it can readily be seen under the foregoing conditions any draft which might be caused by opening the lamphouse door would disturb the arc, causing excessive fluctuation in the resistance of the circuit, and might even cause the arc to break entirely.
> In this discussion I have considered only the direct current arc. Alternating current is for many reasons highly unsatisfactory, and with the many appliances for rectifying A. C. for projection purposes there is no longer any reason for its use.

Brother Bowen, it will be noted, admits that there is "tremendous loss in the optical system of the projector," the thing which this department has been struggling to have remedied for almost two years. Personally, as I have told Friend Bowen, and have often said in print, I do not believe there is any considerable gain in light after the 70 ampere mark is passed, and the percentage of gain is not large after the 40 ampere limit is passed. Beyond the 80 amperes D. C. I believe the increase in illumination by excessive amperage is largely imaginary. Bowen thinks the temperature of the crater can be increased somewhat by high amperage. I don't believe it. My theory is that once the volatilization of the carbon is reached you can go no farther. Bowen, on the other hand, believes that by speeding up the volatization some increase in temperature will be had, though he admits it won't be much.

I should be very glad to hear from other operators who are using high amperage, since this matter is one of much interest and large importance when we come to consider that every ampere added means additional cost for current bills.

Geared-Down Rewinder.

In the Gem theater, Palestine, Texas, I found the first properly-constructed re-winder I have seen. Frank Bell, son of the manager of the Gem, designed and constructed it. The photo shows the details, but since it was made, Bell has, at my suggestion, substituted a nine-inch pulley for the four-inch intermediate, so that it now requires 9½ minutes to rewind a 1,000-foot reel of film. He has, also at my suggestion, added an automatic cut-off, which automatically stops the motor when the film is rewound.

You will notice the separate, hand-driven rewinder for inspection purposes; there is also a long belt, reaching from motor pulley direct to rewinder pulley, so that in case of need the motor rewinder may be driven at very good speed. My compliments to Frank Bell! He is the pioneer of geared-down rewinders.

Information Wanted.

Charles Greenwood, Central City, Kentucky, is struggling with the following bundle of trouble, concerning which he asks assistance.

> Am writing for information. Hope you will help me out. Have a Simplex, 1916 model, using one 6½ and one 7½ condensing lens, with a number three projection lens. I have trouble with my focus. The focus can be made sharp in center, but not on the sides. Have tried everything I know, but without result. Condenser is fourteen inches from lens (Surely you mean aperture.—Ed.) and throw is fifty feet; picture sixteen feet wide. Now, Mr. Richardson, I have seen your Handbooks advertised and believe you know what to do. If you will help me I think I shall get one of your books.

Well, with that reward in view it certainly is up to me to get tremendously busy. Brother Greenwood's writing is not exactly copper plate, and I am uncertain as to some of the words, but believe I have translated his meaning correctly. The data supplied are not sufficient to enable me to speak with certainty on all points. He does not, for instance, say what kind of current, or what amperage he is using.

Apparently the trouble lies either in the objective or in the aperture, or in both, though it would be possible to locate a portion in the condensers. You have about a three inch E. F. projection lens, and such very short focal length lenses seldom give very sharp definition at the edges of the picture. Try the following: cut a circle of cardboard to fit into the lens barrel in front of, and right up against, the front lens thereof. In the center of this cardboard circle cut a round hole ½ inch in diameter. This will cut down your illumination considerably, but if the picture shows up sharp all over you may conclude that the trouble lies in the projection lens. If it helps some, but does not remove the trouble, then it is partly in the lens and partly elsewhere. If you find it to be all in the lens, or partly in the lens, the thing to do is (a) take lens apart and see that its combinations are all clean and free from oil or faint, almost invisible finger marks—see "Cleaning the Lens," page 108 of the Handbook (you see, friend Greenwood, I'm just mortally certain I'm going to win that Handbook sale, and thus become wealthy) and that they are all in their proper position (also see same topic in Handbook). Having done this, next examine your aperture and see that it is not badly worn. You see, Greenwood, a worn aperture plate will cause the film to buckle as it passes the aperture, and this causes exactly the effect you have described. Turn to "General Instruction No. 11," page 465 of the Handbook (you have by now no doubt decided to buy) and you will find the effect of worn aperture plates fully set forth. If you really mean that it is only 14 inches from condenser to projection lens, why that is too little. Not knowing your amperage I cannot tell you what you want, but it certainly ought to be more than that much from center of condenser to aperture, and probably more. The fact is, however, that you probably cannot get the distance you ought to have between your condenser and film, assuming that you are using comparatively low amperage. There, now, would you prefer the book sent by parcel post or express? Oh, yes, by the way, why not reduce your picture to 12 feet? Seems to me that ought to be plenty large enough and the longer focal length lens would be much better.

Checked Their Baggage.

W. E. Campbell, Ringling, Okla., sends in some samples of punched up films and says:

> This is the first time I have found a film that some one had been using for a railroad ticket. I think that besides giving it to the conductor he must have used it to check his baggage and get by the gateman. The punch sure was used good and plenty. When these films arrived there was a note in the box stating that films had not been examined, and asking the operator to inspect, and oblige, which I did, sending the Blue Bird Company's branch at Oklahoma City bill for same. I don't look for a remittance, but thought I would try them once, anyway. Well, Brother Richardson, from the article in this week's issue it sure does look discouraging to try and get any remedy on the change-over proposition. I wish I were somewhere that I could hear one of your lectures, and have the pleasure of meeting you, but Ringling is thirty miles from nowhere, and all I can do is to study the Handbook, department and full set of Hawkins' Electrical Guides. Anyway, I have the consolation of knowing that no one runs a cleaner machine than do I. In closing, I want to thank you for the good I have derived from the last Handbook and the department. Let the good work go on.

Yes, Brother Campbell, the securing of the adoption of an adequate change-over sign does look discouraging. It will probably come some day, but the good Lord only knows when. Sorry I cannot meet you, as it is always a pleasure to meet one of the boys. Maybe, however, there will come a time—let us hope. Meanwhile set yourself a high standard and try to live up to it.

Editor Gets a Roast.

H. W. Sanders, Spokane, Wash., hands us a warm one, as follows:

> Friend Richardson: I am tempted to write you every once in a while, but the fit blows over, and consequently I miss some good arguments with you. After reading the reply to question No. 166 I can keep still no longer. I cannot understand why you gave the published reply credit for being correct, as it is not correct. To begin with, you are absolutely right in your comment, where you say you think that the test lamp would burn to candle power when touched to the upper and lower carbons with the switch closed and the carbons not burning, and your reason for your belief is also correct. So the test lamp would not dim down to half C. P., as Linstruth says, until the arc is struck, in which case, with the arc burning, the lamp would be shunt with the arc and receive only the arc voltage. We know that the lamp house should always be grounded for safety. We also know that the neutral wire of a D. C. system is grounded, so that with the upper carbon arm connected to the positive wire, a test lamp would light to full C. P. between the positive carbon and the lamp house (ground) whether the insulation of the lower carbon arm was good or bad. Again if the negative side of a three wire D. C. circuit were connected to the lower carbon arm, the upper carbon arm would be connected to the neutral (which would be positive to the negative) in this case the test lamp would light to full C. P. between the lower carbon arm and lamp house (ground). This would not signify that the upper carbon arm insulation was bad. We know that it is the best engineering practice to ground one of the secondary wires at the transformer (high tension) with A. C. to safeguard the secondary from receiving the primary voltage in case of breakdown in the transformer. So we can light a test lamp between the ground and one of the carbons of an A. C. arc without the insulation of the other arm being bad.
> So we can see that the tests proposed by C. E. Linstruth would not work out in practice.
> To test the insulation of the carbon arms of the lamp without taking the same apart: Disconnect the terminals at the carbon arms, and place one wire of the test lamp on the live positive wire, and with the other wire of the test lamp touch the carbon holder to be tested. If the lamp lights or wires spark, the insulation of that arm is poor; if not, it is O. K. Of course, the lamp house must be grounded to make this test, as it should be at all times. As far as I am able to find out, the insulated systems you mention in your Handbook are not only bad engineering practice on account of the constant likelihood of accidental grounds which might do damage, but, as I understand, there are few such systems in use, unless it might be in small plants covering a very small area. I would like your view on this. The magneto and bell, as you say, is the most efficient method for tests of this nature, as the high voltage generated will break down bad insulation. But as the operator has comparatively little testing to do, the magneto is rather expensive, considering the number of times it will be used. I would not reccommend the common dry cell and bell for testing of this nature, as the ordinary cell gives off only about 1.5 volts, so that it would take too many cells to generate sufficient voltage to break down a weak insulation. This method is all right where the resistance is practically nothing. Kindly read over, again, the answer to 166 and compare with this letter, and if necessary make tests before framing your reply. Will be very glad to have your version of this matter. I am enclosing four cents in stamps for carbon copy. In closing I express very best wishes for yourself and the Department.

I am away down in Tennessee and have no copy of answer to question at hand. Very likely Brother Sanders is right, and the only excuse (if it is one) I can offer is that about the time the reply to that query arrived I was literally snowed under with work, preparing the itinerary for this trip, and things did not always receive that careful, painstaking scrutiny they ought to have had. Anyhow, what Sanders says about making tests is correct, as applied to a grounded system, and all systems except some isolated, comparatively small plants are grounded, as Sanders says. It is, indeed, unfortunate if I passed as correct an answer which was not, but not having the same before me I cannot say just how serious my crime may have been. Anyhow, I sincerely thank Brother Sanders for having corrected me. Will be in Spokane Wednesday, May 30, and will be glad to meet and shake hands with him, cheerfully admitting any error I may have committed and drowning the same in a glass of ——. Well, I'll see you May 30, anyhow.

A Special Case.

Leo J. Cuicci, San Rafael, Cal., presents the following:

This is a small town, with one vaudeville and two picture theaters. I worked three years in one and one year in the other of the latter. Have your handbooks; also have removed the projection departments from all the Moving Picture Worlds since the department started and have them bound in five books. The binding cost me $12.50, but I would not sell them at any price.

Am owner of a 1909 Motiograph, purchased from my manager. Wish to use this machine in my home. Have 110 volt A. C. through a ten ampere transformer, use 5/16 carbons. What condensing lenses would you recommend under these conditions? I get a fair light, using one 6½ and one 7½, but the carbons show on the screen. Will watch for answer in department.

The carbons show on the screen because your crater is in too sharp focus at the film. Move your lamphouse a little toward the mechanism. I am afraid I could not give you the correct dope on a case of this kind, as I have not studied the conditions set up by such extremely low amperage. Think, however, I am safe in saying your best bet would be short focal length condensers—say two 5½ lenses, if you can get them, with short distance between condenser and film. Mind you, I am not sure of this. Down to 25 amperes we use two 6½ lenses, with distance between condenser and film increased, to bring arc close to lens. In an extreme case such as yours, however, I doubt if this would hold good.

A New Member.

Joseph Kampschover, La Crosse, Wisconsin, makes application for membership in the Progressive Club as follows:

After not having written our department for more than four years, I hereby submit my name for membership in the Knowledge Seekers Club, as exemplified by our department. You may recall that about four years ago I had a grind in my Edison, and that through your co-operation it was eliminated. Since that time I have held a position with the local light company, and have learned many things about the "juice." The station in which I worked was equipped with two Westinghouse-Parsons steam turbines, each direct connected to a 400 K. W. three-phase generator. These machines turn at about 3,000 r. p. m. On stormy days we sometimes had quite some display of fireworks when the high voltage juice from the heavenly dynamo sneaked past the lightning arresters. Worked there six months and then again took my place beside a projector. Have been there ever since. Am taking an I. C. S. course in electricity, and that, with Hawkins Guides and the Projection and Photographic departments, constitutes my library. I study the World most, though, and am jubilant when it arrives. Have two Power's Six A machines and take current through D. C. to D. C. economizer. Light passes through Amberlux ray filters, and believe me they do help a lot.

And now here is the real purpose of my letter. The Badger Stereopticon and Picture Machine Company of this city tells me you are to stop here and inspect their machine while on your trip. Now if this is true, and you will consent to give us a talk, I will get the men together. I believe, also, that La Crosse was one end of your run when you were playing with the throttle of a C. M. & St. P. engine many years ago. If so you might like to renew old acquaintances. Please let me know if we can be favored.

Surest thing you know. Subject to slight change, I will arrive in La Crosse at 4.30 P. M. Wednesday, July 4, and will leave at 5.55 P. M. next day. Bad time, I know, but some one had to draw the Fourth, and it happened to be you. No, my old friends are doubtless all gone. I would not even know their names if I heard them. It is many years ago—the year of our Lord 1886, and many things have happened since then. And now, by virtue of my office as Grand High Brainstormer, I declare you duly elected a member of the Progressives. Dues: one letter occasionally—when you have something interesting to send in.

An Automatic Douser.

L. L. Phillips, operator, Brooklyn, N. Y., has secured a patent on a device for prevention of film ignition in the machine due to film breaks. The invention has also just been approved by the engineers of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity of New York City after a practical demonstration. The Department has named the device "An Automatic Douser." The construction is very simple. It consists of a Standard which may be fastened directly between the lamp house and the machine head. This Standard supports a shield which operates in conjunction with a rocker shaft by means of a wire extending from rocker to standard. The rocker shaft extends through the lower gate or side of the machine, and has a roller attachment inside, over which the film passes when the machine is being operated. The tension of the film serves to pull the rocker shaft back, which raises the shield. Immediately on any breakage of the film the tension of the rocker plate is released, whereupon the shield automatically drops and cuts off the light and heat from the aperture plate and the film. Attachment can be made to fit any make of machine.

I only know this device through the foregoing description and a very rough sketch. Will tell you what I think of its practical value after opportunity for examination has been presented. In justice to the inventor, however, I am told he is anxious to have the device examined and tested by the writer, and this looks as though he really has something of value. Usually the one who is attempting to market a device of the merits of which he himself has doubts, seeks to dodge a test by this Department.; on the other hand, the man with a really valuable article, or one he honestly believes to be of value usually lets no grass grow under his feet in presenting it to the Department for test. My being away at present hampers me in matters of this kind.

Weighs Two Hundred and Itches.

Idaho orders the question booklets, and says:

I have the Handbook and the "World," and all I lack is the questions. Am not in the game at present, but man, man, how I itch to get back. I am not what you would call a "heavy weight," only weighing two hundred pounds, but believe me I can hold down a machine. The projection department helped me more than anything else in careful projection, and I do take pride in my work. I have been handling a Simplex, latest model, and it is a dandy. Although this is a small town it is a great serial place, and we have just finished running Pearl White in "The Iron Claw." Last Thursday night we started "Patria," and it is some serial for a small town.

How near are you coming to this town? I see you will pass through Pocatello. We are about eighty-five miles north of Pocatello, and sixty miles from the entrance to Yellowstone Park.

The projection department is the first thing we read when the World arrives.

I guess Pocatello is about the nearest I will be to you, brother. Would like to meet you, but it probably can't be did. Idaho is, you know, my old stamping ground, for I fired the first engine that ever ran over the Oregon Short Line in 1883. Your town must be a live wire from the show point of view when it can run up-to-date serials of that kind. I will lecture in Butte, Montana. Maybe that is nearer to you.

Expensive Splice.

The Oregon-Washington Feature Film Company, Spokane, Wash., by its president, C. G. Van Tress, sends sample of a very neatly-made splice, which, however, as he very aptly remarks, would be too expensive for general adoption.

Recently in inspecting film returned to this office, we found the enclosed splice, which may be of interest to you. It is difficult to say how much damage might have been done had this set of films been sent out without inspection, which might have been easily possible, since it left the office one afternoon and was returned early next morning, being out for an evening's run only, and was in first-class shape when sent out. At the present price of nails this was an expensive, as well as a dangerous splice.

The splice in question was a very neatly-done job. It consisted in carefully thrusting a shingle nail through the film sidewise. It is rather a waste of energy to comment on this brand of cheerful idiot's work. What would have happened had the film been run through a machine in that condition would have been that the nail would have caught, or most likely have caught in the fire valve of the upper magazine. The film would have been pulled in two and the show would have been stopped. This would probably have been the extent of the damage, neglecting, however, the danger to the immortal soul of the operator by reason of the language used in expressing his opinion of matters in general when he discovered the cause of the break. It is, of course, within the range of possibility that the nail would have come on down into the mechanism, and that the break might have occurred over the aperture, with resultant fire, but that is hardly likely.

OPAQUE spots with transparent tails are due to dust on the plate and fogging caused by light shining in from a leak in the camera or magazine. Particles of dust resting on the film, if shiny or semi-luminous, have the effect of reflecting and concentrating the light on that portion of plate which is immediately in front of or beneath the particles, and then casting a shadow just behind the grains of dust. This produces the effect of opaque spots with transparent tails receding from them.

Pit marks, causing small transparent spots, may be due to sulphurous precipitation from the fixing bath. If there was an excess of alum used when making up fixing bath, and solution was not filtered or decanted off, precipitate would adhere to the surface of the emulsion and cause irregularity of surface if film were softened during subsequent washing.

Purplish opaque spots may be rue to decomposed pyro or other chemical impurities in the wash water, or from dirty trays or tank.

Purplish black spots are due to particles of iron from the supply pipes settling on the surface of the negative. The remedy would be to filter the water, be sure that trays are clean and that no chemical impurity comes in contact with the surface of the film.

Finger or thumb marks on the celluloid side of the film against which the emulsion side of the next convolution of film in the roll comes in contact, would cause spots, particularly if there was perspiration or chemical impurity, such as hypo, on the hands. These impurities would offset on the sensitized side coating and cause irregular masses of spots.

Peculiar star shape markings, sometimes appearing on film, have been found to be due to colonies of bacteria. This has occurred when negatives were left in a damp, fetid atmosphere when placed on the rack to dry.

Opaque streaks may be produced by rubbing or other physical action on the film before developing. Opaque streaks are sometimes caused by tightening or "cinching up" a roll of film. If there were any particles of dust or organic matter resting between the surfaces, "cinching up" together would produce an opaque marking.

Semi-transparent streaks with sharply defined edges are due to not pouring developer over the entire surface of the film when developing in the tray.

Transparent mottling is due to negative having partially stuck to the celluloid side of another turn of film during washing, and when pulling apart caused the emulsion to partially lift.

Small, sharply defined opaque spots have been caused in the darkroom when allowing water to run from the faucet. The surface of the film became spattered either with clear water or by impurities from the bottom of the sink, and was afterward dried while awaiting development. This causes spots varying in size, character and intensity.

Numerous parallel vertical lines are produced by using decomposed pyro developer and acid in an old fixing bath, cutting the pyro stains out in streaks when precipitating. The remedy would be to use fresh developer, also a new acid hypo bath.

Cinematographers for the Army.

In answer to numerous inquiries the following information may be of benefit to photographers who are considering enlisting in the United States Army:

Answers to Correspondents.

Laboratory evidently has put up money. He asks:

> Will you kindly decide if A or B is right in the following: A says that a straight position title (taken in the camera) that has static in it, the static will show up far stronger if developed in a new or freshly made developer than if developed in an old developer.
> B says he has to be shown.

If the strips are developed to the same density in new or old developer the contrast between the static and the light image will be the same in either developer, but if the strips are developed for the same time in new and old developer, the one developed in the new developer will show greater contrast between the static and the background than the one developed in old developer because the fresh developer will work faster and attain a certain degree of contrast much quicker than old developer.

On the other hand, if you mean that the title is made from black letters on a white card, that is, showing white letters on a black screen, the new developer will "bury" the static marks quicker than the old. "Burying" means developing so dense a deposit that the static marks are obliterated or "buried." Old developer loses its power to produce a dense deposit, and, therefore, when projected even the densest portion may permit enough light to penetrate to show the static markings while another piece developed in fresh developer which shows the markings even more plainly, when visually inspected by a strong light, might be so dense as to make them much less perceptible on the screen than the fainter ones developed in the old developer.

W. P. D., Charleston, S. C., writes:

> After twenty-five years as a photographer I have come across a make of Anastigmat lenses that will change the focus when you change the stop. Now, with a first class R. R. lens this is not the case, nor is this the case with a first class portrait lens like Dahlmeyer, of London, makes. Have made some motion pictures lately with lenses of X—2 inch focus, Y—2 inch and Z—3 inch with two separate cameras and, though my eyes are good and I focused them to the best of my ability, the pictures were not sharp. I focused them with a large opening, 3.5 and 2.4, and then stopped down to 5.6. Now, in using large lenses like 20 x 24 R. R. 32 inch focus, it is advised by the makers to focus with a medium stop even if you use a larger stop in taking the picture, but that is to flatten the field and get the proper general focus. What I want to know: Does the changing the stop in an Anastigmat lens of the motion picture camera change the focus?

Unfortunately there are some so called anastigmats sold for use on motion picture cameras which belie their names. An anastigmat lens focused at full aperture should give sharp detail in the plane focused upon no matter what stop was used.

The only distinction between a cinematographic objective and any other lens is that a lens for motion picture work is of short focus. Many of the very small high grade pocket cameras are fitted with the same type of lens as is used in motion picture cameras.

It is not so strange that the f2.4 lens should not give sharp images when focused at the largest aperture, as it is practically impossible to fully correct a lense of so large an opening, but the f3.5 should not show any appreciable difference in focus when stopped down. Possibly in stopping down you changed the focus, or it may be that your glass is not in the same place as your film. The extreme wide apertured lenses, those greater than f3.5, are only intended for use under adverse lighting conditions and can never be expected to give the same sharp definition as a better corrected lens of smaller aperture. This applies to the short focus two and three inch lenses used in cinematography. With longer focal lengths the difficulties in correction increase and the largest aperture that can be fully corrected diminishes in inverse ratio to the focal length.

The lenses you name are those of reputable makers and should not change focus when stopped down, with the exception of f2.4, as stated above.

Chicago News Letter

Present Film Conditions on the Pacific Coast as Seen by Omer F. Doud, During a Recent Trip.

OMER F. DOUD, general manager of the Frieder Film Corporation, recently returned to Chicago after a visit to the Pacific Coast, which occupiel seven weeks. Three weeks were spent at the company's studio in Los Angeles and the remainder was occupied in traveling and in stop-overs at San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, B. C., Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. Doud was a close observer during his travels of present conditions in the distributing and exhibiting departments of the industry, and in an interview he made the following statements, which will be read with interest by all engaged in the industry:

Omer F. Doud.

"Aside from a surplussage of film filth, conditions throughout the entire west are fundamentally healthy, and exchangemen with the right kind of stuff are prosperous and contented. Only those exchanges with a string of sex pictures are marked pessimists. People are sick of the 'adult only' sign and sensation-fed nerves refuse to deliver the 'kick' any more. So the inevitable has happened. I'd hate to have to sell a sex or problem play in the West today!

"And the lustre of the big star is dimming rapidly. No longer is he one of the vital cogs in the selling machine, particularly in the case of state-right films. One of the best-known and most progressive state-right buyers in the West told me he found the name of an internationally known film favorite a genuine detriment in booking his feature at more than the normal prices, because the public was accustomed to seeing him at ten cents. However general this impression may be, the fact remains that the script and author's name is much more important. A clean, wholesome story well told is the main requisite for favor nowadays. The heights have been reached in the spectacular and the thrill has worn off. Good solid yarns, with a chuckle now and then, get the money.

"I had abundant occasion to notice this with the picture I am handling, 'A Bit o' Heaven,' founded on Kate Douglas Wiggin's 'The Birds' Christmas Carol.' Its cleanly wholesomeness left a train of pleasant smiles and everywhere brought expressions of relief. The territorial buyer is just as weary as the public of the other kind.

"Comedies, of course, have the same old reliable market, except that they are a bit more in demand than ever. What, with the war news and the tiresome H. C. of L. talk, should the public want so much as a hearty laugh? Films that deliver the laugh, regardless of length, have a waiting market all the way from Los Angeles to Vancouver.

"I was much impressed with the big improvement in state-right exchanges and their handling methods. Some very formidable and very capably managed organizations are springing into being, equipped to get the uttermost out of their purchases. The exchanges are in position to devote to the sale and exploitation of a film more brains, hustle and initiative than would be possible with regular program offices, where each week's grist is like the preceding one. A man who puts his own money into a picture has a better chance of getting his money out of it, and usually the state-right buyer knows his territory pretty thoroughly.

"For example, I traveled through Utah with a well-known territory purchaser from Salt Lake—C. F. Adams, of the Deseret Film Company—and he told me of getting for 'The Eyes of the World' nearly $150 in two nights from a theater in a town, in the Goldfield region, which he played on a percentage basis. This town was so small that no program traveler had ever before had the temerity to stop off at it. Possibly, this is hardly a fair illustration, but just the same it shows why the state-right buyer is bringing home the bacon. He combs his territory, concentrates on the job in hand, is unhampered by policy letters from the home office, and generally overlooks no bets.

"The trouble with the program is that it is treated like a program and not as a series of perpetual pictures.

"Also, this old question of the down-town first run is causing more trouble all the time. The program exchange must play with a small group of influential exhibitors or take a licking. In one of the largest western cities I understand that two of the best-known programs have no down-town run at all. Another was bringing $1,000 a week. Suppose that territory comprised one thousand theaters. If you averaged $10 for a subject you would have to play one in every ten theaters in the territory to get as much real money as a week down-town would bring.

"There is much talk of organization among state-right buyers, and no doubt there will come from it all some solution of the many vexing questions that confront the producer, distributor and exhibitor."

Thought State Censorship Defeated, but—

After Receiving Twelve Votes Short of Constitutional Majority It Is Reconsidered and Passed.

W. W. Watts, state treasurer of the Illinois branch, M. P. E. L. of A., sent the following laconic telegram to the Chicago local Wednesday afternoon, June 6:

"Censorship bill and the bug defeated in the House this afternoon."

There was great rejoicing among exhibitors here over the happy termination of the attempt to pass the Guernsey state censorship bill, which was conceived in the brains of a few Chicago women, who can see little except evil in moving pictures as at present produced and released, and who made a state-wide campaign in favor of state censorship. The rigorous censorship of the Chicago board, under Major Funkhouser, was not sufficiently severe to meet the wishes of these reformers, and so they engaged Guy Guernsey, an oldtime and popular member of the lower house of the Legislature, to frame a bill and take charge of its passage.

I immediately wired Mr. Watts for full particulars and he responded as follows:

"The advocates of a motion picture censorship board in Illinois received an awful black eye when the House of Representatives yesterday refused to pass Guy Guernsey's bill providing for a state board. The bill needed seventy-seven votes to pass the House and it received only sixty-five. The action, House members say, sounded the death knell of censorship legislation for some time to come. The fact that some of the best known leaders in the House were opposed to the bill has proved disheartening to censorship supporters.

"The vote given the Guernsey bill is by no means indicative of the strength of censorship in the assembly. Guy Guernsey is well liked by his fellow-legislators, and many of them knowing his bill did not have a chance to pass merely voted for it to compliment him. Others walked off the floor of the House rather than chagrin him by refusing to vote for his measure.

"A majority of the members declared they were well satisfied that the motion picture industry is conducted in such a manner that it does not require censorship by a few who would dictate right and wrong for the nearly eight millions of people in the state of Illinois."

Mr. Watts supplemented his wire by a letter, in which he states:

"I wish to add that I interviewed several representatives and was informed that the bill had no chance to pass, as there were not many for it, and when it came to a vote a great many left the room and reported themselves absent. Some of them who did vote for it, after seeing how it was going, did so only out of courtesy to Mr. Guernsey, knowing that their votes would make little difference and might make him feel better.

"This question is now settled for at least two years in this state.

"Several of the representatives said they were very much annoyed by a good looking woman from Chicago, who was lobbying for the bill, and who took up their time every morning when they were trying to get out their morning mail. The Exhibitors' League also had a good looking woman on the job, in the person of Mrs. Powell, of this city, who knows something about lobbying, and considering what they did with the bill, I think she was the better looking woman of the two!"

There Is Many a Slip Between the Cup and the Lip.

The foregoing article was written Thursday night, June 7. On Friday morning the following night letter was received from Mr. Watts, of Springfield:

"The motion picture censorship bill was brought up in the House today for reconsideration, and was passed by a vote of 109 to 9. Only nine votes against it. It will probably come up in the senate next week. Letter follows."

The letter arrived Friday afternoon and read in part as follows:

"There were nine votes against it and only one voice against it, that of Representative John S. Burns of Chicago. This is somewhat of a disappointment, for how or why it was brought up for reconsideration is clouded in mystery. It will now go to the senate, and if passed by that body will go to the governor for his signature or veto.

"If any action is taken in the matter it should be done at once, for it will be footballed through the senate in the next few days. Adjournment of the legislature will be next week. Some action by the film interests should be taken at once.

"On Friday evening a joint meeting of the censorship committee and of the executive committee of the Chicago local was held in its quarters, and after considerable deliberation the following message was wired to W. M. Seabury, general counsel N. A. M. P. I., New York: 'Guernsey Illinois state censorship bill once defeated because of our opposition. Revived within week of adjournment on reconsideration and comes up in senate Tuesday morning for action, having passed house. Quick work is necessary if efforts are to be taken to defeat passage. We have now conferred with Meyer Stein (attorney), as last resort, who was recommended, and if your association is interested we need your immediate and urgent co-operation and financial support. Wire answer. (Signed) Joseph Hopp, president Chicago local.'

"The Executive Committee of the Chicago local will meet again Monday afternoon to consider this matter."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Rex O. Lawhead, representative of the Submarine Film Corporation, is in the city and will make his headquarters at the Hotel Sherman for some time. Mr. Lawhead is exploiting "The Submarine Eye" throughout the central states, including Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois. He has arranged with Jones, Linick & Schaefer to show the Williamson Brothers' picture at the Studebaker for a limited engagement, beginning Sunday, June 10. At this theater, some time ago, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," a submarine picture by Universal, which also depended on the Williamson Brothers' device for its wonderful undersea views, had its initial presentation and scored a memorable success for many weeks. A review of "The Submarine Eye" will be found on page 1798, in the issue of June 16, of this paper.

Tom North, manager of the super-feature department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., arrived in the city Monday, June 4, and has been busy all week in the interests of "The Vicar of Wakefield," which has won numerous triumphs in the east and other parts of the country. It has not had a Chicago run as yet, and Mr. North hopes to be able to make arrangements for its presentation in the near future. Frederick Warde, the famous Shakespearean actor, appears in the title role, and the production was made by Thanhouser. Mr. North has had wide experience in the distributing of moving pictures, as well as in dramatic work, and is well known throughout the country.

Irving Mack, assistant to Ralph T. Kettering, publicity director of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises, for some time past, was recently appointed director of publicity for Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Mack will have charge of the advertising and press work for these companies in Chicago and vicinity. He entered upon his new duties Monday, June 4.

"S. O. S.," by the Sunshine Film Corporation, was at the Bandbox last week, which displayed the "Women Only" sign on its front. Louella O. Parsons, the Herald critic, writes of this picture:

"'S. O. S.,' Help, Help! The picture needs it. A combination of 'Unborn' and 'The Black Stork.' Eugenic marriage is the theme chosen to enlighten the ignorant. There is no longer any delicacy in handling subjects of this kind. Our young people nonchalantly discuss these topics and visit the theaters with no idea of impropriety.

"Perhaps knowledge is golden. I wish, however, it were flaunted less publicly and presented elsewhere than in moving pictures. Some one must prove to me wherein these example pictures help. Until then I must enroll myself among those who feel no emotion but disgust."

"On Trial," Essanay's seven-reel feature, succeeded Rex Beach's "The Barrier" at the Colonial, Sunday, June 10. The photoplay is founded on Cohan & Harris' big stage success of that name. Sidney Ainsworth plays Robert Strickland, the leading role, and Barbara Castleton and other prominent players are in the cast. Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's popular child star, appears in the part of little Doris Strickland. Jones, Linick & Schaefer own the rights for the state of Illinois. The picture will be shown at continuous presentations, daily, from 11 a. m. until 11 p. m., at an admission of 25 cents.

Ten of the men connected with the bomb and other outrages on moving picture theaters in Chicago, were named in two indictments, charging conspiracy, which the grand jury returned Friday, June 1. The name of Frank Miller is added to the names which appeared in my reference to this case, in the issue of June 9. Some of the defendants are charged with intimidating theater owners and extorting money from them, while others are accused of damaging property. Bonds for each of the men were fixed at $7,500. The testimony of fifty-eight theater owners resulted in the indictments.

Jesse J. Goldburg was in the city last week, with headquarters at the Hotel Sherman, in the interests of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. He arranged for an initial trade showing of "God's Man" at the Playhouse, Tuesday morning, June 5. H. B. Warner stars in this production, the story of which is an adaptation from the book by George Bronson Howard. Exhibitors from Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Des Moines and Kansas City attended the presentation, in addition to a large gathering of Chicagoans. Mr. Goldburg on his way from New York visited Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit. In addition to exploiting the state rights for "God's Man," he is conferring with exchangemen on the big feature. He is at present negotiating with a certain company for the rights to "God's Man," in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

Colin Campbell, Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi and Lafayette McKee left Chicago Tuesday, June 5, for Los Angeles, after finishing a number of scenes in "The City of Purple Dreams." All these scenes demanded the Chicago atmosphere, in conformance with the story from which the photoplay has been adapted. One of these scenes shows the sky line of Chicago, taken from an entirely new angle. Director Campbell and a cameraman visited the new municipal pier and climbed to the top of one of the towers, from which they took a "long shot" of the skyscrapers along Michigan avenue.

Edward Nelson, president of the Sherman-Elliott Film Corporation; David H. Beecher, vice president of the same company, and Messrs. Sleeth, Shannon and Wolfberg, of the Masterpiece Film Corporation, which owns the rights to "The Crisis" in Pennsylvania and other states, were recent guests of William N. Selig in this city. All reported flattering business for "The Crisis" in their respective territories.

The Ince-Triangle Deal

Noted Producer to Sever Connections with Distributing Corporation—Sennett May Go Too.

FOR the past few weeks Dame Rumor has been tossing the name of Tom Ince about Broadway on the strength of a well-founded report that he was about to sell his holdings in the Triangle Film Corporation and retire from the organization which has been made so popular by his productions. As stories of this sort have been in the air for the past year or more no great excitement was occasioned by the latest repetition; but this time it is probably true.

From an unquestioned source it has been learned that real negotiations have been under way between Mr. Ince and the Triangle officials for nearly a month, that both parties have reached an agreement as to terms and that it only remains for them to place their signatures on the dotted line to complete the deal.

It is intimated that, under the terms of the agreement, Mr. Ince withdraws entirely from the Triangle, having disposed of all his interests in that corporation. He is reputed to have held twenty-six per cent. of the capital stock of the concern and it is further rumored that he is to receive for that interest $250,000.

At this time the officials of the Triangle Corporation refuse to say anything beyond the fact that negotiations are pending, but they do admit that there is a possibility of the deal being closed within the next few days.

The name of Mack Sennett is also mentioned as being a party to a similar deal with Triangle, and it is said that negotiations are in about the same state as those with Mr. Ince.

GSELL TO PLAY IN "THE FATAL RING."

Henry Gsell, who has just been engaged by Astra to play a leading part in "The Fatal Ring," the new Pathe serial, is an actor with a record of success. The new Astra player was born in Los Angeles and started his stage career at the age of twenty-one, doing small bits in stock. For two seasons he was with Beula Poynter. He toured with Mrs. Langtry over the Orpheum Circuit. He followed Howard Estabrook as "Laurie" in "Little Women," had a prominent part in "Backfire" at the Lyceum and Thirty-ninth Street Theatres, New York, with Mary Boland, and was also prominent in "The House Without Children." He was leading juvenile with Wright Huntington in Indianapolis, St. Paul and Minneapolis.

TO REISSUE BUNNY PICTURES.

Under the brand, "Favorite Film Features," V-L-S-E will reissue a long list of old Vitagraph pictures in which the late John Bunny appeared. It is proposed to re-edit and re-title these subjects, but all scenes in which Bunny appears will be retained.

REYNOLDS DIRECTING "MR. OPP."

Alice Heagen Rice's story, "Mr. Opp," is being made at Universal City under the direction of Lynn F. Reynolds, who also filmed Miss Rice's story, "A Romance of Billy Goat Hill," a few months ago. Arthur Hoyt plays the title role.

A SUCCESSOR FOR "TAPPED WIRES."

One of the first commands that was given to Courtney Ryley Cooper when he became scenario editor of The Whartons a few weeks ago was to write a two-part successor to "Tapped Wires," which Theo Wharton produced in 1912. The scenario has been completed and the picture will be produced by The Whartons some time this fall.

Constance Talmadge New Selznick Star

CONSTANCE TALMADGE is a new Selznick player. This young woman, who is only eighteen years old, begins her featured career under most promising conditions. Miss Norma Talmadge, only a few years older than Constance, is already known to all exhibitors as one of the most popular players. Constance has been a close observer of her sister's methods and will take advantage of all she has learned of Norma's experience.

Constance Talmadge.

Still another important event in Miss Constance Talmadge's background is her experience in working for D. W. Griffith. When this director was making "Intolerance" he wanted a young girl who could drive a chariot, had no knowledge of the word "fear," had strength, and in addition was personally attractive. Griffith gave the part to Constance Talmadge, who had done practically nothing of importance at that time. The result is known.

"I noticed, when I first met Miss Constance Talmadge," says Mr. Selznick, "her striking similarity to her sister, both in features and in bearing. I am a great admirer of Miss Norma Talmadge's art, and there are few stars today who are so popular with the men in the box office. I had several more interviews with Miss Constance, and studied her closely. Then I asked her if she would like to do one picture. She agreed and went to work under Director Charles Giblyn. For two weeks I had daily reports upon Miss Constance from her director, and looking them over I find not one unfavorable comment. Mr. Giblyn's favorable word for her is 'plastic.' He says that mentally and physically she is able to adopt any attitude with the greatest ease, one of the most important of all characteristics in a screen artist. So I decided that I was right in my original intention to star Miss Constance Talmadge, and she will appear in a series of productions which will be released on my open booking plan."

Already rapid progress has been made on the first of the Constance Talmadge pictures, "The Lesson." It is a story of contrasted conditions as between city and rural life.

FOX INDIANAPOLIS OFFICE DOING WELL.

Although the Indianapolis branch of Fox Film Corporation has been in operation only one month, the office has established a record for photoplay bookings in that brief time, under the direction of Charles H. Phillips.

Mr. Phillips is recognized as one of the ablest men in his field. For two and a half years he was associated with Harry Campbell in the big Fox office in Boston. Then he was sent to Minneapolis and Chicago to do special work.

The Indianapolis exchange, situated at 232 North Illinois street, is a meeting place for Kentucky and Indiana exhibitors. The newest addition to the twenty-odd Fox offices in the United States attends to the distribution of Fox films for motion picture men in those two states.

C. A. WEEKS BACK FROM THE COAST.

Charles A. Weeks of the Rex Beach Pictures Company has just returned to New York from the Pacific Coast, where he has been in the interest of "The Barrier," which has achieved phenomenal success in the west. Mr. Weeks succeeded in closing up a tremendous business for the Beach feature, including run bookings in Los Angeles and San Francisco, which are said to have established a record for prices. He states that business on the coast is in excellent shape and really good features are cleaning up.

Mr. Weeks has been negotiating with the owners of a big feature now playing a Broadway theater and will probably announce the purchase of the world rights to this picture within a few days.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Quinn's New Rialto Formally Opened

Starts Off to Big Business with Selig's "The Garden of Allah."

LOS ANGELES was the scene on May 28 of the formal opening of J. M. Quinn's new motion picture theater, the Rialto. Prior to the formal opening the house had been opened to the general public a week previous.

Manager Quinn's new establishment strikes a note of comfort that has been the cause of much favorable comment by his audiences. Artistic simplicity characterizes the foyer and interior decorations. The lighting system is pleasing and is so arranged that it can be utilized in heightening incidental effects in the projecting of the feature. A huge electric sign representative of flickering candles and with the emblazoned words "Quinn's Rialto," at the top of the theater structure, gives the theater its place in the sun on the local Broadway.

Selig's multiple reel feature, "The Garden of Allah," has drawn capacity audiences from the first day of the opening. Mr. Quinn was the recipient of many floral tributes from his many friends upon the ushering in of his newest venture.

Through Irving Lesser of the All Star Feature Distributors Mr. Quinn bought the entire rights for Los Angeles for "The Garden of Allah."

Gertrude Selby and Neal Burns Co-Star

New Brand of Weekly One-Reelers to Be Produced by Horsley and Douglas.

FROM the David Horsley studios comes the announcement that production has begun on a series of one-reel parlor comedies featuring Gertrude Selby and Neal Burns, directed by Horace Davey. The distribution will be one picture per week. The new venture is the result of a combination between David Horsley and W. A. S. Douglas.

As a picture comedienne Miss Selby holds an assured place in the front rank. Although only twenty years old, her stage and screen experience covers a period of six years. Beginning as a dancer in the Gertrude Hoffmann Revue she was quickly singled out by managers for her exceptional work, and at the age of fifteen was starring as a vaudeville single act.

Miss Selby's entrance into pictures came over two years ago, when she joined the L-Ko company as principal comedienne. Her series of feature comedies, including "Gertie's Gasoline Galop" and "Gertie's Joy Ride," assured her future in picture work. Leaving the L-Ko company she joined Universal, co-starring with Hobart Henley in Bluebird Productions. Last year Miss Selby came under the Fox banner, this time again as comedienne and has left there to take up her new work.

Neal Burns, for years in musical comedy in such successes as "The Yankee Prince," "The Girl in the Taxi" and "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," resigned from the Christie Comedy Company, in whose pictures he has been featured since his initiation to the screen, to make the other half of the new stellar combination.

Horace Davey, who will direct these new style comedies, was formerly Al E. Christie's right hand man in the direction of Christie Comedies.

According to Messrs. Horsley and Douglas, distribution of these pictures will not come for several months. Owing to the fact that they will be released weekly, a round dozen will be made before the first release in order that the exhibitor is assured of a steady and continual supply. In the meantime, every effort is being made to produce only the best—with something different. The result is intended to be clean, genuine humor, short stories with a plot.

W. H. Clifford Heads Own Company

Famous Scenario Writer Has a Contract for Releasing His Productions on Regular Program.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made in Los Angeles this week that W. H. Clifford is to be the head of a new motion picture company which will bear the name of the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company of California. Mr. Clifford is internationally known as a scenario writer and production manager. For three years he was the scenario editor of the Thomas H. Ince companies, leaving them to write for the Famous Players Company. Later Mr. Clifford accepted the position of production manager for the Monogram Film Company, the producers of the series of Shorty Hamilton photoplays for the Mutual program, which were written by Clifford and supervised by him.

Associated with Mr. Clifford is C. E. Bentley, a capitalist, who will have charge of the business affairs of the organization. The company has a contract for the release of its product on one of the best programs, the star and support has been selected and the studio engaged.

La Salle Resumes Production

Director-General De La Parelle Starts Work at His New Studio in Culver City.

MARION DE LA PARELLE of the La Salle Film Company, which is releasing its one-reel comedies on the Mutual program, has moved his studio from Hollywood to Culver City, where a new studio has been erected for the special use of this company.

Director De La Parelle starts shooting this week on a new series of one-reel comedies for the Mutual program, and as heretofore King Vidor will be associated with Mr. De La Parelle as co-director and scenario writer.

Big Brands for Scandinavia

Big Deal Closed By John Olsen & Co. for These Artcraft and Paramount Pictures.

ONE of the most important foreign deals which has been closed since the opening of the war in 1914 has been consummated between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and John Olsen & Co., by the terms of which the latter concern acquires control of the Douglas Fairbanks, Artcraft, Pallas, Morosco, Bosworth and Arbuckle-Paramount pictures for Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

John Olsen & Co., the foremost film dealers of the Scandinavian countries have just opened a branch office in the Times Building, New York City, and contemplate transferring their London representative to America for the next few years. The little star in her make-up as juvenile female "Captain Kidd" is one of the "cunningest" sights imaginable, while her acting of the part is bound to score another big "hit" for her.

Billy the Exhibitor

War Films Are All Right, but Not Right Now—The Blue Ribbon Crank Never Had a Chance with the Saloon Until the Average Man Quit It for the Picture House.

By E. T. Keyser.

"GOING in strong for war films?" I asked Billy the other evening as he was toting up the day's receipts. "Not on your life!" was Billum's emphatic reply. "While the other nations were having all the excitement exclusively among themselves there was a detached feeling of curiosity permeating the American public to which it was mighty good business to cater, but now, with our country right in the midst of getting ready to be in the thick of it ourselves, conditions have changed materially.

"A while ago, the modus operandi of scientific warfare was something to stir the curiosity of the average audience. Today it would be anything but good policy, let alone decency, to show the horrors of war to those whose nearest and dearest are about to confront the same conditions.

"And, what is more, I propose going light on anything with a tragic twist to it. There will be cause enough shortly for real tears without my making a bid for stimulated ones.

"What I'm going in for now are love stories with a touch of humor and comedies which will make my audience forget for a while that there is such a thing as a draft, so far as even a temporary forgetfulness of such a matter is possible.

"I have a hunch that for some time to come clean love stories and clean comedies are in for a big run which will become bigger as long as the war lasts."

"Then you do not believe in war pictures?" I asked.

"I do," said Billy. "But in the proper time and place. The moving picture will continue to record the lessons and the heroism of the greatest struggle which the world has ever beheld, and its records will constitute one of the greatest lessons which has ever been offered to the historian, the scientist, the military authority and to the general public, but, for the latter, the lesson must be deferred until the sharpness of the agony which the events record has been dulled by time and victory.

"The moving picture will play a big part in the days about to come when every one will be on edge as to the results of our troops abroad and the enforced economy of war conditions dictates a carefulness in expenditures to which the American public is not accustomed. The picture will continue to be the one popular amusement which may be enjoyed as freely as before and will therefore be viewed by thousands who have heretofore taken but small interest in the screen. The manager who is prompt to realize that contitions have changed and changes his methods in accordance will not only continue to hold his own but enlarge his clientele and increase his box office receipts."

"Then you don't believe that the picture is going to be taxed out of existence?" I asked.

"I sure do not," replied Billy. "The picture is the average man's amusement, the picture house his club, and the average man constitutes the big voting majority which really runs this country when any particular class shows an inclination to take away from him something which he really wants.

"Note the strides that prohibition is making?" asked Billy.

I admitted that I did.

"Well, did it ever occur to you that all the reformers, W. C. T. U.'s and lonely meddlers with other people's affairs who ever made a corner in the blue ribbon market and paraded all over you yowling 'The saloon must go' made mighty little impression on legislation as long as the average man needed the saloon to hang around in during spare moments?

"As soon as the aforesaid average man found that the picture theater filled the bill, at less expense and with more general satisfaction, he gave the temperance agitators an opportunity to try a few stunts on the ground that as he had found a new interest they might as well fool with the old one. And that's the only ground on which they ever got a look in.

"So what chance do they have to put a crimp in the pictures?"

NEAL HART IN "AN INNOCENT PLOTTER."

Neal Hart is being featured in a three-reel photoplay, "An Innocent Plotter," under production at Universal City by Director George E. Marshall, who also wrote the story. Patents Company Wins Decision

Judge Mayer in U. S. District Court Decides Verdict in Favor of Defendants in Suit Brought by J. H. Sampliner. of Cleveland.

THE suit of Joseph H. Sampliner against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others, an action brought under the anti-trust law to collect triple damages for alleged restraint of trade, which offense was said to have been committed against the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company, came to a sudden close in Judge Mayer's branch of the United States District Court in New York city on Monday, June 4. The case was on trial, and at the conclusion of the testimony in behalf of the plaintiff defendants' counsel asked that the court direct the jury to render a verdict in favor of the defense. In considering the request Judge Mayer cited several decisions bearing on the case purporting to show that the plaintiffs had taken the suit for speculative purposes, a practice known as champerty, and granted the motion accordingly.

It is believed the plaintiffs will not take an appeal in view of these facts and that the case will be dropped. The amount involved was $750,000. There is said to be another case by the same plaintiffs in Ohio courts against the General Film Company involving damages to the amount of $303,000 which will be materially affected by Judge Mayer's ruling in this case.

Joseph H. Sampliner came into the case as assignee of the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company and was represented by Gustavus A. and Saul E. Rogers. The defendants' counsel included Judge Samuel Seabury, Robert N. McCarter, Charles F. Kingsley and Judge Moon.

Senator Walters Entertained

Syracuse Senator Friend of the Industry Gets Warm Greeting in New York.

WHEN F. H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association, a former Syracusan, an old friend of Senator J. Henry Walters of Syracuse, heard the Senator and Mrs. Walters were in New York, he lost no time in letting the members of the association know about it. Mr. Walters took an active interest in the Wheeler bill and in many ways showed that he was not in accord with it.

Arthur S. Friend, treasurer and attorney of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, entertained Senator and Mrs. Walters at a luncheon on Wednesday, June 6. Mr. Friend's guests included William A. Brady, director-general of the World Film Corporation and president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal; Jules E. Brulatour, of Eastman Films; J. Robert Rubin, secretary of the Metro Pictures Corporation and counsel of the National Exhibitors' League, and Mrs. J. Robert Rubin and Frederick H. Elliott.

After the luncheon Senator and Mrs. Walters were escorted to the Famous Players-Lasky studio, where they saw George M. Cohan preparing for his new Artcraft picture. At the World studio they were introduced to Kittie Gordon, Alice Brady and Montagu Love by Mr. Brady.

During their stay in the metropolis Senator and Mrs. Walters have been the guests of the management of the Strand and Rialto and they also visited the studios in and around New York.

George Irving With Popular Plays

Successful Director Returns from Trip to the Coast—Will Have a Big Play With an Important Star in First Picture.

GEORGE IRVING, formerly director for the Frohman Amusement Corporation, who resigned some time ago to take a vacation trip to California, has returned and gives out the information that he has signed with the Popular Plays and Players Corporation and will undertake at once the production of a big feature picture for that concern.

This firm of producers is controlled by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North and is releasing on the Metro program. The details regarding the subject which Mr. Irving will handle have not yet been given out beyond the general statement that the story is excellent and that the star is widely known. Sufficient is known regarding the ability of Mr. Irving, however, to predict that the result will be satisfactory if the story and star are up to the mark. Personally Mr. Irving has unbounded faith in the combination and is looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to his coming engagement, the conditions of which he considers ideal.

Speaking of his trip to the coast Mr. Irving said that he and Mrs. Irving thoroughly enjoyed their vacation, much of which was spent in visiting friends of Mrs. Irving, whose home is in California. As a picture country he said that there was no place n the world like California where nature provided every sort of setting the photographer and picture man could desire.

Donald Hall

DONALD HALL. who is seen in support of Norma Talmadge in "Poppy," and will also appear with her in her forthcoming production, "The Moth," has had an interesting career which began in India thirty-nine years ago. Born in Murree, Northwest Provinces, India, on August 14, 1878, the son of the late Colonel George W. M. Hall, C. B., he was christened Donald after Field Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, late Governor General of India. He was educated in London, England, and, following the example of his father, decided upon a military career and joined the Durham Light Infantry as a junior lieutenant.

Donald Hall.

It was George Edwardes, the English theatrical manager, who offered young Hall a theatrical career after he had heard the latter's exceptional baritone voice. Fifteen years Mr. Hall devoted to musical comedy, appearing in "Florodora" at the Lyric theater, London; with "The Girl Behind the Counter," in which he sang the baritone lead at Wyndham's theater, London: with "The Gaiety Girl" in London and America, and also in the American productions featuring Fritzi Scheff, Anna Held, and other well-known stars.

Vitagraph gave Mr. Hall his first screen role when he was engaged to create a part in "The Wreck." With this company he appeared in a number of feature pictures appearing in both comedy and dramatic roles. Among the productions in which he appeared were "The Christian," "Hearts and the Highway," "The Nuremburg Watch," "Mortmain" and "Mrs. Dane's Danger."

Capellani to Direct Miss Sanderson

Famous Director Joins Freuler Forces to Guide Work of Broadway Favorite.

ALBERT CAPELLANI, recognized as one of the foremost directors of silent drama, has been engaged by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to direct for the Empire All-Star Corporation the productions of Julia Sanderson, the latest of the Charles Frohman stars to be added to Mutual's "big stars only."

The name of Albert Capellani is familiar to every exhibitor in the United States, for it is linked with a series of successful productions extending virtually from the infancy of the industry. He leaves the post of director-general of the Clara Kimball Young corporation to become affiliated with the Mutual organization.

Albert Capellani.

Mr. Capellani's career began in the Paris studios of Pathe, where he entered the motion picture business as an assistant cameraman. He became during his five years with Pathe of Paris cameraman and director. The following seven years he spent directing feature productions in France, leaving Europe to come to the United States as a director for World. His productions for that company included "Camille," "The Dark Silence," "A Face in the Moonlight," "The Flash of an Emerald" and "The Impostor." When the Clara Kimball Young corporation was organized he was chosen to direct Miss Young in "The Common Law," producing later "The Foolish Virgin." His productions are admittedly among the best, from the standpoint of direction, that have shown on the screen.

"I am more than delighted with the prospect of directing Miss Sanderson," Mr. Capellani commented upon his new connection with Mutual. "I have watched Miss Sanderson's stage career with interest. I have long thought her peculiarly well fitted for pictures. With an actress of her ability and the thoroughly harmonious conditions under which we shall work, I can promise splendid results."

Miss Sanderson has just deserted Broadway to appear before the camera. She enters pictures after an enviable career behind the footlights. One of her biggest successes was with DeWolf Hopper in "Wang" and among her recent hits have been "The Siren" and "The Sunshine Girl."

FOX'S DICKENS SUBJECT PRAISED IN LONDON.

Before "A Tale of Two Cities," one of Charles Dickens' masterpieces, was scheduled for presentation to the English play-going public, the Fox Film Company, Limited, invited many persons in official and private life to a private exhibition at the Alhambra, Leicester Square. That was on May 22, and when the curtain went up and the picture began to appear on the screen the theatre was filled with as fine a throng of spectators that ever filled a London theater.

Mr. Fox wanted high class criticism and he was pleased by the favorable comment. The spectators were particularly warm in their praise of William Farnum, who enacted the dual roles of Sidney Carton and Charles Darnay. The mob scene, the storming of the Bastile and the revolutionary riots that followed all brought forth praise.

EDUCATOR PRAISES SCREEN MAGAZINE.

"I have been closely following developments in the motion picture world for a number of years and I have run across no single medium which is doing more and which gives greater promise of doing more in the way of educating and quickening the intelligence and arousing the spirit of patriotism among the public generally than your Universal Screen Magazine," wrote Dr. John Forbes, noted educator and former vice-president of the American Educational Association, the other day to Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Screen Magazine.

Griffith Players in England

Bobby Harron and Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Cameraman Billy Ritzer Join Chief.

OWING to the absence of D. W. Griffith in Europe, where he went to attend the presentations of "Intolerance" at Drury Lane theater, London, sailing from New York on March 17, there have been many rumors of his subsequent movements These necessitate a statement from the Griffith offices.

Since "Intolerance" was launched upon its wonderfully successful run in England Mr. Griffith has been in the trenches in France and Belgium and has been doing some special work for the British War Office and for the French Government. The nature of this work is secret. Without violating any of the restrictions of the military censorship in England or France it is quite evident that whatever is being done will have an American participation, as Mr. Griffith has called to the other side several of the best known people who have appeared in his recent productions. Among these are Bobby Harron, Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Billy Bitzer, his cameraman, who has been with Mr. Griffith ever since he began making big feature pictures. Bitzer and the American players sailed on the same English ship that took General Pershing and his staff to England, where they landed Thursday morning, June 8.

No other authoritative statement of what Mr. Griffith has been doing abroad can be announced at this time, but it is evident that he will have a local touch to whatever European subject he may undertake to finish when he returns to this country in the near future. These movements were taken upon Mr. Griffith's personal initiative and have nothing to do with any arrangements made prior to his sailing for Europe.

The Industry and Liberty Bonds.

THE motion picture interests are manifesting lively concern for the success of the Liberty Bond flotation. Reports are coming in of subscriptions among all ranks. Douglas Fairbanks has taken $100,000 worth. John Emerson, his director, and Anita Loos, have each invested to the amount of $10,000.

Pathe employees have subscribed heavily. General Manager Berst has made them a proposal whereby they may take up the bonds on the payment of a dollar a week on each fifty-dollar bond.

The score of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its employees now stands at $290,000. Of this the hundred thousand contributed by the concern already has been reported. Margaret Clark has subscribed for $40,000. Cecil De Mille canvassed the employees at the Los Angeles studio of the company and secured pledges to the amount of $150,000, said to be about double that of the contributions of the remainder of the population of Hollywood, the suburb where the studio is situated.

Metro players have been active in canvassing Manhattan and Brooklyn seeking Liberty Bond buyers. In addition to the large amount thus put into circulation they are credited with taking $80,000 themselves.

Through Stanley Mastbaum of Philadelphia his associates in his various amusement enterprises have subscribed for $20,000 in Liberty Bonds.

Gaumont is 100 per cent. Red Cross

The town of Flushing, L. I., is now engaged in a great drive to raise money for the Red Cross. The report of the canvassers was most gratifying to the motion picture industry, since it placed it in the front rank of supporters of this great international charity. The Gaumont Company, which has its studios and laboratories at Flushing, was reported as being "100 per cent Red Cross." This means that every single person on the Gaumont payroll, whether employed in the studios, the laboratories, or the executive department, is a member of the Red Cross. No other Flushing corporation equaled the Gaumont record.

"The Stolen Paradise"

Ethel Clayton in Five-Reel World Screendrama That Offers Her a Good Acting Role—Fair Story and Adequate Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE hero of "The Stolen Paradise," a five-reel World screendrama, is a very ungrateful gentleman. He is loved by two women, and loses his eyesight while saving the life of one of them. This woman, of course, is the one he loves. While at the hospital he keeps calling for her, but a dread of beholding any one suffer makes her stay away. The other woman learns this and visits the blind man, passing herself off as her rival. They are married without his being told the real situation, and his wife devotes every energy of heart and brain to his welfare. He is happy until he regains his eyesight and discovers the deception. His old flame, now married, turns up at this time, and the two become altogether too intimate. His own wife saves them both from the vengeance of the rival's husband, and the hero gets his mental eyes open to the true worth of the woman he married.

Frances Marion, the author of the story, has found it difficult to make her work plausible, but has given it a good supply of incident and sketched his characters with cleverness. Harley Knoles has directed the picture carefully and a good cast has simplified his task.

Ethel Clayton plays Joan Merrifield, the woman who is rewarded for her devotion to the helpless blind man she loves. She understands the character and makes that fact clear to the spectator. Her impersonation is a sympathetic one and is graced with a naturalness and acting skill of much merit. The other names of the cast include Edward Langford, Pina Nesbit, George MacQuarrie, Robert Forsyth, George Cowl, Lew Hart, Edward Reed, Edwin Roe and Ivan Dobble.

"The Slave"

Fox Dramatic Picture This Week Warns Against Marrying for Anything Except Love—Valeska Suratt Plays Lead.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

CLOTHES and still more clothes, wonderful hats and gowns, associate themselves indelibly with Valeska Suratt; but in the beginning of "The Slave," a new Fox picture in five reels, the actress appears in just a simple working girl's plain suit, the clothes of a girl who faces the "eternal problem of being sinless but happy on eight per." She marries a rich old codger—in the end we are told that it is only a dream—and though she has all the costumes and robes she wants, she can get no money and therefore she can't run away. The picture gets its quality mostly from the fact that it is as strange as a dream. It is a good, interesting picture. The worst fault in it is that too many characters confuse it a bit. Many of these characters are fresh and interesting and are excellently acted.

The "slave" sells herself to the rich husband, and when he dies she is still a slave to the atmosphere of her old surroundings, which are anything but wholesome. The acting of Miss Suratt is well known. There's a touch of Springtime in Violet Palmer's picturing of Dulce, which is true, sweet and simple. She's a good actress. Dan. Mason, Tom Brooke and Martin Faust will be noticed with pleasure. Edward Burns, Herbert Heyes and Eric Mayne have parts not so noticeable, though ably filled.

There's a newness in the way the story is pictured that though it follows an old path will make it an acceptable box office attraction. The wonderful clothes worn by Valeska Suratt are a big point to attract attention. The trend of the picture is not without a moral meaning, though it is no church picture, because it deals with a good many speedy characters.

The picture was directed and written by William Nigh and the photography was done by Joseph Rutenberg.

"The Silent Lie"

Five-Reel Fox Photoplay of the Great Northwest Finely Directed by R. A. Walsh—Miriam Cooper Heads Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HARRY EVANS' story of "Conahan" is the source of "The Silent Lie," a five-reel Fox photodrama directed by R. A. Walsh. The picture is admirable in every way. Strong in plot, excellently acted and produced, and containing a number of beautiful winter scenes, the director has introduced one piece of business that should be eliminated. Spitting tobacco juice over the shoulders of a woman of even doubtful reputation is carrying the realism of a northwestern dance-hall a step too far.

The technical perfection of "The Silent Lie" is evident in the construction of the plot and the firm manner in which the different incidents are linked together. So skillfully has this been done that it almost conceals the leisurely pace of a portion of the action. The human interest is always present, and the acts of the characters are the expression of their natures, and never fail to convince.

The heroine of the story is a victim of circumstances. Reared in a dancehall by a brutal stepfather, she is forced to run away to escape being forced into leading a vicious life. She finds a refuge in the home of a venerable priest, marries a man, without telling him of her early surroundings, and nearly loses his love when he learns the truth.

lie, has the personality and acting ability for the part. The depth of real feeling she displays makes her work properly convincing. Ralph Lewis, Charles Clary, Monroe Salisbury, Henry C. Barrow, Howard Davis and William Eagle Shirt are prominent and valuable members of the cast.

"Robespierre"

Pictorial Beauty and Spectacular Scenes Should Carry Seven-Reel State's Rights Drama of French Revolution.

PICTORIALLY beautiful and containing numerous spectacular scenes, "Robespierre," a seven-reel drama of the French Revolution, produced in Italy and offered for state rights sale by the Export and Import Film Company, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, should meet a degree of success measured only by an audience's willingness to forego story value and some drama for a wealth of the spectacular and the beautiful. By that is not meant that the picture does not tell its story of Robespierre the despot, but that, as produced, the story alone would not hold up seven reels. The story is told most by titles, and the scenes that follow the titles in most cases are merely animated illustrations of the titles. Trimming of many of the scenes would speed up the tempo considerably.

Despite the tendency to lengthiness, however, there is much of the dramatic in the picture, and the spectacular scenes, in some of which more than a thousand persons appear, have been well handled, indeed. Especially is this true of the scenes showing the crowded Convention Hall and the scenes depicting the guillotining of Robespierre, in which are seen a public square embracing several blocks, crowded with the howling populace. The execution itself and the incidents immediately preceding it are very dramatic. Throughout the picture superb photography and lighting is evidenced, and some of the exteriors are exquisitely beautiful.

Love and political intrigue are the main story ingredients. The plot in its main incidents holds closely to what history tells us of the French Revolution during the latter part of the Eighteenth Century. Lydia Borelli, a beautiful and talented woman, is seen in the leading feminine role. Opposite her is E. Novelli. The title role is played by A. Fabaini, and Guery is played by R. Barni. All of the leading players are well schooled in the foreign manner of dramatic expression.

The photography in the picture is so good that it deserves double mention. In the many sumptuous interior sets the lighting has been gauged so as to make the screened picture as nearly perfect as possible. This is especially noticeable when figures are in the foreground of a big set. As is the case with most foreign-made pictures, "Robespierre" shows fewer close-ups than American productions.

On its commercial side "Robespierre" has many strong factors. Its basic theme is the extremely timely one of Liberty or Democracy. A foreword in the film helps this considerably. The picture has many advertising possibilities—possibilities that can be used by the exhibitor with a play on patriotism that ought to result in patronage.

"The Question"

Harry Morey and Alice Joyce Stars of Five-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature That Has a Dream Finish.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

There are a kind of folk who take great interest in dreams and dream plays. They will like "The Question," a five-reel screen drama on the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program. Lawrence McCloskey, the author, after treating in all seriousness a situation where a scientist must either give up the woman he loves or lose the opportunity of perfecting a new serum that will be a priceless boon to humanity, and getting all his characters into a most uncomfortable frame of mind, calmly takes a little joker in the shape of a dream finish from the pack and lets the spectator know that the scenes of violence, the sacrifice of the heroine of her good name, and the unChristian conduct of her clergyman father, never have taken place.

The excellent acting of the entire cast, which includes Harry Morey, Alice Joyce, Charles Kent, Gladden James, Amy Remley, Edwards Davis and Mr. Wangaman, brings out the author's intent with perfect clearness.

"Suds of Love"

Two Part Comedy That Will Surely Make for Hilarity in a Theater—It Is Full of Speedy Eccentric Rushes and Makes Use of Laundry Machinery.

By Hanford C. Judson.

TELLING an indescribable story of comic love and vicissitude, with a laundry for its background, "Suds of Love," a two-reel picture by the Fox Film Corporation, cannot fail to win herty and wholesome laughter. The characters are as amusing as Hank Mann and Aileen Roberts, with the good help of Max Ascher, Billy Mason and Peggy Provost, can make them, and that is quite amusing. The flavor of the picture comes mostly—after the comic character drawing—from the eccentric camerawork and the speedy antics of such animated inanimate things as automobiles, laundry machinery, etc.

Aileen is the proprietress of a laundry from which Hank discharges himself to take a job as waiter in a restaurant, and Aileen wants to lure him back. This her partner, Max, doesn't wholly like and takes upon himself the part of deep-dyed scoundrel to frustrate it. The action now hastens from the laundry to the restaurant and back to the laundry and closes, after a dash about the city in almost every kind of vehicle, with a satisfying glimpse of the villain being kicked out of town down the railroad track. There are many old-new things in it. For instance, it is old to make an automobile dash in through a house door, but we do not expect to see it come out the same side of the house. The picture is filled with unexpected things and as comedy it makes good. It was directed by Jay A. Howe.

"When Baby Forgot," New Five-Reel Release Starring Baby Marie Osborne; Final Installment of "Mystery of the Double Cross," and Number Seven of "The Neglected Wife."

LITTLE Miss Osborne, the youngest star under the Pathe banner, has been supplied with a new scenario writer, a new director and a new company. The first release of this organization is called "When Baby Forgot." It is in five reels and, although the story is the familiar one of the father and mother who separate and are brought together again through the love of their child, most of the material will please the admirers of the little star. Marie romps through the lighter scenes as roguishly as ever and exhibits considerable depth of feeling in the serious portions. Her expression of the troubled mind of a little child shows an unexpected sense of the art of acting. Her natural aptitude for her work has been conceded by everyone.

butler to make a burlesque of the part. Most of his direction is of fair quality, however. Fred Newburg, Margaret Nichols and Lee Hill are competent in the leading roles of the support.

"The Double Cross."

The secret of the Masked Stranger's identity is revealed in the last installment of "Mystery of the Double Cross," and the gentleman turns out to be no gentleman at all, but the lady of the double cross herself and the sister of Philippa Brewster.

With this explanation it is easy to understand the many puzzling situations that took place during the action of the serial. So Peter Hale does not get Philippa after all, but her sister, and Dick Annessley marries the woman of his choice.

"The Message on the Mirror."

The seventh installment of "The Neglected Wife" introduces a new character, a masked woman, who enters Mary Kennedy's boudoir and writes a mysterious message on the mirror in the room. An attempt to kill Frank Norwood by a bomb equipped with a time fuse, which is carried into his office in a handbag, is another exciting incident of the number. Before this happens Margaret visits Norwood at his office and receives an offer of marriage from him.

A New "Stingaree" Series

Kalem Shows First Two of Fifteen Episodes in Continuation of Well-Known Story.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

IN "The Fugitive Passenger" and "The Jackaroo," fifteen weeks of solid enjoyment are promised lovers of adventure. These are the first two episodes in the new Kalem series, "The Further Adventures of Stingaree." E. W. Hornung, the English short story writer, author of "Raffles," "The Amateur Cracksman" and "Stingaree" has written these tales especially for the screen. True Boardman, who created the role of Stingaree in the original series, is back in his old part, with his violin and monocle. Paul C. Hurst, creator of the role of the black-whiskered Howie, Stingaree's partner, appears in "The Jackaroo," the second of this series. Marin Sais, featured in "The American Girl" series, appears in "The Fugitive Passenger," the first of this series.

"The Fugitive Passenger" takes Stingaree back from London, where the original series left him, to Australia. Howie comes to London to warn that detectives are on his trail. He escapes to a ship bound for Melbourne. The captain is warned by wireless. Other detectives board the ship at Melbourne, but Stingaree and Howie escape in a very fast launch. This picture leaves them in the bush country of Australia. There is love interest in this picture in the parting of Stingaree from his fiancee, Ethel Porter, played by Marin Sais.

A jackaroo in Australia is what we call a tenderfoot. In "The Jackaroo," an apprentice on a sheep ranch attempts to capture Stingaree for the £500 reward, which the owner of the ranch, Maud Norman, played by Edythe Sterling, needs very badly. When Stingaree learns why the jackaroo attempted to capture him, his chivalry prompts him to feign carelessness so that he is captured. The jackaroo then collects the reward, and Stingaree, with the help of Howie, escapes from jail. Tom Walsh, as the jackaroo, does a daring feat in this picture when he rides full speed into a lariat stretched across the road neck high to lift him off his horse. We see the trap planted, but do not dream that the jackaroo will actually ride right into it. The love interest in this picture is in the scenes between the jackaroo and the owner of the ranch.

The Pot of Gold.

Strong suspense is built up in this picture, an episode in "The American Girl" series. Madge King plans to double the circulation of her father's newspaper by running a serial story giving clues to a pot of gold buried in the vicinity. When she and her father go to bury the gold in the cellar of a deserted shack, they uncover human bones, a skull, and a locket with a child's picture in it. They publish the picture. A girl recognizes it as hers, and the mayor visits the shack and finally confesses to the murder of the girl's father. This confession comes about five hundred feet from the end of the picture and relieves the principal suspense. But the rest of the picture is an exciting chase. The mayor attempts to escape. He is lassoed and pulled off his horse. In the cast with Miss Sais are Frank Jonasson, Edward Hearn, R. E. Bradbury and Edward Clisbee. James W. Horne directed. The story was written by Robert Welles Ritchie.

George Beban in Five-Reel Pallas Photoplay, "A Roadside Impresario," and Margaret Illington Is the Star of Lasky Five-Reel Screen Version of Basil King's Successful Novel, "The Inner Shrine."

"A Roadside Impresario."

THE entertaining qualities of "A Roadside Impresario," a five-reel Pallas photoplay written and starred in by George Beban, are equal to any of the author-actors' previous efforts. He is assisted by a trained bear who, if the truth were told, divides honors with his friend and manager.

Scene from "A Roadside Impresario" (Paramount).

Everything connected with the doings of the wandering Italian and his four-footed companion is the cause of huge enjoyment. The episode where Bruno escapes from his master and investigates a number of beehives in search of honey while the inhabitants are at home is among the most amusing moments ever put into a moving picture. For his exploit Bruno is locked up in jail and his master sets about, in great excitement, to earn the one hundred dollars necessary to secure the bear's release.

There is a serious motive connected with the heroine of the story, who turns out to be the daughter of the Italian. Although a familiar device for exciting sympathy, it is handled skillfully and acted with fine feeling and excellent art by Mr. Beban. The incident of a blackguardly newspaper editor's attempt to snapshot the juvenile hero in a compromising position is not so happy. In fact, it is crudely done and barely escapes being silly.

George Beban's reputation as an actor of Italian character parts is an enviable one, and he has honestly earned his artistic standing. In acting before the camera he has apparently lost sight of one fact. However wildly excited and rapid an Italian's movements and gesticulations in real life, when they are made so swiftly that the eye cannot follow them on the screen, such acting ceases to be good art. The production, under Donald Crisp, is of a high order. Jose Melville, Julia Faye, Harry De Vere, Harrison Ford, Fred Huntley, W. A. Carroll and Adele Farrington complete an admirable cast.

"The Inner Shrine."

The Lasky five-reel screen version of Basil King's successful novel, "The Inner Shrine," has had every aid in the way of a well-known star, a thoroughly competent supporting cast, and an adequate production. At a number of its biggest moments however, it fails to convince, mainly on account of the manner in which the author has drawn the character of the young American girl who is the heroine of the story. Her attitude when she finds herself in a false position is entirely at variance with that of the typical daughter of Uncle Sam. She seems to have had her views of life colored by the French plays she attended in Paris. In fact, the entire story recalls the artificial French dramas that were imported by Augustin Daly forty years ago.

The dramatic strength of the situation where Derek Pruyn, the Marquis de Bienville and Diane Winthrop meet, and the Marquis warns the man whose life he has saved against the woman Pruyn has always loved and believed in, cannot be questioned. But here again Diane acts like a heroine of the Scribe school of stage fiction.

Admirers of highly-tinted romance will find "The Inner Shrine" to their liking, and not the least of their enjoyment will come from the manner of the picture's production and the acting by Margaret Illington. Although somewhat mature for the part, Miss Illington plays Diane with skill. Hobart Bosworth, Elliott Dexter, Jack Holt and Mme. D'Juria give their customary top-grade performances.

"Filling His Own Shoes"

Five-Part Essanay, Featuring Bryant Washburn, Is at Its Best in Last Half.

THE most pleasing part of the five-reel Essanay picture, "Filling His Own Shoes," featuring Bryant Washburn, is the atmosphere. This romantic comedy opens in Paris, takes in Constantinople, and returns to Paris. The principal characters are Americans. The best scene is a night attack on Turkish outposts in the Balkans in which two characters in the story are wounded. It should be placed to the credit of this picture that the different nationalities which appear in the story are all shown in a favorable light. This means much in war time. The Turkish colonel, who leaves the hero two and a half million dollars and three wards, girls of different races, is a fine old fellow.

Bryant Washburn is Ruggles, an American salesman in the Paris agency of an American shoe company. He is in love with Dorothea (Lyda Dalzell), an American art student in Paris who refuses him when she learns that he is a shoe salesman. It takes three and a half reels to bring this out; and it is merely introductory. The main story is the last half. The constant inspiration of Ruggles is Ruth (Hazel Daly), daughter of the president of the shoe company.

The story is a broken-backed affair arranged from a magazine novelette and directed by Harry Beaumont. The main situation is not brought in until the middle of Reel 3. This shows Ruggles as the guardian of three girls. They do not constitute a harem in the sense in which that word is misused in America. The Turkish girl, Roxana, is determined to love Ruggles. The other two girls do not enter into the story. They just walk around.

Three physical encounters serve to mar the action of a story that is without dramatic action. When Ruggles determines to quit as a shoe salesman, he goes to the shop to tell the manager and his favorite clerk what he thinks of them, and beats them all over the shop, overturns furniture, and knocks the clerk unconscious.

The overacting of Dorothea and her aunt when they learn that Ruggles is a shoe salesman amount almost to a burlesque. They are quite overcome and gasp for air.

The Turkish bedroom with its hanging bed, in which the old Turkish colonel dies, is a good set. Two distant views of Constantinople as it would look from the window of this room are used to give Turkish atmosphere to this part of the story.

Lyda Dalzell as Dorothea and Virginia Valli as Roxana, the sweet but sorrowful young Turkish beauty, are very interesting. So is the old Turkish colonel.

Frank N. Seng Presents Good State Rights Feature—Hobart Henley's Seven-Reel Production Has Wide Appeal.

Reviewed By Ben H. Grimm.

ONE of the best state rights pictures on the market at the present time in "Parentage," a seven-reel feature produced by Hobart Henley and offered for state rights purchase by Frank N. Seng. The picture is one that should make money for the exhibitor. Aside from its value as decent and healthful propaganda, the picture offers much entertainment of a sort that has always received a popular response. The chief virtue of "Parentage" as motion picture entertainment lies in its universal appeal and in the naturalness and humanness of the players who appear in it. The element of sex does not, as such, enter into the film. The picture can be shown with impunity to the most prudish.

"Parentage" is more or less unique in that its drama is practically nil as compared with its interesting exposition. It is an illustrated essay on parental influence as the factor shaping the character of children, touching both heredity and influence of character after birth. The film proves that "As the twig is bent the tree will grow." The story is made secondary to character drawing at all times.

Mr. Henley has taken two families for his main motive and has followed the lives of two boy-babies from birth to young manhood. One boy is born to loving parents of sterling character. The other is born to a mother who is in fear of her husband, and a father whose character is shady. Throughout the succeeding scenes we see the boy's character shaped by environment, etc., the telling of which entails much footage devoted to scenes in a schoolroom. These schoolroom scenes are brimful of human bits and are overflowing with humorous and appealing incidents. The writer has seldom seen better "kid stuff" than Mr. Henley has obtained. The little ones are all natural, and the grown-ups are folks that one meets in every community—just neighbors of ours.

The cast is headed by Mr. Henley and Barbara Castleton. The acting is uniformly excellent, and on the screen with the leads are seen three quite capable child players—Matty Roubert, Louis Alexander and Frank Goyette. The cast includes, besides those mentioned, Gilbert, Rooney, Bert Busby, William Welch, Anna Lehr, Mary Gray, Alice Wilson and W. De Shields.

Photography throughout is good. The film has been tinted in the most up-to-date fashion, and the cutting deserves especial mention. The titles are generally good, but at times a trifle stilted.

"Today"

Florence Reed in Five-Reel Screen Version of the George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer Stage Success, Presented by Harry Raff.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN its original form the George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer drama, "To-Day," made no apology for itself. Put out boldly as a warning to wives that are not content to live upon their husbands' incomes, the play shows how one married woman sold her favors that she might clothe herself in fine raiment, the punch arriving when the lady keeps an appointment with a strange gentleman and finds herself face to face with her own husband, who promptly strangles her to death.

Such a frank discussion of this phase of the social evil aroused much heated argument. Many highly moral persons proclaimed the play utterly unfit for stage presentation; other equally highly moral persons, including reverend and eminent reformers, were quite as positive that the more the general public learned of such matters the better. All of which served to fill the theater nightly and jam it to overflowing at the matinees, with all sorts and conditions of the gentler sex. Whereat, it is to be inferred, everyone connected with the play felt duly elated at the moral uplift they had bestowed upon mankind in general and their potential erring sisters in particular.

The fact that "To-Day" was an excellent example of playmaking and contained scenes of right living and domestic felicity assisted in driving home the wanton conduct of its heroine and the justice of her terrible end. And the authors had the courage of their convictions. Nothing was glossed over or merely hinted at. If one's moral system needed such a drastic purging the dose was ready in its natural purity—nothing was mixed with it to disguise the taste.

The screen version is administered differently. None of the incidents are softened or left out up to and including the moment when the dead body of the guilty woman lies at her husband's feet. All of the sordid story is retold on the screen. Then, lest the concoction prove too strong, an antidote is handed the spectator in the shape of a dream finish and he learns that nothing has really happened after all, and is edified by seeing the husband and wife embracing as the final scene is dissolved. Verily there is much virtue in a dream!

The acting and production of the screen version is equal in merit to the stage version. Gus Weinberg and Alice Gale repeat their creations of Henry and Emma Morton, the father and mother of the wronged husband, and Florence Reed, Frank Mills, Leonore Harris, Captain Harry Lambart and Kate Lester are worthy substitutes for the other members of the original cast. Miss Reed is exceptionally able as the wife, and the directing by Ralph Ince is fine throughout.

Technically "To-Day" is all it should be. The question for the exhibitor to decide is whether or no it would be wise to show such a subject to the patrons of his house.

Christie Shows Three Comedies

"Oh! For a Wife" and "Those Wedding Bells" Touch on Matrimony and "Father Was Right" Contains a Tramp.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE Christie comedies are maintaining a high standard of wholesomeness. The cast which appears in these three comedies is the same that made the earlier ones so entertaining. They are neither acrobats nor clowns. These are not slap-stick comedies; they are pure farce. The stories are slight but sufficient vehicles for this excellent company of comedians.

Two of the comedies are based on pre-matrimonial quarrels. Each occurs on the day before the wedding. In "Oh! For a Wife" the groom realizes after the quarrel that uncle is coming to the wedding with a check, and so there simply must be a bride. One is hired from an employment agency, but she is late at the ceremony. A boy friend of the groom's is forced into a wedding gown. But the situation is so unpleasant that he escapes through a window and forces a girl to come in and take his place. The girl is the original bride. When she sees Uncle's check, she consents to stand up with the groom. The employment agency bride comes in, a real minister is found, and two weddings are performed.

"Those Wedding Bells" also starts with a quarrel on the day before the wedding. Neal Burns is a very funny groom, and Betty Compson is a lovely bride. After the quarrel with Betty, Neal instead of committing suicide, agrees to marry a woman who must have a husband before midnight in order to inherit a legacy. But before this wedding Betty makes up the quarrel by telephone, and Neal races off to the church late. He slides down the middle aisle standing up. This is a very funny scene.

"Father Was Right" is about Neal and a tramp. Neal refuses to aid the tramp, and father says: "Perhaps he is the victim of circumstances." Then Neal starts off to a distant city to visit the girl his father wants him to marry and whom he has never seen. He leaves his money and valuables in the sleeper and finds it impossible to persuade people that he is not a gentleman tramp. He is forced to accept lodging in a settlement shelter. The girl he is to marry takes him to her house in the morning. He has breakfast in the kitchen, is made assistant cook, and is chased out into the parlor just as father arrives. The tramp keeps bobbing up all through the picture. He is very funny in the restaurant scene where he gets a free lunch.

Lucas Puts Over Strong Characterization.

Wilfred Lucas finds himself again in a political role in the Triangle production "The Food Gamblers," in which he is featured with Elda Miller, under the supervision of Allan Dwan. In this play, which is a timely and forceful comment on the present food problem, Lucas plays the part of a food commissioner whose social conscience is not too sensitive as to keep him from trading on the necessity of his fellows by price manipulations. Because he loves a girl, however, and because he himself comes face to face with starvation, his better nature is awakened, and he wages a successful battle against his own colleagues for constructive legislation.

"Love or Justice," Ince Kay-Bee with Louise Glaum, and "Hater of Men," Ince Kay-Bee with Bessie Barriscale.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

A GENUINE screen story is "Love or Justice," and a strong one, well designed, admirably handled and interpreted by an extraordinary company, Miss Glaum shining out like a fixed star. Never yet has the dual character of woman received adequate portrayal on the screen, but this story approaches the complete conception of her character in a girl of splendid initiative in spite of her faulty early environment. The author, Lambert Hillyer, wisely starts with the environment, rather than show how she got there. She is drifting downward in the company of skilled crooks, whose operations are more or less unconsciously directed by a young lawyer of undoubted talent and unfortunate habits. The latter have demoralized him. The girl, not in the interest of morality, but from womanly pity, cures him, but she cannot cure herself.

The young lawyer's tendency is now upward, and she has reason to regret the good she has done him, yet she continues to help him until their lives part. She sinks for a moment, but she makes a brave effort to redeem herself, a blind attempt to live according to law and custom. She becomes involved in the murder of a detective, with powerful circumstantial evidence against her and the young lawyer now in charge of the prosecuting attorney's case. That he works out the true ends of justice indicates a faulty title to the story, but the title is already forgotten, and the sympathetic and satisfactory end of the story rounds it out with charm.

Scene from "Love or Justice" (Triangle).

Miss Glaum is so instinctively responsive to all required of her role that she never was more delightful in this kind of part. The release is comprehensively satisfying.

"Hater of Men."

"Hater of Men" is a comedy by C. Gardner Sullivan containing many bright and attractive spots, but it is attenuated and has a tendency to preach a moral in the subtitles, a dangerous procedure these days. It is a story of mistaken and overvalued estimate on the part of a bright young girl of the so-called "bohemian life." She develops a mild cynicism as a newspaper reporter and decides never to get married. She becomes a trifler in her social relations, and finds ultimately that men do not care, supposedly not, for "toy" girls in the way they do for homebodys. It is a very nice little sunday-school lesson to teach—"be good and commonplace"—though the lesson is not really taught in the end. The alledged "Hater of men" is seen almost constantly in their company, avoiding her own sex, and depending upon the kind offices of a philosophical old bachelor to restore her to social recognition.

The story has large possibilities, and it starts off with large promise, but the author appears to have run out of material. Scenes of no particular interest are drawn out to great length; there are numerous unemotional close-ups, and we are called upon to watch the leading woman make her pet dog sit up on his hind feet for unnumbered feet of film, not an evidence of exhaustless imiginative resource, but rather of creative fatigue overwork. Miss Barriscale also shows signs of hard work, but she is always a charming personality, and she brightens many of the dull places with her vivacity and keen interpretation of feelings. The comedy is clean and fairly effective, but not up to Mr. Sullivan's high standard.

"Heroic France"

Eight-Part Collection of War Scenes Contributed by Rothacker to Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PICTURES from the battlefront of the European war, dating backward, are liable to possess more or less similarity to those already shown. It is possible, however, to delve among the thousands of feet of film photographed at the front and find now and then something a little different from what has been seen. In the series of scenes photographed by Merl La Roy for the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company and presented on the Mutual program, some material of this class will be found; but the majority of it is merely a repetition of what has been placed before the public with considerable frequency during the past year or so.

The collection opens with personalities including Marshal Joffre, King George of England and Queen Mary, Premier Asquith, Lloyd George, President Poincaire, A. Bonar Law, M. Berthelot, Sir Robert Borden, General Dubois, Frederick Palmer and E. Price Bell, war correspondents; Briand, Georges Clemenceau, General Roques and others of equal prominence in the present war. Among the scenes that follow and which are unusually attractive are a view of Paris taken from an aeroplane, a photograph taken from a balloon illustrating the difference in steadiness between the balloon and the aeroplane, Alaskan dogs and sleds conveying wounded men over the Vosges mountains, the surrender of German prisoners, scenes in a Red Cross hospital showing preparing of bandages and dressings, and the wounded being conveyed to hospitals a few hundred yards from the first line trenches.

Then there are scenes showing the artillerymen rushing to their dugouts for protection at the too close approach of the enemy shell fire, and there are evidences that the sculptor has not forgotten his art even in the trenches, for there are to be seen above the entrances to some of the dugouts samples of this work. Soldiers quartered in a stone quarry in their leisure moments make gravestones to mark the graves of dead comrades, and airmen long since dead smile at us from the screen along with some of those still pursuing their duties. Various kinds of flying machines are exploited for the benefit of the spectator, and we are permitted the joys of a flight in a Nieuport machine moving at the rate of 140 miles an hour at an altitude of 7,000 feet above the military encampment.

We find also that the soldiers at the front dabble some in gardening, and at one point we are shown a swimming pool built by the Zouaves in which the soldiers once in a while refresh themselves. In addition to these more unusual scenes there are scenes in actual battle showing the big guns, and in fact all kinds of guns at work. It also includes the landing of Italian troops at Salonica and the passage of the British troops through the Balkans.

Our criticism of the picture is that it has been assembled in rather an incongruous fashion, and that it would benefit materially by being cut down to about half its present footage.

"The Mystery of No. 47"

A Comedy Drama of English Life with a Clever Plot Filmed by Selig—Ralph Herz, Well Known American Star, in the Leading Role—Otis B. Thayer, Director.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

A MYSTERY—and a comedy at that—is a difficult combination for the moving picture to master successfully. If the moving picture is to be considered a complete form of expression by itself, it would fail in this instance very conclusively; for no less than 165 sub-titles are required to aid the pictures. This is at the rate of 33 to every thousand feet, and every one of them is required to clear up the complications of the mystery or to give point to the comedy action.

Director Otis B. Thayer has been most painstaking to make things clear to the spectator, and in creating the proper atmosphere, so far as the scenes are concerned.

The story is laid in England and the characters are English. Irwin Molyneux and his wife Harriet live in their own home, at 47 Hyacinth road, St. John's Wood, London. He is a scholarly man, with a love for old china and flowers. Their means permit a limited number of household servants, of whom a lady's maid, Eva Wilson, figures prominently in the story.

The Bishop of Bedford, cousin of Mr. Molyneux, writes that he is coming to visit them, much to their distress, as he is an extravagant diner and their means are limited. To add to their difficulties, the cook leaves at a moment's notice, the day of his Lordship's arrival. Mrs. Molyneux serves as cook, and Mr. Molyneux explains to the Bishop that she had been hurriedly summoned to the country, as they disliked to let "Cousin" Bedford know their reduced circumstances. Then his Lordship said that he would remain until she returned, and this led to other fibs on the part of Molyneux which resulted in his fleeing from his home with his wife to a small hotel in the city, leaving the Bishop alone at No. 47 Hyacinth road.

The Right Rev. gentleman immediately jumped to the conclusion that Mrs. Molyneux had been murdered by her husband, and that the latter had fled to some place unknown, with the pretty housemaid, Eva Wilson. Then he phoned Scotland Yard for a detective, and the big murder mystery was duly heralded in the great dailies. The resulting complications furnish the comedy of the story, which shows that Bishop Bedford, busybody and trouble maker, was hit by his own petard, and that Eva Wilson, the lady's housemaid, was a lady in her own right and that she is loved by Lord Francis Phillamore, an officer in the Horse Guards Blue.

Ralph Herz gives an excellent impersonation of Irwin Molyneux, the middle-aged English gentleman—scholar and faddist. Many of the situations call for delicate touches that bring out the pecularities of the man, and Mr. Herz places them with the skill of the artist. The Mrs. Molyneux of Miss Nellie Hartley is another worthy characterization.

Miss Louizetta Valentine's Eva Wilson is a fine portrayal. Especially in the scenes where she waits at dinner on Mr. Molyneux and the Bishop, does she strike the keynote of comedy. The cook of the Molyneux household is mirthfully represented by May White, whose girth and bearing fit the part to a dot.

James Fulton, who should have been mentioned before this in my remarks, gives the impressive conception of the well-fed Bishop of Bedford. It certainly appears to me that the author of the story has rather man-handled this character. A bishop of the English Established Church must be a man of lofty character, a scholar and a gentleman, and to have him called a "reprobate" by his own wife, and a "crook" by Mrs. Molyneux passes my comprehension of the fitness of things.

The release was made June 4 through K-E-S-E service.

"The Field of Honor"

Five-Reel Butterfly Based on Civil War Story Written by Minister to Belgium.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS story of the civil war period, by Brand Whitlock, is an artistic and pleasing variation from a well known type of screen offerings. It gets its chief dramatic quality, not so much from stirring battle panoramas, though these are present in full number, but from a story of strong psychological appeal. This carries through the entire production and rises to its highest interest in the last reel.

Allen Holubar is responsible for this production and has brought out the salient features in a creditable way. He himself plays the role of Wade Clayton, whose love remains true to Laura, even after she marries his rival, George Baring. These three roles practically carry the story, though a cast numbering hundreds has been used in making the realistic and picturesque battle scenes. M. K. Wilson does his usual careful, effective work as George Baring, the cowardly officer who sends his men into battle, but fails to go with them. The part is an interesting one. The theme itself has been dealt with many times, but has some unexpected turns in it here. Louise Lovely is appealing as the fickle girl, who plays hob with the affections of the two men.

First come the opening scenes of the war and then Wade marches to battle with his command. George loiters behind until his wife becomes ashamed and finally goes with great reluctance. He confesses his cowardice to Wade. Later he is shot by one of his own men, while skulking behind the lines, and left on the field for dead. Wade returns home after the war and tells his wife her husband died leading his men to victory. Then comes further dramatic moments when George suddenly reappears.

Others in the cast are Sidney Dean, Helen Wright, Frank MacQuarrie and Frankie Lee.

"A Bit of Kindling"

Jackie Saunders Featured in Entertaining Five-part Horkheimer.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

ONE of the most pleasing of recent Mutual feature productions is "A Bit of Kindling." It is a five-reeler made by Horkheimer and features Jackie Saunders, who, by the way, does herself credit as an all around scraper. She has been given an opportunity of which she has made the most. The picture has been well directed by Sherwood MacDonald and moves rapidly and entertainingly with a competent cast.

The story by Douglas Bronson tells of the daughter of a drunkard who makes her living by selling newspapers. Her name is "Sticks" and by fist force she makes a place for herself in her profession and holds it until one day fate takes a hand and she is knocked unconscious in trying to rescue one of her patrons from robbers, and placed by his side in a box car, awaking hours later to find herself in new surroundings.

In the course of events they find work with a railroad gang, the young man swapping the dress suit and silk hat with which he has landed at the country depot for a suit more in keeping with his present work and circumstances. Together they start a new life and are progressing happily when the young man's friends seek him out and he returns to the city with them. Sticks is later picked up on the road in an exhausted condition by a rich elderly man, who adopts and educates her. The story closes after the paths of the young people have again crossed and their eventual marriage appears to be a certainty.

"The Blood of the Arena"

Five-Part Cosmos-Kinema Is Thoroughly Spanish—Story Traverses Life of a Toreador.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

"THE Blood of the Arena," made by Cosmos-Kinema, is a five-reel photoplay that is thoroughly Spanish. The title means that blood spilled on the turf of a bullring is nothing to the spectators even when it is the life blood of a popular hero. Sand is sprinkled over it and the slaughter goes on. This photoplay is made from a Spanish novel of the same name by Vincente Blasco Ibanez, based on first hand material. It tells the life story of a toreador, his rise to the heights of popular favor, his decline, and his ignominicus death in the bull ring.

The characters and actors are both Spanish. Several native dances are introduced. One is performed by real gypsies at the Charles V. fountain in Granada. Everything is Spanish except the titles. These are rather long and too frequent. The backgrounds are authentic spots in Seville, Madrid, Cordova and Granada. Persons who know Spain will recognize the post office and the cathedral in Seville. The spouting fountains in the Court of the Lions in the Alhambra look more natural than ever in a motion picture.

Scenes on the farm of a bull breeder are shown: the selection of the young bulls, and how the older ones are decoyed by tame oxen and boxed for transporation to the bull ring. Nauseating details have been carefully eliminated from the several scenes of bull fighting. The only scene that might be revolting to Americans is the thrusting of the fire darts into the bull's neck in the last reel. The fatal goring of the toreador which follows is such a long shot and so brief that it may show an authentic killing. But it is not shocking. The blood on the arena makes a considerable puddle.

To American audiences this picture will not appeal as a drama but as an excellent Spanish scenic of more than ordinary interest.

"The Gray Ghost"

Universal's Newest Serial Will Appear June 28—Has Notable Cast of Players.

THE Gray Ghost, that elusive individual whose activities were so graphically told in Arthur Somers Roche's story, "Loot," which stirred millions of readers of The Saturday Evening Post, will begin to unravel mysteries for the millions of photoplay-goers on June 25, when the first episode of Universal's serial extraordinary will have its initial showing in thousands of motion picture theaters.

This the first Saturday Evening Post serial ever vizualized on the screen, and, needless to say, Universal is sparing no expense or effort to make it the greatest of all serials.

That they are pursuing the proper means is evidenced by the cast selected and the fact that Stuart Paton, who directed "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Voice on the Wire," has been named to produce the film version of "Loot."

The cast is a superior one, including Emory Johnson, Eddie Polo, Harry Carter and beautiful Priscilla Dean. Harry Carter, who is to portray the title role, has become famous as a dress-suit bad man. Surrounded as he is by a crew of international crooks, he is practically immune from police molestation. He governs these allies not by any supernatural power or hypnotic influence, but by sheer strength of will, and dominates them completely.

Emory Johnson, who characterizes Hildreth, the young English lawyer, is one of the handsomest young men on the screen today.

Beautiful Priscilla Dean, who plays Morn Light, "The Girl," was cast for this role after due consideration of her splendid work under Lois Weber in "Even As You and I" and "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle." As Morn Light she presents somewhat of a mystery, she is in the Gray Ghost's company a great part of the time, yet she plainly does not love him. Working with Hildreth shows that he is one that is destined to take her as his bride.

Then there is Eddie Polo—the Fearless One, as he is known about the studios—who plays the secretary to Hildreth. And Eddie's fearlessness is brought into play quite frequently in aiding Hildreth in frustrating the Gray Ghost and his murderous gang. It was Eddie who furnished the thrills in other Universal serials, especially "The Broken Coin" and "Liberty." He is acknowledged king of stunt-pullers, having performed breath-taking feats as acrobat, high diver, animal trainer and aviator.

The story principally evolves about the necklace. Hildreth is hard beset by the Gray Ghost and his thugs for possession of the jewels. A cable has been sent to Arabin, the manufacturer of the necklace, advising him that Hildreth will call for it and wil pay over the two million dollars. The Gray Ghost, through an accomplice in Arabin's employ, gains possession of the cable and sets his trap. Mildreth escapes through the aid of Morn Light, who ostensibly is the Ghost's sweetheart. Through strenuous scenes and stirring ones these lovers go until the mystery of the Gray Ghost is cleared. Then, as the soul-stirring climax, is revealed the true relationship of the Gray Ghost and Morn Light.

Beban and Peters Lead Paramount

Week of June 18 Features "A Roadside Impresario" and "The Heir of the Ages."

TWO Pallas productions of unusual excellence, "A Roadside Impresario," starring George Beban, and "The Heir of the Ages," starring House Peters, will be released by Paramount in the week of June 18. That same week Paramount will release the seventy-first edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the seventy-second of the series of weekly trips around the world, personally conducted by Burton Holmes, when he will take his fellow travelers to visit "Fruitful Florida," and a Klever Komedy entitled "Commuting," in which Victor Moore is starred.

Mr. Beban wrote "A Roadside Impresario" himself, and it is a most unusual serio-comedy photodrama. Mr. Beban is surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including Harrison Ford, Fred Huntley, Adele Farrington and Julia Faye. Donald Crisp directed.

In "The Heir of the Ages" Mr. Peters is seen as a primitive man in the days of cave life and showing the human instincts of unselfishness and love. Later the situations which confronted him ages ago come again when he is superintendent of a mine in a small Western town. In the cast supporting House Peters are included Eugene Pallette, Nina Byron, Henry Barrows and Adele Farrington.

In the seventy-first edition of the Paramount Pictographs four particularly interesting subjects are dealt with, that of "How a Sub-Sea Cable is Repaired" at the bottom of the ocean's floor, thousands of feet below the surface of the water; "An Animated Diagrammatical Drawing" of the German mine-laying submarine and information regarding "Traveling Forts;" "What Women Are Doing to Prepare the Soil in Times of War," and a cartoon entitled "The Evolution of the Dachshund."

Burton Holmes in his seventy-second trip to "Fruitful Florida" is now returning to this country after having spent nearly three months touring with his fellow-journeyers in the Orient.

Victor Moore in his latest single reel comedy "Commuting," which is released this week, has made a hit. He settled down with his family in a "dollar down and a dollar when they catch you" bungalow at Bentwood and there, after having the worst struggles of his young life, he succeeds in burning down the home by his own misdoings.

Hooking Up in a Hurry

How Anna Little Signed with Balshofer and Made Arizona in Five Days.

Five days after receiving a telegraphic request to come West to appear with Harold Lockwood, Metro star, in "Under Handicap," Anna Little had signed a contract, gathered her wardrobe in Los Angeles by telegrams and special messengers, journeyed from New York to Prescott, Arizona, and was in make-up and at work in the picture.

The day before the Metro-Yorke company was to have left Los Angeles for the location in Arizona, Fred J. Balshofer, the president and director, found himself without a leading woman. He required for the picture a capable actress who was a good rider. It looked easy; there should have been many with those qualities in Southern California. But the time for catching the train was twenty-four hours away and Balshofer and Lockwood had scoured the motion picture colony in vain. Then someone glanced at a picture of Anna Little on the wall in Balshofer's office.

Miss Little was in New York. Calling her mother on the phone, Balshofer secured Miss Little's New York address and sent a telegram. An hour later Miss Little left New York, after sending directions to Los Angeles for gathering her Western wardrobe.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

SAGE BRUSH LAW (Kalem).—A two-reel episode of "The American Girl" series. The number is one of the best yet. The action is fast and the story good. It is a Western that should especially please the followers of this series. A review was printed on page 1800 of the issue of June 16.

A DAY OUT OF JAIL (Kalem).—A one-reel comedy with Ham and Bud as escaped jailbirds who almost but not quite play the roles of Cupid for their keeper. Henry Murdoch helps out with the fun. The reel is a fairly good comedy number.

THE POT OF GOLD (Kalem).—A two-reel episode of "The American Girl" series. A picture that builds up strong suspense, and is full of good riding. An excellent Western picture. The story tells of how Madge King and her father track down a murderer fifteen years after the crime was committed. The criminal turns out to be the mayor. Marin Sais and the usual company of Kalemites appear. Reviewed in this issue.

THE FUGITIVE PASSENGER (Kalem).—The first two-reel episode of the new Stingaree series. Stingaree escapes from the detectives and with Howie, his chum, gets back to the bush country of Australia, to resume his old life as a gentleman bushranger with violin and monocle. True Boardman is back in the role of Stingaree which he created in the original series.

THE JACKAROO (Kalem).—The second two-reel episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. The backgrounds are excellent and look just like Australia. The Jackaroo, a tenderfoot apprentice on a sheep ranch, captures Stingaree, collects the reward to pay off the debt on the ranch, and Stingaree escapes from jail. Paul C. Hurst, the creator of Howie, appears in this picture.

VANITY AND SOME SAELES (Broadway Star).—"Vanity and Some Sables," adapted from one of the O. Henry books, makes good entertainment. It handles the case of a young crook who reforms and marries, and has a narrow escape from arrest on a false accusation of stealing a thousand dollar set of sables. The fact of the matter is he had bought a set of imitation sables for his wife and trying to make her believe that they were the real thing almost costs him his happiness.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE SILENT LIE, May 28.—The merits of this five-reel picture directed by R. A. Walsh are many, and it will interest and entertain. It tells a powerful; human story and is acted by a fine cast headed by Miriam Cooper. It is reviewed on another page of this issue.

THE SLAVE, June 3.—This five-reel picture with Valeska Suratt is novel in its way and interesting. It is a dream story and has the flavor of a real nightmare, though it is not till the close that we learn it to be solely a dream. Valeska Suratt's costumes are an important part of its interest. For a longer review see another page in this issue.

SUDS OF LOVE, June 3.—A comedy filled with laughable doings and that seemed to please the audience at the Academy of Music in New York a good deal. The background is a laundry and the characters are well acted and provoke many a hearty guffaw. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE QUESTION, June 11.—This five-reel photoplay has a dream finish. It is well acted by a cast headed by Harry Morey and Alice Joyce. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

K-E-S-E, Inc.

THE MYSTERY OF NO. 47 (Selig), June 4.—This is a diverting photo-comedy-drama of English life, in which the clearing up of a mystery furnishes the mirth. Ralph Herz, the well-known stage star, appears in the leading role and he is well supported. A detailed review will be found on another page in this issue.

FILLING HIS OWN SHOES (Essanay), June 11.—Founded on a magazine novelette, this five-reel romantic comedy, in which Bryant Washburn plays the part of a shoe salesman who joins the Red Cross and receives a legacy of three girls, wards of a Turkish colonel he helped, tells a mildly interesting story. The foreign settings are good. The foreign characters are interesting. The principal characters are American.

THE WONDERFUL EVENT (Essanay), June 20.—Little Mary McAllister makes a hit in this number when she goes to seek for a little brother. She unknowingly kidnaps a baby, but it later develops that the baby is not the kind that could be a little brother. But things end happily, later, when the little girl is presented with a real baby brother. There is much subtle humor in this release.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL TOURS No. 31 (Gaumont), June 5.—The subjects contained in this issue of the Mutual Tours Around the World are "Tangier, Morocco," "Monastery of Piedra, Saragossa, Spain," "Winter in Galicia" and "St. Kitts, British West Indies." A well-illustrated number.

In his effort to escape he gets mixed up in an elopement, and is discovered in the trunk in which the lover of the story is trying to conceal and carry away his sweetheart.

TILLIE OF THE NINE LIVES (La Salle), June 19.—In this farce comedy the La Salle pig still holds forth and it may be said is the most comical and pleasing individual in the cast. It acts as a messenger of love carrying from Tillie to her lover an appeal for rescue which the little pig brings in on the curl of his tail. This will be found fairly amusing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Astra), June 24.—The final installment of the "Mystery of the Double Cross" serial will show a number of people that they have guessed wrong in regard to the Masked Stranger. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS (Combitone), June 24.—This number of the Combitone series shows that Texas is stronger on goats than on scenery. A flock of seventeen thousand Angoras is shown. Also the Pecos River bridge, the second highest in the world.

WHEN BABY FORGOT (Lasalida), June 24.—Little Marie Osborne makes her first appearance with the new company in this five-reel photoplay. She is as clever as ever and the picture has a number of amusing incidents. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

BUNGALOWING (Klever), June 4.—This is an intensely amusing comedy in which Victor Moore as the comedy star takes his family bungalowing. Nothing is as it was pictured by the real estate agent and after getting used to conditions a cyclone comes along and sets things moving at a lively pace. Very funny.

GIVING BECKY A CHANCE (Morosco), June 7.—This is a rattling good photoplay of its class, and full of heart interest. Vivian Martin is the star. A longer review was printed on page 1799 of the issue of June 16.

A ROADSIDE IMPRESARIO (Pallas), June 18.—George Beban is the author and star of this five-reel comedy-drama which is filled with amusing episodes. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

LOVE OF JUSTICE (Ince-Kay Bee), June 10.—A powerful and dramatic story told in splendid fashion, with an exceptionally fine interpretation of the leading part by Louise Glaum.

HATER OF MEN (Ince-Kay Bee).—A comedy of social life with Bessie Barriscale in the lead. Bright in spots, but somewhat attenuated. Fairly good.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

THE CIRCUS OF LIFE (Butterfly), June 4.—A five-reel number, written by E. J. Clawson and produced by Rupert Julian. The story concerns a number of people living in a rooming house. Mamie, the wife of a strapping driver of a brewery wagon, is betrayed by an artist. A child is born, known as Daisy May. Danny, the husband, loves the child, in spite of the facts in the case. Love and jealousy, an exciting runaway, a raid on a gambling house and a frustrated elopement are among the motives and events brought out. The action is swift, once the story gets started, and the attention is firmly held. A strong child interest is a feature. Zoe Rae, Elsie Jane Wilson, Pomeroy Cannon, Harry Carter and others appear.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 75 (Universal), June 6.—Cyclone pictures from the Middle West lead this issue, which also contains "Liberty Bond" parade in Chicago, review of Harvard soldiers, earthquake scenes in Italy and interesting war side lights.

BARTERED YOUTH (Laemmle), June 20.—The story of a young woman who married an old man for his money. She loves a younger man, but the latter tires of her and marries a girl. The wife then returns to her aged husband, having learned her lesson. William V. Mong, the author, appears, supported by Gretchen Lederer, M. K. Wilson and Mollie Malone. This contains food for thought and is presented attractively. It is better than the average one-reel subject.

WHERE IS MY CHI-ELD? (L-KO), June 20.—A two-reel comic, featuring Dan Russell and Gladys Varden. This has a characteristic nonsense plot, not quite so amusing as in some offerings, but with some laughable moments. Mr. Weazelbiffer's machine for ejecting book agents and other boresome visitors from his office furnishes considerable fun. The baby scenes in the latter part of the picture incline a little too much toward rough handling, though most observers will see that a substitute was used in various instances.

HELEN GRAYSON'S STRATEGY (Rex), June 21.—A two-reel number, by Willis Wood, featuring Irene Hunt, Malcolm Blevins and L. C. Shumway. This is melodramatic in its general tendency and the plot does not move naturally in some scenes. At the same time the story gets a hold on the interest. It concerns a wife, a husband and "the other man." The husband shoots himself because of his marital troubles. The wife, who has repented, plants a bracelet on her former lover and brands him as a thief to save her own reputation. This possesses considerable strength.

SHE MARRIED HER HUSBAND (Victor), June 22.—A two-reel comedy of the farcical sort, by J. Grubb Alexander, featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail. The young man, cast off by his father for fast living, decides to become a Hindu Swami. He meets Jane, first in the park with her dog, then later at a seance conducted by himself. They elope, are separated immediately after the ceremony, and then elope again, after numerous adventures. The plot is light, but full of good action and diverting scenes.

LONE LARRY (Bison), June 23.—A live Western subject, in two reels featuring Kingsley Benedict, Eileen Sedgwick, Vester Pegg and others. The plot concerns a bandit and a young millionaire, whose photographs are mixed up in a newspaper. The millionaire is nearly lynched as a result of this blunder. The story works up with considerable strength and has good suspense in the closing scenes. The photography is unusually clear and attractive.

A BURGLAR'S BRIDE (Joker), June 23.—A comedy number, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Gale Henry and Jack Dill. The former plays a romantic maid and the latter is a burglar known as "Soapy" Jack. The maid dresses in her mistress' gowns and so captivates the burglar that he marries her. This is quite entertaining in plot and has an amusing close.

World Pictures.

THE STOLEN PARADISE, June 18.—There is a good deal of human interest in this five-reel photoplay, which tells of a woman's struggle for happiness. The picture is well produced. Ethel Clayton plays the heroine. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

ROBESPIERRE (Export & Import Film Co.), June.—A seven-reel drama of the French Revolution. The picture was produced in Italy, and contains many very good spectacular scenes. Photography is excellent, and there is much pictorial beauty in the film. Its basic theme is Liberty, and the story tells a chapter of French history. A review is printed in another column of this issue.

PARENTAGE (Frank N. Seng), June.—A seven-reel state rights picture of considerable worth both as entertainment and propaganda. The picture was produced by Hobart Henley, and is a film exposition of the influence of parents' characters over the characters of their offspring. There is humor and human interest in the picture that should get it over with almost any audience. A full review is printed in the review columns of this issue.

STICKS (Horkheimer), June.—A five-reel production featuring Jackie Saunders with a competent cast. The production is very entertaining and takes the form of a comedy-drama in which a news girl is adopted by a rich man and marries a man with whom she has been thrown in contact while selling papers. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE AUTOMOBILE OWNER GETS ACQUAINTED WITH HIS AUTOMOBILE (Cameragraph), June.—An interesting one-reel picture showing in a clear manner by means of many painstaking closeups how to care for an automobile. This picture will be of general interest to the public, especially to those unfortunates who drive cars and lack a knowledge of technicalities. The picture is reviewed elsewhere.

HEROIC FRANCE (Rothacker), June.—An eight-part film encompassing many scenes of the European war. The picture could be cut down to three or four reels without retarding its chances of success. While some of the material may be new to many of us, most of it has been covered many times in other pictures from the battle front. Or it might be that these scenes assembled in a little different fashion would mend the situation.

Paralta to Cut Its Own Films.

Also Will Discard the Practice of Having All Subjects of Arbitrary Length.

UNDER the contracts existing between Paralta Plays, Inc., and the Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan producing companies, the Paralta company will have control of the cutting and assembling of the films of each production, which will be only of such length as the dramatic merit of the story may warrant.

No effort will be made to produce a uniform number of feet in releases. If a story is worth but 4,200 feet it will be told in that length. If 8,500 to 9,000 feet are required, it will be given approximately nine reels. Laboring for specific footage will have no place in either the Barriscale or Kerrigan studios.

As there will be no fixed length to Paralta releases, all that is vital to the telling of the story may be retained. The assembling and cutting of a Paralta Play will be the work of competent, collective minds—not the duty of one person who may exercise arbitrary whims at will. Better results from this plan are quite certain.

UNITED ESTABLISHES EQUIPMENT RECORD.

With a view to helping the operator and exhibitor, the Service Department of the United Theater Equipment Corporation has compiled a complete and up-to-the-minute record of every part, accessory, machine and equipment used in motion picture theaters. The data compiled is very exhaustive and thoroughly accurate, and each individual part, supply or machine is separately indexed and so filed that full information regarding it is individually indexed and readily accessible.

MORE COMEDIES FOR GENERAL.

News of the resumption of the tried and popular "Pokes and Jabs" Comedies, produced by the Jaxon Film Company, comes from General Film, which will again handle this product. The "Pokes and Jabs" releases are one-reel laugh-maker subjects of the lively kind and have long been in favor. A most excellent set of these subjects is now ready ahead, it is stated, and the first release will be that entitled "Are Actors People?" June 22. Burns and Stull, the eccentric team, as usual, will be featured in this group of comedies.

It is the expressed endeavor of General Film to meet the demand for reliable short subjects, especially of the comedy type, and the Jaxon Company is energetically co-operating.

Shady State Rights Methods

W. E. Shallenberger and Robert W. Priest, of Arrow Corporation, Tell of Conditions Found During Trip West.

FURTHER light is thrown on the shady methods employed by certain classes of men operating exclusively in the state rights field in an interview with W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, and Robert W. Priest, also of the Arrow, who recently returned to New York from a trip west in the interests of "The Deemster." They report that they came in contact with conditions in the state rights field that are stigma upon the industry—conditions that, if allowed to continue, will soon strangle state rights marketing.

Cut-throat competition among buyers, exhibitors and every other factor is prevalent, according to "Doc" Shallenberger. Everyone is trying to crush the other fellow, and very often crooked and unfair methods are resorted to.

"There is an idea prevalent among a certain class of state rights operators that producers should 'grub-stake' them," said Mr. Shallenberger. "There is no legitimate reason on earth why a producer should finance a state rights 'operator' and so tie up his production and create unjust competition for honest buyers who lay down real cash. Yet the fever is becoming so widespread that it is inoculating some of the real buyers because they see how easy it is for some of the imposters to hoodwink the unwary.

"It would not be so bad if these fellows, when they get a feature, would comb a territory and get every cent out of the territory that could—and should—be obtained, but they do not. They have nothing at stake and skim only the cream of the bookings. Then as soon as another sucker comes along with something new these parasites drop the first picture and start to skim the cream with the second. If these so-called state rights operators had their own money tied up and were compelled to work a feature they would not be so quick to flit from one to another.

"Besides cheating the producer in this manner, these 'birds' have several of their own little schemes by which they further 'gyp' the producer. To illustrate one of their pet games, let us take a certain unnamed state. Say John Jones is handling in that state 'The Blank,' a big film that has received thousands of dollars' worth of advertising and that is known as a first class attraction. Mr. Jones also owns for that state 'The Dash,' a junk film that nobody has ever heard of, and which Mr. Jones would be glad to rent for three dollars a day if anybody would take it. The price of 'The Blank' is $75 a day. Well, Mr. Jones is a wise 'bird' and he puts the screws on the producer. He gets the producer where the hair is shortest, and the producer, in desperation, is willing to take as low as $40 a day for 'The Blank.' Then Mr. Jones goes to Mr. Exhibitor—who knows that 'The Blank' is worth $75 a day—and says: 'I'll let you have 'The Blank' and 'The Dash' for $70 a day—you can run 'The Blank' one day and 'The Dash' the next.' Of course, Mr. Jones makes it plain to Mr. Exhibitor that he can't get 'The Blank' for $40 unless he takes 'The Dash' for $30. So wise Mr. Jones makes out two contracts—one for 'The Blank' at $40 and one for 'The Dash' at $30. Whereby Mr. Jones, on the strength and worth of 'The Blank,' gets $30 a day for the worthless 'The Dash.'

"I could go on for hours telling of these snap practices. I am merely stating the facts as we found them. I believe that the trade journals should do all in their power to discourage this class of 'operators,' and in turn encourage the hundreds of straightforward and clean-working men in the business."

Mr. Shallenberger also had much to say regarding the methods of the so-called brokers who try to grab a commission merely by beating a buyer to a sales offer and then claiming credit for any sale. He gave specific instances, and told how one "broker" was beaten at his own game.

"Tanks at Ancre" for State Rights

Pathe to Distribute Official War Picture at Request of British Government—Red Cross Interested.

AT THE request of the British government, through Official War Pictures, Inc., of which W. K. Vanderbilt is president, Pathe will sell on the state rights basis "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," the five-reel official war picture that recently broke attendance at the Strand Theater, New York. It is stated that the request for state rights distribuion was made by the British Government in order to get immediate returns on what is said to be one of the largest investments ever made in a motion picture.

The great bulk of the amount received by Pathe for these pictures will go to British War Relief. With this knowledge before them heads of branches of the Red Cross Society in virtually every American city are reported to be anxious to put "The Tanks in the Battle of the Ancre" in the best theaters or other auditoriums available, and to charge high admission prices to raise money for the Red Cross Society. Very large sums were received at specials showing of the pictures in New York, St. Louis, Chicago and other cities.

Pathe has just booked "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" and "The Battle of the Somme" to representatives of the Red Cross from Toledo, Ohio, to run each picture a week. Rochester will also run both pictures in connection with the Red Cross, and about one hundred other big bookings have been wired for approval to C. R. Seelye, business manager of Pathe. "We will accept some of these bookings," Mr. Seelye said, "where it will not interfere with the state rights buyer."

"Since these pictures have been booked in various communities we know what rental each and every theater can afford to pay," said a Pathe official. "From theater-record cards received every month we have found the total rental possible from all the theaters in each state. In order to give a state rights buyer a profit of 100 per cent., we have divided the total rental that the theaters will pay by one-half, and that is the price we are asking the state rights buyer to pay. This is not guess-work, it is based on the drawing-power the picture has already shown."

RIFKIN GETS "ONE LAW FOR BOTH" FOR NEW ENGLAND.

Herman Rifkin, president of the Eastern Feature Film Company, of Boston, has secured Ivan Film Productions' "One Law for Both" for the New England territory, comprising the states of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Mr. Rifkin has made several trips to New York in the last few weeks in connection with the acquirement of this picture, and remarking upon his purchase of the feature, stated: "It was after very careful consideration and much deliberation that I secured 'One Law for Both' for the territory in which I operate. After seeing the vast audiences at the Lyric theater, at which the picture is being exhibited, and mingling with the spectators and getting their personal opinion, I realized that this was indeed a big-time feature and worthy of expert exploitation by a showman."

"SUBMARINE EYE" SOLD FOR ILLINOIS.

Williamson Brothers announce that they have just closed a deal with Jones, Linick & Shaefer of Chicago whereby the latter concern will take "The Submarine Eye," and after giving it an extended run at the Studebaker theater will book it throughout Illinois.

Rex O. Lawhead, who served in the capacity of manager for that attraction, is now in charge of the Studebaker showing, and is the general Western representative for the Williamson Brothers.

SIDNEY LUST SECURES MO-TOY COMEDIES.

Sidney B. Lust, of Washington, D. C., has secured rights to Mo-Toy Comedies, the product of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, for the territory embracing Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware, North Carolina and Virginia. Mr. Lust states that he believes the half-reel animated doll subjects are the best pictures of their length obtainable at the present time.

"Garden of Allah" Selling Fast

All Plans Completed for a Sumptuous Presentation of Nine-Reel Selig Subject.

THE Selig Polyscope Company announces "The Garden of Allah" is promising to become one of the most popular and profitable of state right's propositions. The Selig Company announces the formulation of a trade journal exploitation campaign in connection with the picture. The production is selling on sight, according to the Selig company, which announces recent sales as follows:

California, Nevada and Arizona; Sol Lesser, All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, Cal.; Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana, M. Rosenberg, De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, Wash.; Indiana and Kentucky, Robert Leiber, Indianapolis, Ind.; New Jersey, J. Frank Hall, Newark, N. J.; Ohio, Leon Netter, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and South Dakota, Jack Elliott, Minneapolis, Minn.; Illinois and Michigan, Edmund Allen Film Corporation, Chicago; Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia and North Carolina, E. R. Haas, Hy-Art Masterplays Company.

The Selig Company believes that as soon as the exploitation campaign is inaugurated "The Garden of Allah" will go even more quickly than did "Beware of Strangers."

"The Garden of Allah" has not as yet been extensively shown in theaters, but the few presentations portend a big success.

The drama was produced by Colin Campbell under the personal direction of Mr. Selig. Not a scene is introduced that is not to be found in Robert Hichens' famous book. Not a word will be found in sub-titles that cannot be found in the beautiful text of the story. Helen Ware enacts the leading role and is supported by Thomas Santschi and an unusually capable cast, including Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale, Matt B. Snyder, Frank Clark, Cecil Holland, James Bradbury, Al W. Filson and others.

The film is nine reels in length and the art titles are the work of Van Nise. The scenic effects are elaborate and beautiful, particularly the scenes in the desert and the Oriental cities. The picture carries beautiful tinting and toning effects. Among the more exciting episodes in the drama are the desert sandstorm, the charge of the Bedouins, the meeting of Boris and Captain DeTrevignac in the desert and the renunciation. Mr. Selig has provided a beautiful orchestration to accompany the showing. The score is in sixteen parts and carries a combination cue sheet.

MO-TOY COMEDIES POPULAR.

Reports from all over the United States to the Peter Pan Film Corporation indicate an ever-increasing demand for their Mo-Toy Comedies. One of the more recent territorial buyers, M. R. Dick, of Minneapolis, who controls the rights to the 500-foot animated doll pictures in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Northern Wisconsin, has been formed by the demand to order extra prints. His experience with Mo-Toys is being duplicated by nearly all of those who control territories.

The latest buyer of territory for Mo-Toy Comedies is W. T. Binford, of Denver, who has secured the rights for them for Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico.

"THE VILLAIN" KING-BEE'S FIFTH.

King-Bee's fifth comedy, which will be distributed in July, bears the title "The Villain." We have seen Billy West as a stage hand, as a waiter masquerading as a hero, as a bake house comedian, and as a spurious artist. Now we are to contemplate him as a real honest-to-goodness villain, guilty of the most atrocious deeds of derring do. The picture is at present in the cutting room, and, as usual, Louis Burstein's problem is to know what to sacrifice and what to leave in—the picture is so crammed with the characteristic good things of King-Bee Comedies. Baby Hardy, Leo White and Bud Ross are also in the cast.

WORK PROGRESS ON "PERSUASIVE PEGGY."

Peggy Hyland and her company of players, including her leading man, "Bill" Davidson, have returned to New York City from Long Island, where they have been filming the exterior scenes of the first Mayfair production, "Persuasive Peggy," under the direction of Charles Brabin.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, has expressed the greatest satisfaction with the beautiful settings used as backgrounds for these scenes, and also has complimented the entire cast for the excellent work they have done thus far. No effort is being spared to make this production meet the greatest expectations of state rights buyers and exhibitors.

A number of scenes are said to be exceptionally beautiful, and artistry is the keynote throughout.

In "Bill" Davidson Miss Hyland finds a leading man well adapted to play opposite her, and she is making her characterization all that could possibly be desired. Although everybody connected with the production is working hard there is no rush, and every detail is receiving the greatest consideration.

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" (Iliodor).

Herbert Brenon, who is now making splendid progress on "The Fall of the Romanoffs," a huge portrayal of the overturn of the Czar and his government, now feels that this big states rights production will be completed much sooner than he at first anticipated.

By special arrangement with his own company, the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, and with Lewis J. Selznick, Mr.

Scene from "The Fall of the Romanoffs" (Iliodor).

Brenon's services were obtained by the Iliodor Picture Corporation to make a picture in which the famous "Mad Monk" of Russia is the featured player.

Nance O'Neil has been signed to enact the role of the Czarina, and Elkaterina Galanta, the remarkable Russian actress who recently played in the big spectacular drama, "The Wanderer," likewise has been engaged for a big role.

INTEREST AROUSED IN FAIRMOUNT'S "HATE."

Exhibitors and buyers throughout the United States and foreign countries have flooded the offices of the Fairmount Film Corporation, Candler Building, New York, with inquiries regarding bookings for "Hate," a picture that is announced as a phenomenal photodrama. Robert Bolling, vice-president of the corporation, and Walter R. Stahl, who directed the picture, attribute the early rush of prospective buyers to the advertising campaign which has been launched on the feature.

Requests already have come in from big state rights buyers who wish certain territories reserved for them, it is announced, but no definite action has been taken on these requests pending the initial showing of the picture. Foreign buyers are especially keen about the picture, it is said, and indications are that South America will be disposed of very shortly.

Mr. Stahl announces that it is likely that the initial showing of "Hate" will take place within the week. Exhibitors, buyers and the trade and press in general will be invited, after which exhibitors and buyers will be invited to a conference at which the details in connection with the exploitation and sale of the picture will be discussed.

"It is surprising to see all the requests that are coming into the office as to information on all points about the picture," said Mr. Stahl. "I am certain that the great majority of these results have been due to the trade journal advertising and posters."

HUDSON FEATURE WILL OPEN TOLEDO OFFICE.

The Hudson Feature Film Company, 212 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, is completing arangements to establish a branch office at Toledo. Al W Cross, head of the Hudson, issued this announcement upon his return to Pittsburgh from New York, whence he came to purchase a number of big state rights features. These acquisitions are to be made known soon, he states. The new Hudson branch will serve the Ohio territory, which has been handled heretofore from the main office in Pittsburgh.

Ralph E. Peckham, formerly of the Pittsburgh and Cincinnati offices of the Unicorn, will be placed in charge of the Toledo exchange. Mr. Peckham accompanied Mr. Cross to New York, and negotiations were consumated for films to be distributed in both the Ohio and Western Pennsylvania districts.

The Hudson exchange is to be moved about June 15 from its present location in Fourth avenue to the Sauer building, 804 Penn avenue. The entire third floor will be occupied.

KING-BEE IN THE FAR EAST.

David Howell, the well-known Australian buyer of motion pictures, who recently arrived from an extended trip in the Far East, where he made an exhaustive study of conditions, has again left New York on a second visit to the same territory, which includes Java, Sumatra, the Malay Archipelago, China, Japan, India—the Asiatic Orient, in fact.

On this occasion Mr. Howell carries with him the first three King-Bee comedies—"Back Stage," "The Hero" and "Dough-Nuts," which he will introduce to exhibitors in the countries named. Mr. Howell declares Far Eastern audiences will simply "eat them up."

BERNSTEIN IN NEW YORK WITH "HUMILITY."

Isidore Bernstein is back in New York after a stay in Los Angeles. Immediately upon his arrival here he went into conference with M. H. Hoffman, whose organization is marketing the Bernstein productions.

A rough print of Mr. Bernstein's first picture in the series "The Seven Cardinal Virtues," which is titled "Humility," has been received in New York and is at present undergoing the acid test that will make it suitable for top-notch presentation. Mr. Bernstein reports that despite bad weather on the Coast, "Loyalty," the second "Virtue," is coming along nicely.

HOFFMAN GETS RIGHTS TO "MME. SHERRY."

M. H. Hoffman, of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has purchased the world rights to "Madame Sherry," a film version of the famous musical comedy, and has also secured Greater New York rights to "Should She Obey?" The purchase of "Madame Sherry" included the musical score. The picture was produced by the Authors' Film Corporation. "Should She Obey?" was produced by the Arizona Film Company and has had successful runs in the West.

With the addition of these two pictures to the others controlled by the corporation, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., announce that it has ample material to open the first of the "Foursquare" Exchange Selling Stations, as they are to be called. The first will be located in rooms adjacent to the Hoffman offices in the Godfrey Building, New York.

PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN FOR "MUTT AND JEFF."

Negotiations are well under way for a general publicity campaign on the "Mutt and Jeff" animated cartoon comedies. Bud Fisher, who controls the distribution as well as the production departments of the "Mut and Jeff" enterprise, is personally arranging all the advertising matter pertaining to his product. Mr. Fisher, long experienced in all branches of publicity, has taken up this work with a zest. Before acquiring the reputation as a cartoonist that he at present holds Mr. Fisher was associated with many advertising propositions of national scope. The big shot in his advertising artillery will be the "paper" that will circulate with each release.

"WHITHER THOU GOEST" ALMOST READY.

"Whither Thou Goest," a modern drama featuring Orrin Johnson and Rhea Mitchell, supported by Tom Chatterton and a carefully selected cast of well-known players, will be the first production offered to state rights buyers by the Klotz & Streimer Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

This new organization was formed by Joseph S. Klotz and Moe Streimer, both of whom are well known to independent film operators. The announced policy of the company is to handle only such features as appear in their estimation to be assured box office successes.

"Whither Thou Goest" is a story on a new phase of the eternal triangle, with society and western settings that have permitted wide scope for dramatic action and exceptional variety in photographic achievements.

"CHRISTUS" CONCLUDES BROADWAY RUN.

A SPECIAL trade showing of "Christus," the spectacular picturization of the Christ-drama, produced in Egypt and the Holy Land, was given at the Criterion theater on June 1, and was attended by several hundred exhibitors from greater New York and nearby towns, buyers of state rights and others connected with the industry.

On Sunday evening the Biblical feature concluded its Broadway run, after nearly 100 performances in the heart of the "Great White Way." Before the trade showing the feature had been booked for an early fall engagement of several weeks' duration in the leading theaters of one of the large Southern cities.

During the run at the Criterion the same facts regarding "Christus" were brought out as are said to have been evidenced in the presentations at Rome, Paris and Madrid, before the production was brought to this country—that this superfeature makes its appeal alike to people of all religious sects and to those of no particular religious leaning. Comment was repeatedly made, in letters received by the management, that apart from its religious value, its artistic, dramatic, historical and educational aspects were such as to make it of value and interest to anyone.

A noteworthy feature of the New York engagement was the attendance of a great number of parties of children and young people, ranging in number from 25 to 100, brought by school and Sunday school teachers, that they might witness in its most graphic form the greatest spiritual event of all time.

SIMPLE PLOTS STRONGEST, SAYS HALL.

Commenting upon the fact that all of the critics agreed that "Her Fighting Chance" is a strong picture, Frank Hall, who is offering the Jane Grey feature to state rights buyers, claims that if photoplay authors would confine themselves to simple plots, like that of "Her Fighting Chance," better pictures would result.

"Her Fighting Chance" which is a photoplay version of "The Fiddling Man," by James Oliver Curwood, establishes an element of suspense during the very opening scene of the drama and tells a strong story which moves rapidly and smoothly in a direct line to its final climax before the suspense is relieved. This fact allowed the director and the players to throw themselves heart and soul into the story, without the interruptions incident to the developing of counter plots, and also relieved them of the difficulty of giving each incident in the working up of the climaxes its relative importance, and only the amount of film footage it deserved.

"We have seen many promising productions fall short of the mark," said Mr. Hall, "because of the lack of this proper balance, and the defect could not be corrected because the nature of the story made the necessary extra footage used in developing one part of the drama give those scenes more importance than they really deserved, which in turn subtracted from the importance of the portion of the picture which really contained the power of the drama.

"To me, 'Her Fighting Chance' is an excellent example of what splendid work a director and star can do when they are given a strong story which allows for simple dramatic construction."

LIEBER BUYS "THE WHIP."

The H. Lieber Company, of Indianapolis, has purchased the rights of "The Whip" for the States of Indiana and Kentucky through Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre Building, New York. The deal was consummated with Robert Lieber, of the Indianapolis concern, which is a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mr. Lieber states that immediately on his arival in Indianapolis he will make preparations for giving "The Whip" a long run at the Circle Theater there.

AUSTRALASIAN FILMS BUYS "GOD'S MAN."

Australian and New Zealand rights to "God's Man" have been purchased by Australasian Films, Ltd., from the Frohman Amusement Corporation. The deal was negotiated by Joseph W. Farnham, of the Frohman concern, and Millard Johnson, of Australasian.

"God's Man," in which H. B. Warner is starred, will be exploited in Australia as a theatrical attraction, with full traveling equipment to each road show.

MOSS SELLS FOR EXPORT.

By virtue of two checks of large figures tendered to B. S. Moss, Crossas & Co., of San Juan, Porto Rica, and Max Gluckman, of Buenos Aires, Argentine, who represent two of the most prominent foreign film importers, closed a deal whereby the individual concerns purchased the rights to distribute the entire output of Moss productions throughout Porto Rica, Cuba, San Domingo and Venezuela, as embraced by Crossas & Co., Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile and Argentine, as covered by Max Gluckman.

HEAVY DEMAND FOR CAINE'S "THE DEEMSTER."

Lewis J. Selznick's New York exchange reports an unusually active demand for "The Deemster." This photodramatic version of the famous novel by Hall Caine has introduced to American audiences a new matinee hero, in the person of Mr. Caine's son, Derwent Hall Caine, who plays the leading role in the picture.

Following its engagement at the Broadway theater, New York, "The Deemster" was the subject of widespread commendation. The rights for New York state were obtained by Lewis J. Selznick, and immediately the Marcus Loew booking office signed contracts for the production for all the theaters in that chain.

The same exchange reports a rush of inquiries for dates and terms for the Billy West Comedies.

In addition to the regular run of Selznick Pictures the same exchange is also handling "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," "Even as You and I," and, for September release, "The Whip." These are all in line with Mr. Selznick's recent announcement that he would throw open his distributing system to all pictures which approximate the standard he has set with his own productions.

PATHE BOOKING "HOW BRITAIN PREPARED."

Numerous requests have reached this department as to where the pictures "How Britain Prepared" can be booked. Inquiries directed to the Pathe Exchange, Inc., 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York City, will bring the desired information.

SPECIAL RELEASE OF "HONOR SYSTEM" SOON.

There will be a special release of "The Honor System," William Fox's cinemelodrama, beginning in September, covering the entire United States. At present this R. A. Walsh drama is booking only for New York and New Jersey.

BLUMENTHAL LAUNCHES TWO SPECTACLES.

"Robespierre" and "Ivan the Terrible" Auspiciously Herald New Concern's Entry in the Field.

THE Export and Import Film Company is now ready for the market with its first two subjects. Both are of unusual and timely scope, adding with full honors to the list of masterpieces that have made film history. Ben Blumenthal, head of the concern, is now busy arranging for openings in each territory as quickly as all other details are completed.

Both productions are on a pretentious scale, as is indictaed by the subjects. One of them is "Robespierre," a timely portrayal of the winning of freedom in France. The events leading up to the fall of the Bastille are replete with stirring ensembles. The historic events are given intimate personal interst by the splendid individual work of Lyda Borelli, the famous star who was first seen in this country playing the leading role in "Quo Vadis."

Scene from "Ivan the Terrible."

Another production for which the Export and Import Film Company is sponsor is quite as timely yet entirely dissimilar in its interest. It is entitled "Ivan the Terrible," which is quite self-explanatory. It shows, with the necessary regard for decency, of course, some of the incidents that justified the sobriquet which history has given to Ivan IV, Czar of Russia.

Mr. Blumenthal states that both "Robespierre" and "Ivan the Terrible" will be distributed on a selective zone plan. In inaugurating his campaign provision is made for a number of productions of equal magnitude which are now ready for future exploitation. The advertising campaign to exhibitors will be in keeping with the special character of the pictures, and as soon as the disposition of the various zones is arranged for Mr. Blumenthal will announce sufficient productions ahead to give the distributors plenty of time to lay out extensive campaigns.

The Export and Import Film Company wants the trade to know that it is in the field with both feet firmly planted for a long siege and a busy one.

"PARENTAGE" SHOWN TO TRADE.

"Parentage," the feature produced by Hobart Henley and presented by Frank J. Seng, was given a trade showing at the Rialto theater, New York, on Wednesday morning, June 6. The picture was received enthusiastically by a large audience of state righs buyers and exhibitors. Mr. Seng and Mr. Henley were much pleased with the reception given the feature.

Stress is being laid by the picture's sponsors on the advertising service that goes with it. Mr. Seng has endeavored to correct many of the faults of some of the advertising used for other pictures. Bombastic assertions, invidious comparisons and high-flowing superlatives form no part of the advertising propaganda, says Mr. Seng, who hopes that the advertising service that goes with "Parentage" will do much toward tempering the claims of other advertisers.

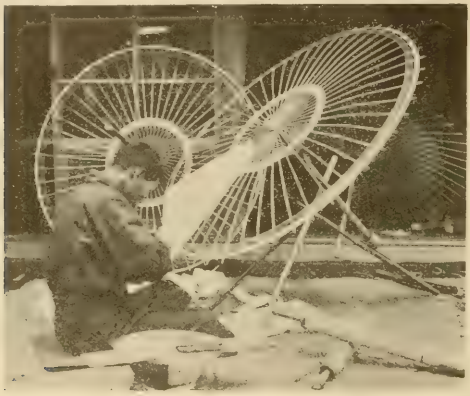
"GOD'S MAN" FOR LOEW CIRCUIT.

"God's Man," the Frohman Amusement Corporation's feature, has been booked for the entire circuit of Marcus Loew theaters. Arrangements were completed with the Loew offices by Harry Samwick, who controls the rights to the picture for the State of New York. The Loew presentation of the picture begins Monday, June 25, and continues thereafter over the circuit for an aggregate run of sixty-two days. The Loew circuit has also booked "God's Man" for the Jersey City theater through the Mammoth Film Corporation, holders of the Northern New Jersey rights.

"FILM-TRIP" DESCRIBES JAPANESE SERIES.

"Film-Trip" is a word coined to describe the serial release of the America-Japan Pictures Company, 15 William street, New York, who at present are preparing their ten-episode serial "The Land of the Rising Sun," for state righting. Because their subject was so different from anything ever put on the screen before, and to avoid confusion with the regular "scenics" or "travel pictures," the title "Film-Trip" was suggested as most descriptive. The series, which is now being shown at the Rialto theater, New York, will be released at the rate of one reel each week, and will be in consecutive order, with advertising features to cover the entire ten weeks' showing.

Japanese ideas will be carried through all the advertising, which will include typically Japanese banners on long bamboo poles, unique lobby displays of various kinds, including enlargements colored in Japan, and brought from there by J. B.Millet, who supervised the making of the films, spending six months in Japan for the purpose. Every phase of Japanese life is covered, and the human side has had the emphasis placed upon it. Included within the serial are several dramatic playlets, including "A Night at a Japanese Inn" and "A Japanese Wedding." The whole atmosphere of the presentation is of the human element—and it proves a revelation regarding our allies across the Pacific that will be startling to many Americans.



Scene from "The Land of the Rising Sun" (America-Japan).

The series carries a full and beautiful line of paper and other advertising matter.

CIRCUS MEN BUY "THE DEEMSTER."

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has sold "The Deemster" for the State of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to John B. Warren, part owner of the Hagenback-Wallace Circus; Fred Clarke, president of the Riverside Show Printing Company, of Chicago, and their associates in the circus business, the racing world and the United Fairs Booking Association. Messrs. Warren and Clarke, immediately after the deal was closed, opened offices at 64 West Randolph street, Chicago.

The Hall Caine feature will begin an extended engagement at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, on June 17. The picture will be advertised during its Chicago run by circus methods. Two circus wagons—a band wagon and Peacock float, have been shipped from the circus headquarters at Peru, Ind. Daily parades and concerts will be given.

William J. Dunn has been engaged by Messrs. Warren and Clarke to manage their state rights film interests and to handle the exploitation of "The Deemster."

ALICE HOWELL ASCENDING COMEDY STAR.

When the announcement was made by Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies, that Alice Howell would become the star of that series, exhibitors were prompt in realizing the possibilities of a woman being featured as a comedienne in opposition to male fun-makers on the screen. State rights buyers readily perceived the advantages of the radical departure from set custom, and have taken a like interest in the new product.

Miss Howell's following was already established when her first subject was released. "Balloonatics" found ready sale, and "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" followed in even greater demand. The latest production in the Century series is announced as "Alice of the Sawdust" with Miss Howell doing all sorts of "circus stunts" to capture the laughs. J. G. Blystone has given his personal attention to Miss Howell's direction and their "team work" has arrived at an advanced stage after three years of working together in other brands of comedies.

"BAR SINISTER" OPENS IN PITTSBURG JUNE 17.

"The Bar Sinister," Edgar Lewis' production, world rights to which are owned by Frank Hall, will be given a special run at the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh, opening for an indefinite period beginning June 17. The feature will be presented with the same beautiful stage mounting seen during its present New York run at the Broadway theater, where it has attracted unusual attention because of the fact that no other picture and no added attractions have been found necessary on the same program. In spite of the fact that "The Bar Sinister" is an original photodrama with a star, a play or a book to add interest to its presentation, it is fast proving a strong drawing card from a box-office standpoint because of its universal appeal and entertainment value.

It thus marks a new era in the history of feature attractions and encourages producers to believe that real hits are possible on the screen, just as they are on the stage. Edgar Lewis, who staged "The Bar Sinister," believes that the day is at hand when picture dramas that will live as long as the old standard dramas like "East Lynne" and "The Old Homestead" are a possibility that is well worth striving for

KLEINE MAY STATE-RIGHT "QUO VADIS."

Indications are that George Kleine, who recently announced his intention to re-publish the super-feature "Quo Vadis," after it had been re-edited and otherwise made ready for present-day presentation, will distribute the picture through state rights channels. From the Kleine office comes the announcement that Mr. Kleine has been approached by many state rights men who asked that "Quo Vadis" be listed as a state rights picture. Although Mr. Kleine has not as yet announced his intentions, the general belief is that the picture soon will be ready for territorial purchase.

"Quo Vadis" today stands as the pioneer super-feature and, when it was first shown in the United States a few years ago, made much money for exhibitors who booked it on a percentage basis. The phenomenal popularity met with by "Quo Vadis" should repeat itself, and the picture is one that will bear repeating for years to come.

HATCH BUYS TWO PICTURES FOR JERSEY.

The J. Frank Hatch Film Company, of 284 Market street, Newark, N. J., has purchased the New Jersey Rights to the Lois Weber feature, "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," and also Biograph's six-reeler, "Her Condoned Sin."

"ALMA, WHERE DO YOU LIVE?" (Newfields).

"Alma, Where Do You Live?" has been made into a seven-reel feature by Director Hal Clarendon, for the Newfields Producing Corporation, Woolworth Building, New York. The Newfields corporation is entering the state rights field, with the intention of putting out four productions annually, all starring Ruth MacTammany, who makes her bow under their management in the title role of Alma.

The success of "Alma" as a musical comedy was international, and the plot of the original stage presentation has been elaborated to make a film of dramatic power as well as clever situations. Of course, the plot has not been followed too closely—a musical comedy in itself could not provide seven reels of action such as has been gotten into the film story. But the main theme, and the famous song, "Alma, Sweet Alma, Where Do You Live?"—whistled by millions a few years ago—has become the basis for a really exciting love story, with many novel twists to it.

Scene from "Alma, Where Do You Live?" (Newfields).

A trade showing will be announced soon. The entire publicity campaign, including lithographs, and novelty displays of many sorts, are being rushed through to completion before that time.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"MADCAP MADGE" (Triangle).

Olive Thomas will make her debut on the Triangle program as a full-fledged star on June 24, when Thomas H. Ince will present her in a rollicking comedy of high spirits and novel situations entitled "Madcap Madge." On the same date Charles Ray will also make his appearance in a comedy drama known as "The Clodhopper."

When she was the bright particular star of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, Olive Thomas won fame as the "consolation of the tired business man," and in her first big screen characterization she is said to have more than made good her right to retain this title. "Madcap Madge" might be described as the pilgrim's progress of an up-to-the-minute debutante. Miss Thomas is supported by Charles Gunn, Dorcas Matthews and J. Barney Sherry.

Charles Ray's part in "The Clodhopper" is that of a raw country youth who drags out an uninteresting existence as his father's hired man. He has no leisure and no companions except his mother and pretty Mary Martin, who lives on the adjoining farm. Then comes the break with his close-fisted parent, his departure from the farm and his arrival in New York. An unexpected turn of events lands him on the stage, where he makes a hit as an eccentric dancer, and money pours in on him. In the end he is able to show his grasping and icy-blooded father that he is of the metal that rings truest when thrown down hardest. Margery Wilson takes the part of Ray's country sweetheart and by her charming impersonation adds one more success to her growing list of successes.

TEXAS AND TEGAS INDUSTRIES IN COMBITONE.

Recent releases of the Pathe-Combitone pictures have been devoted to Texas, the largest state in the Union. Scenics alone would give a decidedly misleading opinion of the state. The Combitone pictures, however, showing as they do every phase of a section, its leading industries, its main scenic features, its chief buildings, its historical places and its people, shows Texas as a leader not merely in size, but in stock raising and agriculture.

In "Southwestern Texas," released June 17, are pictured some of the huge onion farms, said to be the largest in the world.

In "Cattle Raising in Texas," released June 24, one sees clearly the difference between the old days of "riding the range" and today, where sleek cattle are grazed behind stout fences. Among the interesting subjects covered in this issue are the new kind of beef cattle, a cross between the Indian zebu and the native Texas cattle, the advantage being the immunity of the cross breeds from certain diseases. Huge herds of Angora goats, valuable for their mohair, are also pictured.

WHARTONS DOING THINGS WITH CAMERA

No one ever called the Whartons tricksters, and yet there is more trickery going on in the Wharton studios at Ithaca than could be put into a freight car. However, its all being done with the camera. Five new comedies now are in process of construction, all of them bristling with trick work. One of the most effective shows the freezing of a baby in a cake of ice.

PAINTING REPRODUCED BY METRO PLAYERS.

Hoffman's great painting of "Mary Magdalene Being Brought Before Christ" is reproduced by living players in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro production, "The Lifted Veil," a screen version of Basil King's popular novel.

Edna Holland, daughter of E. M. Holland, was chosen for the part of Mary Magdalene. The part of Christus is taken by Bernard Niemeyer, one of the best-known portrayers of the role. "Type" parts are played by Fred Hearn, Edward Elkus, Jack De Lacy and W. H. Wise. The Scribes and Pharisees are portrayed by people totally new to the screen, chosen because their appearance was ideal for the picture. Many of them, from the southernmost portions of New York City, spoke only Yiddish, and could not understand the instructions of George D. Baker, the director.

B. A. Rolfe, general manager of the Metro studio, prides himself on the fact that some one of his co-workers can be found who can do or produce anything that may be necessary for the purposes of a picture. William Bradley, of Technical Director E. J. Shulter's department, himself made the stained glass window which is the principal adornment of the Church of St. Mary Magdalene in "The Lifted Veil." The scene in which both living and the pictured representations of the famous painting are used is most impressive.

APOLLO BASES PICTURE ON OLD SONG.

Harry Raver announced that the next picture from his company would be entitled "When You and I Were Young." Work on this has already been started at the Apollo studios in Fort Lee, where the company has just finished "The Golden God."

"When You and I Were Young" is an original story by Frederich Rath, and it is founded on the famous old song of the same name. It is said to abound in pathos and heart interest, and to interweave the dreams of youth and age in a compelling and deeply moving manner.

Alma Hanlon plays the leading role, supported by John Sainpolis, who returns to the Apollo company after finishing a Paramount picture with Pauline Frederick.

FAIRBANKS USES BURBANK FOR BACKGROUNDS.

Instead of building a western village, which has grown to be a common occurrence in film circles, Douglas Fairbanks arranged with the city hall officials of Burbank, Cal., for the use of their town in scenes of "Wild and Woolly." The arrangements saved Director John Emerson the worries of trying to duplicate a western town in a studio yard.

"In this way," said the Artcraft actor, "we have the scenic advantages of a real western town; therefore, the details are bound to prove more effective than a counterfeit likeness."

Kalem Launches Another Series

"The Further Adventures of Stingaree," by E. W. Hornung, Added to the "American Girl" Series.

WITH this week's announcement by the Kalem Company that "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" is now ready to be booked through the General Film Company the demands of exhibitors throughout the country for a successor to the original "Stingaree" series will be satisfied. The popular character of the "gentleman bushranger of Australia" will return to the screen in the person of True Boardman, who created the role in the original series. The stories for the new adventures of Stingaree, unlike those of the first series which were photodramatized from E. W. Hornung's book of the same title, have been prepared especially for Kalem's photoplay production by the same distinguished author. In securing this writer of international reputation to join their forces of contributing authors, the Kalem Company paid what they claim to be a record price for two-reel moving picture stories. They were led to do this, however, by the unprecedented success of the first Stingaree series, which forecasted an equally brilliant success for another series of adventures of the same picturesque character.

Chivalry is the keynote of the stories. Stingaree is an outlaw, but he is a gentleman, and each adventure finds him the staunch defender of a woman against the machinations of some "righteous" abider by the law. The stories are appealing, interesting and, above all, novel. Each episode contains a strikingly new "idea," and the Kalem director has worked out these clever ideas with vigor and dash, the result being a virile drama, replete with "punch."

"The Further Adventures of Stingaree" is issued at the height of the popularity of Kalem's other two-part series, "The American Girl." Kalem officials report that they have never released a more timely series than this one. The energy of Marin Sais and the other workers of the company seems to increase with each release, and the current issues, "The Pot of Gold" and "The Ghost of the Desert," are two of the most thrilling dramas of this thrilling Western series.

Director Al Santell of the "Ham" comedy company has recovered from the effects of an automobile accident which incapacitated him for several weeks, and has resumed work on the latest production, which bears the temporary title of "Honesty Is the Best Policy." During Santell's absence, Lloyd V. Hamilton, better known as "Ham," took the reins and directed his own company in several typical "Ham" comedies. In "Seaside Romeos," Ham and Bud's quest of a buried treasure on an island inhabited by girls affords some ludicrous situations between the bashful Ham and the fairest members of the fair sex. Henry Murdoch, the popular funmaker who has become so well known among Kalem "fans," is seen in all the "Ham" comedies as a capable assistant for Ham and Bud.

"THE FRIENDSHIP OF BEAUPERE."

"The Friendship of Beaupere" is the title of the Selig two-reel drama of the North, directed by Al Green, from the story written by Maibelle Heikes Justice, and announced for release in General Film Service on Monday, June 11.

The Selig company asserts that this production is really a five-reel feature cut down to two reels of absorbing action, strong plot and talented acting. George Fawcett and Vivian Reed are co-stars, supported by such well known screen favorites as Eugenie Besserer, Will Machin and Charles Le Moyne.

The story is cast in the heart of the Cariboo district far above "fifty-three," and tells of the friendship of Jules Beaupere, a trapper of the North, and of the remorse that came to one in the states far to the South.

Miss Justice gained the atmosphere for this production while sojourning in the far North, and "The Friendship of Beaupere" is considered one of her most stirring dramas. The photography is said to be of high class and the scenic effects all that could be desired.

REGULARS SUPPORT ANN PENNINGTON.

THE military atmosphere in "The Little Boy Scout," in which Ann Pennington will be starred in Paramount pictures by the Famous Players, will be nothing if not absolutely correct. In addition to employing Troop 100 of the Boy Scouts for those portions of the picture in which the Boy Scouts are required, Director Francis J. Grandon also succeeded in enlisting the services of the regulars stationed at Fort Totten for those parts of the story which deals with the Mexican border.

In completing the arrangements for the use of the troops no mention of compensation for the men was made and they regarded the entire performance in the light of a vacation. They were, therefore, doubly delighted upon receiving pay envelopes when the picture was completed, and were further elated over the fact that the producers presented the post with a handsome check for the purchase of a new projection machine.

In support of Ann Pennington there appear a number of well-known screen players, among them Owen Moore, who plays opposite Miss Pennington, and Harry Lee, whose three years in the regular service combined with his many clever characterizations in Famous Players pictures, entitled him to the role of Sergeant in the border regiment. Others in the cast are Fraunie Fraunholtz, George Burton and Marcia Harris.

20,000 FEET OF FILM USED IN "THE IMMIGRANT."

Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, "The Immigrant" is one of the cleverest things he has ever done, according to critics who have seen private runs of the new offering in which Charlie has a wide range of opportunity for the display of his fun-making genius. The play is No. 11 of the Mutual-Chaplin series. It leads the comedian through a series of side-splitting episodes, each more amusing than the last, and winds up in a whirlwind of merriment in which the entire company, brought into the melee, takes part.

"The Immigrant" cost more to produce than any previous Chaplin comedy, there being a larger company employed and a far wider range of location. Not less than 20,000 feet of film went into the construction of the play, innumearble cuts and retakes accounting for the heavy consumption of material. The completed film is 2,000 feet.

The negative of the second Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Wild and Woolly," was delivered personally to the Artcraft headquarters in New York by Billy Shay, assistant to Director Emerson, who just arrived from California. Positive copies are now being made of the film in the East and will be ready for an advance trade showing shortly. The entire Fairbanks organization is most enthusiastic over the new picture, Few subtitles are used, and Horace B. Carpenter, who supplied the original story, expressed delight over the manner in which Anita Loos handled it.

WHARTONS AT WORK ON "RED ROBIN."

Now that the Whartons have had their trade showing of "The Great White Trail" by Leopold D. Wharton, and started the picture on the way to its exhibitors, they are completing the plans for the production of their next super-feature. This is to be "Red Robin," a story of tangled lives and pirate gold, and it is to be directed by Theodore Wharton, who also has written the scenario.

The story itself is by Fred Jackson, and ran a short time ago in the Munsey magazines. Many of the scenes are spectacular, and the building of them has been going on for more than two months in the Wharton studios.

"Fire of Youth" Heads Universal

Butterfly Five-Reeler Starts Off a Week Containing a Wide Variety of Subjects.

JACK MULHALL, the popular juvenile star, is featured in the Butterfly five-act drama, "The Fire of Youth," which heads the Universal program for the week of June 18. The story was written by Willis Woods, the scenario by Karl Coolidge, and the production was made under the direction of Elmer Clifton, one of the new directors at Universal City.

Mulhall is seen in a role different from any he has heretofore portrayed, and which affords him wide opportunities to display his screen versatility. The action throughout is rapid, the story full of genuine suspense and the photography and settings of a high standard. In the cast supporting the star are Donna Drew, who is to play leading roles in Butterfly Pictures, and who formerly was known as Donna Moon; Ann Kroman and Hayward Mack.

On the same day, June 18, also will be released "Jilted in Jail," a Nestor comedy featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

The feature for Tuesday will be the Gold Seal three-act melodrama "The Brand of Hate," starring Tina Marshall. This production is remarkable for a three-reel subject. The photoplay was adapted by John C. Brownell from the story by Elizabeth Burbridge, and was directed by Edwin Stevens. Pat Rooney, the eccentric comedian famed as a vaudeville headliner, is featured in the Victor comedy "A Pirate Bold," the other Tuesday offering.

The chief offering for Wednesday is the L-KO two-act comedy, "Where Is My Che-ild?" with Dan Russell and Gladys Varden in the principal roles. Other releases of this date are the Laemmle drama, "Bartered Youth," with William Mong and Gretchen Lederer, and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, with all the latest news in pictorial form.

"Helen Grayson's Stratcgy," a two-act society drama, will be presented under the Rex brand on Thursday. Irene Hunt, Malcolm Blevins and L. C. Shumay play the leading roles. Ruth Stonehouse in the Victor comedy, "Puppy Love," is another release of this date.

For Saturday the Bison two-act Western drama "Lone Larry" is the feature offering. This is a thrilling and interesting story of adventure written by Grant Carpenter and produced by Henry McRae. Issue No. 6 of Universal Current Events and the Joker comedy, "A Burglar's Bride" with Gale Henry and Jack Dill are other releases of this date.

On Sunday, June 24, the releases are the Powers split reel, "Young Nick Carter, Detectiff," a comedy cartoon, and China's Wonderland, a Dorsey Educational, and the Big U drama "The Two-Gun Parson," featuring W. C. Dowlan.

During the week the fifteenth episode of "The Voice on the Wire" will be released.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS RENEWS CONTRACTS.

By the terms of a contract just entered into between Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., and Dorothy Phillips, the services of Miss Phillips are assured to exhibitors of Bluebirds until December 15, 1918. In preparing features for the program in which she gained her first conspicuous prominence, Miss Phillips will have the services of two directors, Joseph De Grasse and Ida May Park—husband and wife, by the way.

Although she had been of great service to Universal as a leading woman in the stock companies that were for a long time maintained at Fort Lee, it was not until she entered the employ of Bluebird on the west coast that Miss Phillips really achieved her opportunity. Under the direction of Joseph De Grasse she created her first Bluebird, released last December, under the title of "The Price of Silence."

"The Piper's Price" was distributed January 8, of the current year, and regularly once a month, since her first release, Miss Phillips has appeared as an attraction among Bluebirds. "Hell Morgan's Girl," released as a Bluebird Extraordinary, and "The Girl in the Checkered Coat" were directed by Joseph De Grasse previous to the time his wife, Ida May Park, began alternating with him in directing. "The Flashlight" was Miss Park's initial offering, and "Fires of Rebellion," to be released July 2, will demonstrate the abilities of a woman director in handling big mobs and creating massed effects in melodramas.

"A Doll's House," the current Bluebird, was directed by Joseph De Grasse with Miss Phillips playing Nora Helmer—the best role she has had. Mr. De Grasss is now at work upon "Triumph," a sociological study, and Miss Park has completed "The Rescue," in which as usual, Miss Phillips will have the support of Lon Chaney and William Stowell. These fine actors have led the company assisting Miss Phillips from the time she joined Bluebird's forces.

FAIRBANKS BOOK PROVES A BOOSTER.

Exhibitors are reporting good use of the Douglas Fairbanks book, "Laugh and Live," in the way of a medium for creating additional interest in connection with the presentation of the Fairbanks-Artcraft film, "In Again—Out Again." Copies of these books are being used in many different ways.

"THE MAN WHO WAS AFRAID" (Essanay).

A story with a powerful patriotic appeal has been selected for Bryant Washburn's next Essanay feature. "The Man Who Was Afraid" is the title. It was written by Mary Brecht Pulver and published in the Saturday Evening Post last summer. At that time the National Guard was being mobilized for border service. Hinging on the President's call to arms, and portraying a man who was afraid to answer the call, the story caused a sensation. It proved a strong aid in recruiting fighting men.

The screen version has been altered to fit present conditions.

Scene from "The Man Who Was Afraid" (Essanay).

However, it has not lost any of the patriotic fervor with which the story was filled. The aim is to make it one of the most rousing stimulants to patriotism ever screened.

Fred E. Wright is directing the production. It will have a screen time, approximately, of sixty-five minutes. K-E-S-E will release the film July 2.

JANE COWL WORKING ON GOLDWYN PICTURE.

The first of the series of Goldwyn Pictures in which Jane Cowl is the star is now well under way in the Goldwyn Studio at Fort Lee. Miss Cowl and her company, under the direction of Arthur Hopkins, chief of the Goldwyn producing staff, have made much progress in the screening of the story, which is from the pen of Basil King, the author of "The Inner Shrine."

The cast supporting Miss Cowl includes Henry Stephenson, Charles Hammond, Edith McAlpin, Lettie Ford, Marion Knapp, Betsey Ross, Orme Caldara and Antoinette Erwin. .

As will be seen, several of these players have been in companies headed by Miss Cowl in either her last production or a recent one. Mr. Stephenson had a part of considerable importance in "Lilac Time," and Mr. Caldara was the ledaing man in that play, and also in "Common Clay" and other recent successes in which Miss Cowl has starred.

GOOD REPORTS COMING ON "POPPY."

Norma Talmadge's latest Selznick-Picture offering, "Poppy," was given its first public showing in Chicago and New York last week, where it was hailed as this charming young star's finest production. Reports from the Marcus Loew offices indicate that "Poppy" will break all records for previous Talmadge pictures. Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, as well as Lewis J. Selznick have been showered with congratulatory telegrams and messages from exhibitors and exchange men.

Meanwhile the Talmadge company is rapidly completing a new film drama entitled "The Moth." Director Edward Jose, who produced "Poppy," is also directing this production, and Miss Talmadge is supported by a most notable cast, including Eugene O'Brien.

ASTRA TO PRESENT GLADYS HULETTE.

Gladys Hulette, star of "The Shine Girl," "Prudence, the Pirate," "Pots and Pans Peggie," "Her New York" and "The Candy Girl," all Gold Rooster Plays which have been more than ordinarily successful, is announced in the first picture in which she has appeared since joining the Astra forces. "The Cigarette Girl" is the title, and it will be released July 8. It was directed by William Parke, director of "The Shine Girl." In the cast are Warner Oland, the celebrated villain of "Patria," and William Parke, Jr.

"The Cigarette Girl" gives Miss Hulette an excellent chance to portray a character in which she is much at home. There is a rare charm to the little "Cigarette," the charm of Spring, Youth and Mayblossoms. It is a thoroughly meritorious production.

New Film Cleaning Process

Invention by Major O. J. Allenbaugh Said to Renew Old Film to a Remarkable Degree.

ONE of the most important innovations in the film industry has just been brought to the attention of the trade through a contract which was signed during the past week between Shepard and Van Loan, Major O. J. Allenbaugh of the Film Renovating Co., and C. C. Fields, president of the Hedwig Laboratories. This contract provides that the Hedwig laboratories is to use the "Allenbaugh Process" on all of the films handled by this organization.

O. J. Allenbaugh.

For three years Major Allenbaugh, the inventor of this process, has been working on this invention, which he felt certain would some day gain for him recognition in the trade. During that time efforts have been made to obtain the secret of his process. The Major has likewise refused all offers for his process and was content to wait. The inventor states that the experimental stage has passed, and that after three years of constant labor and testing, fraught with many discouragements, which would have defeated a man of less courage and persistency than Major Allenbaugh, he had at last perfected his invention.

Recently Shepard and Van Loan entered into a contract with Mr. Allenbaugh to act as his agents, and began at once to get in touch with the big laboratories throughout the country. Officials of the Hedwig Laboratories became interested in the process and requested permission to put it through various tests. This was agreed to and the results were excellent. The process stood every test so satisfactorily that President Fields and his colleagues became enthusiastic.

Last Tuesday, June 5, at a joint meeting of the boards of directors of the various companies interested, including Shepard and Van Loan, the Film Renovating Company and the Hedwig Laboratories, a contract was signed giving the Hedwig Laboratories the right to use the "Allenbaugh Process" for a given length of time. At this meeting it was further agreed that every reel of film handled by this laboratory averaging more than 1,100 feet should be put through the "Allenbaugh Process." This means that any feature picture or any film of more than 1,100 feet will be just as good one year from the day it was printed as it was the day it left the laboratory.

Every reel of film will read, "Treated by the Allenbaugh Process" with the signature of the inventor, and none will be genuine without it.

In discussing his invention with a representative of this paper yesterday, Major Allenbaugh said:

"There has been a great many attempts during the last seven or eight years to devise some means to preserve the film, but they proved inefficient, in that the film treated by these various methods became more or less brittle and, instead of preserving the film, had a tendency to shorten its life.

"I have worked along an entirely different line. After many experiments, during which I must admit thousands of feet were destroyed and spoiled, I discovered that in treating the emulsion I had to also take into consideration a treatment of the celluloid itself that would harmonize with the treatment of the emulsion. This I have succeeded in doing and have proved that notwithstanding the emulsion is hardened, yet it is hardened in such a way as to become practically a part of the celluloid itself and the whole made more flexible and pliable than the untreated film, and remains so.

"In hardening emulsion, the sprocket holes are given additional strength. The film treated with this process will run through the projecting machine with absolutely no accumulation of emulsion on the sprocket wheel, tension springs and aperture gate, or in any point that it may come in contact with. This relieves the strain on the walls of the sprocket holes and prevents the numerous scratches, wear and tear, that is the usual effect on the untreated film. Some operators use oil, candle and beeswax to relieve the tension springs so that the film may run through more smoothly. This is damaging, because the material applied runs for the film itself and is but a temporary make-shift. The relief of the tension spring necessarily brings the picture out of focus.

"Sepia and other tints that have been the bane of the printer because of the fact of their tendency of accumulating dirt and oil more readily than the black and white, giving a shadowy effect on the screen, is absolutely non-susceptible and made as bright and clear as the black and white. The treatment is permanent and the film so treated will, long after untreated films are useless, be as bright and in as good a condition as when first released. During the life of the film the picture will be clear and better in every way and more easily cleaned, because the emulsion side is practically as smooth as the celluloid side and does not absorb the dirt and oil.

"I believe the day is coming, and that, too, in the near future, when every exhibitor will demand that the film that he books be treated with this process. This especially applies to the exhibitor who is using the film 60, 90 and 100-day stuff. Because of the fact that the film is treated it will be in a far better condition when it reaches him."

Major Allenbaugh was formerly an exhibitor in Baltimore, and entered into the exchange business in that territory, handling the program for the old Famous Players. He was one of the original Paramount men and later helped to form the Metro company, and was the president and manager of the Washington exchange.

"PERIWINKLE" (American).

Mary Miles Minter has completed "Periwinkle," a feature picture adapted from the William Farquhar Payson novel of the same name, and has begun work on "Melissa of the Hills" by Maibelle Justice. The completed production was filmed by American under the direction of James Kirkwood and will be released through Mutual exchanges.

The picture is of light summer texture and breathes the vacation spirit. Miss Minter portrays the title role, the beloved mascot of the coast guard station. Each man of the guard loves the little girl madly and each one believes that some day she will choose him for a husband. But they reckon without consideration of the inevitable hero from another world—a world of wealth and social polish.

TYPES SHOWN IN GAUMONT "TOURS."

Every exhibitor is anxious to have pictures which will interest the greatest number of patrons. For this reason single-reel releases have been developed by the Gaumont Company that give every spectator something on each reel of surpassing interest.

In "Reel Life," Gaumont's Mutual magazine in film, there are always five or six subjects, to make sure that every taste is catered to by the diversity of the pictures. Gaumont's "Tours Around the World" follows the same scheme, although not as many separate sections are shown. This is not necessary, since each subject itself is divided into many because of the scenic character of the pictures.

A notable issue of "Tours Around the World" is No. 34, which contains pictures of Naples, Italy and Buenos Aires, Argentina. The pictures from the largest city of Italy are of interests to everyone, not only because Naples is known as having one of the most beautiful sites in the world, but because we are now an ally of Italy. Any picture which brings us into closer touch with the nations which are waging war for democracy will be found a good investment for the exhibitor. Gaumont follows this editorial policy of timeliness in foreign pictures to an even greater extent in its Mutual Weekly. It always contains remarkable pictures from the other side which have an immediate news interest.

Four Art Dramas for June

Marian Swayne, Alma Hanlon and Jean Sothern to Be in Month's Productions.

FOUR stirring plays, so different from each other that they make up a program of unusual variety, are scheduled for release by Art Dramas during the month of June. These are from three studios—Apollo, Erbograph and Van Dyke, which latter supplies two instead of the usual one, having had two companies at work during the past month.

Jean Sothern, Marian Swayne and Alma Hanlon, Art Dramas' popular stars, are featured in the releases of the month, which are considerably superior, according to those who have seen them, to any previous assortment from this company's studios.

All types of drama are represented in the list, following Art Dramas' policy of variety in theme. The first release for June, which comes from the Van Dyke studios, is a comedy drama with numerous clever twists in it. The title of this picture is "A Mute Appeal," featuring Jean Sothern. Donald Cameron is the hero of the play. The direction was done by Walter Edwin.

"The Golden God" is the second of the month's releases. This is an Apollo production starring Alma Hanlon. As previously announced, it deals with the effect of money lust on two happy people. The story is by Robert Hage. Frederick Rath wrote the scenario. The picture is due for release June 14.

"The Road Between," Marian Swayne's second Erbograph picture, is the third release. This is a comedy drama, in which the life of the city and the country are contrasted in vivid and dramatic scenes. Joseph Levering directed this. In the cast are Armand Cortez, Grace Stephens, Bradley Barker and others. It will be released June 21.

The last of the month's releases comes from the Van Dyke studio, and is still untitled. It will be released June 28.

"THE RAINBOW BOX" (Essanay Black Cat).

The vogue for sharp, snappy, two-reel comedy dramas continues to be met by Essanay with its "Black Cat" features, according to a bulletin from General Film announcing the current release of "The Rainbow Box." As usual, some of Essanay's most favorite players appear, the leads in the present instance being Marguerite Clayton and Roderick La Rook. Miss Clayton, who does as attractive and conscientious work in the short films as in the five-reel features, plays the sympathetic part of Carol Blair, a pretty little clerk in a modiste's shop who dreams of wealth. She poses as a millionaire's daughter to win Wesley Jamieson, an apparent heir to riches. By the time she discovers that he is in circumstances as moderate as her own Carol has taken the more wholesome view of life and she weds him for his intrinsic worth.

The policy of choosing all Black Cat stories for their comedy-drama value is proving a hit with exhibitors, branch managers of General Film agree.

"A BIT OF KINDLING" (Mutual-Horkheimer).

Jackie Saunders, the pretty little star whose best work is done in what Sherwood McDonald, her director, refers to as "tomboy stuff," comes to bat with a remarkable characterization in "A Bit of Kindling," latest Mutual-Horheimer feature production, in which Miss Jackie is "Sticks," a newsgirl waif. It will be released June 18.

In collaboration with Douglas Bronson, Miss Saunders prepared the scenario of "A Bit of Kindling," the star furnishing the material and Mr. Bronson the constructive ability. Between them they have made a play that thrills by its humanness and gives Miss Saunders the opportunity she seeks. It is a most appealing story that takes Miss Jackie through innumerable adventures before she marries the millionaire and settles down.

MABEL TALIAFERRO SHOWS HORSEMANSHIP.

Mabel Taliaferro's superb skill as a horsewoman will be demonstrated in "The Will o' the Wisp," her forthcoming Metro wonderplay presented by B. A. Rolfe and directed by Tod Browning. Miss Taliaferro has not been called upon to do feats of horsemanship for the screen since "The Three of Us," her initial Metro offering. As Sheila Desmond in "The Will o' the Wisp" she is a girl highwayman, who robs from the rich to give to the poor in true Robin Hood fashion.

Miss Taliaferro's fondness for horses recalls the fact that a few years ago, in company with the well-known writer, Clara E. Laughlin, she made a tour of the Western states entirely on horseback. Northern and Southern California, the Yellowstone Park and the Yosemite Valley, all were traversed on horseback.

BARY SAW SERVICE IN FRANCE.

Leon Bary, who supports Mollie King in the great Pathe feature-serial, "Mystery of the Double Cross," has seen active service in the present European war. When the great conflict began Mr. Bary was a motion picture director in London. He hurried to Paris and was among the first to answer the call of the colors. During the first winter he suffered a severe illness resulting from exposure in the wet trenches. He was honorably discharged from further active service. Returning to London, he was confined for some time in a hospital, but was eventually completely cured.

MADGE EVANS FEATURED IN BRADY PICTURE.

The emergence of little Madge Evans to starhood, now in course of accomplishment, was delayed for several months after it had been finally decided upon by William A. Brady and his associates in World Pictures. "Jerry-for-Short," under the direction of Harley Knoles, is now nearly completed at the Peerless studio.

The many and widely varied adventures falling to the lot of the child heroine of this play call into action all the gifts which a bountiful nature has showered upon little Miss Evans. The most recent appearance of this child actress for World-Pictures Brady-Made was in "Maternity," of which Alice Brady was the star player. It was in the extraordinary fire scene of this drama that both Miss Brady and Madge had most of their hair singed off, a matter of such trifling consequence to the joyous little maid that less than two minutes after the genuine peril had passed she was fast asleep in her blanket in the automobile bound for home.

COHAN STARTS SECOND ARTCRAFT.

George M. Cohan has commenced work on his second photoplay for Artcraft Pictures at the Famous Players studio in New York City. As his new motion picture vehicle, following "Broadway Jones," which scored an immediate hit all over the country, the popular actor-author-producer has selected his famous theatrical success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." This well-known play proved one of the season's most favorite stage offerings four years ago, when it appeared on Broadway at the Astor theater under the direction of Cohan & Harris.

The story of "Seven Keys to Baldpate" is by George M. Cohan and tells of the experiences of a writer of sensational fiction who makes a wager with a fellow clubman that he can create one of his masterpieces in twenty-four hours.

ARMY PICTURES IN MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 128.

The Mutual Weekly No. 128, which is the current Gaumont release, features pictures of army life. Among the interesting views is that of the garden party held at Governor's Island, New York. This benefit of the regular soldiers was for the Army Relief Society.

How Uncle Sam guards the coast line is another army picture. Guns of the Coast Artillery are shown in action at target practice.

From somewhere in America come pictures of millions of German prisoners of war. From Bulgaria come pictures of a monastery which recently fell into the hands of the Allies.

From somewhere in America come pictures of millions of shells which are ready for shipment to Europe.

MARY GARDEN WILL SING IN PICTURES.

Mary Garden, who is expected to return from Europe at an early date, in order to begin work in "Thais," the first of her Goldwyn Pictures, recently answered a critic who asked her how she expected to compensate her picture audiences for the loss of her voice.

"I shall still sing to my audiences," she said. "I shall sing to them with every fibre of my body, and I shall sing beautifully—far more beautifully, I think, than I have ever been able to sing with my voice alone!"

TWO DIRECTORS NOW FOR BABY OSBORNE.

From now on, it is announced, there will be two directors on Pathe's Baby Marie Osborne pictures. Messrs. Bertram and Ingraham will work turn and turn about. While Mr. Bertram is making his picture Mr. Ingraham will be laying out his work and preparing his sets and locations.

"SURF SCANDAL" (L-Ko).

Dan Russell, Gladys Varden and supporting L-KO comedians get into the summer atmosphere and bathing suits to get the laughs out of Noel Smith's direction in "Surf Scandal." The comedy has physical culture as the basis of its fun, and there are all sorts of gymnastic stunts as well as lovely girls in lively bathing scenes to promote laughter. Mr. Smith operated under the supervision of General Director J. G. Blystone in producing this newest L-KO, and Mr. Blystone edited the finished product. "Surf Scandal" is set for distribution through Universal exchanges July 18.

THRILLS IN NO. 10 OF "RAILROAD RAIDERS."

Helen Holmes, adventuress of the screen, who drove an automobile for a 30-foot leap to the deck of a barge, is worsted in a hand-to-hand battle on the brakebeams of a moving freight train and, imprisoned in a freight car, is pushed off a ferry into the middle of San Francisco Bay in Chapter X of "The Railroad Raiders."

The fight on the brakebeams provides as big a thrill as Helen Holmes ever staged. "Tony" of the raiders, riding the bumpers, discovers Helen on the brakebeams and makes his way beneath the car toward her. As the train rushes along, they fight fiercely. Helen loses her grip and falls to the roadbed. Lying face downward on the ties, she escapes injury as the train passes over her.

She manages to get to the ferry before the car leaves. The raiders overpower her and place her inside the car. In the middle of the bay they push the car off the end of the ferry into the bay. Helen recovers consciousness as the water reaches her waist.

Scenically the chapter is one of the best of the series. It involves stirring scenes along the waterfront of San Francisco and some remarkable picturing of water-front types engaged in the several melees.

THREE GAUMONTS FOR WEEK OF JUNE 25.

Gaumont signalizes the last week in June by releasing three single-reels through Mutual. The first one to reach the screen is "Tours Around the World" No. 34. The reel is divided between Naples, Italy and Buenos Aires, Argentina. Both cities are well presented. They lend themselves admirably to motion picture reproduction, since both have that charm which is associated with foreign lands and alien peoples. Since there are so many Italians in America and we are following with such interest that nation's war activities, the Naples views will prove exceedingly popular.

The second release of the week is Mutual Weekly No. 130, June 27. A shipment of war pictures has been made from France, the Gaumont Company is advised, and these will be incorporated in this issue of the Mutual Weekly.

"Reel Life" No. 61 will appear June 28. Its leading section presents the methods of "Marketing Raw Tobacco." Every thing is shown from the picking of the leaf to its sale at auction. "The Life of the Bee" is another section that is of absorbing interest. Pictures of models of inventions are compared with the latest developed machines of today in "As It Was in the Beginning." "Launching a Lifeboat" is also shown.

HARBAUGH TO DIRECT VIRGINIA PEARSON.

Virginia Pearson's subjects for the William Fox films will be screened henceforth under the direction of Carl Harbaugh, who produced the camera version of Hawthorne's classic, "The Scarlet Letter."

Miss Pearson is already at work on the new feature at the Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J., and is enthusiastic over the vehicle which has been chosen for the picture.

TOD BROWNING DISCUSSES LIGHTING.

What Tod Browning, Metro director, calls "rational lighting" will be seen in Mabel Taliaferro's forthcoming subject, "The Will o' the Wisp," a charming play of Irish life written by Katharine Kavanagh. Throughout the five acts of the picture every light used has a reason and its source can easily be traced. It streams through a window, it gleams from a fireplace, it filters in as moonlight, or comes from a lighted lamp or candle.

"The day for magical light is over," says Mr. Browning. "What could be more foolish than a flood of light, either on stage or screen, when a painted 'set' reveals a cloudy sky? In almost no room will you find light equalized over the entire area, yet that is the way it almost invariably appears in dramatic presentations of all kinds. Light should come from natural sources and should not, as if by magic, appear for no reason at all, equally strong at all points."

THREE ART DRAMAS READY FOR JUNE.

Three productions for release in June have already been completed by the Art Dramas studios, and a fourth is nearing completion. The three come from the Van Dyke, Apollo and Erbograph studios. The first release of the month, on June 7, will be a Van Dyke, "A Mute Appeal." Jean Sothern is starred in this, while the directing was done by Walter Edwin.

"The Golden God," an Apollo production featuring Alma Hanlon, is the second of the month's releases. The story of this was written by Robert Hage, and the adaptation was made by Frederick Rath. Charles Hutchinson is the leading man.

The third production is an Erbograph, "The Road Between," featuring Marian Swayne.

VIOLA DANA HONORED IN NEW ENGLAND.

Marblehead, Mass., the birthplace of Molly Pitcher, whose brave performance on the field of battle won her a place in the Hall of Fame, celebrated the anniversary of Molly Pitcher's birth by holding a big Liberty parade. The big parade, in which every man, woman and child in Marblehead took part, was led by Viola Dana, the Metro player, who was there with her company making exteriors for her forthcoming play, "Aladdin's Other Lamp."

Mounted on the finest horse in this section of the world, little Miss Dana, flanked by the mayor and chief of police, rode at the head of the longest procession ever witnessed in Marblehead. After the parade there was a monster mass meeting, at which Miss Dana and her company urged the young men of Marblehead to enlist.

UNITED TAKES OVER MARSON COMPANY.

The R. D. Marson Machine Company of Boston, one of the pioneer supply houses in New England has been taken over by the United Theater Equipment Corporation, and will become one of the links of the chain, thus insuring for Eastern exhibitors a local United Service Station.

"THE DAZZLING MISS DAVISON" (Mutual).

An atmosphere of mystery surrounds the story of "The Dazzling Miss Davison," the Mutual feature scheduled for release June 18, in which Marjorie Rambeau is starred. There is a puzzling problem as to who and what Miss Davison is. She claims to be a designer, but evades the question of where her shop is or for whom she works.

Scene from "The Dazzling Miss Davison" (Mutual).

Further perplexity is added the movements of Miss Davison by a mysterious man who evidently is in league with her and appears wherever Miss Davison does, but whose face is never seen. His back becomes familiar, but his face is not revealed until the climax of the story.

Save the Night Life, Says Freuler

Mutual President Warns Exhibitors that "Save an Hour" Campaign Will Work Against Theaters.

EXHIBITORS everywhere should fight the 'save an hour of daylight' campaign," warns President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation. "'Save the night life' should be the slogan of the motion picture business and every other branch of the amusement business.

"Matinee business would not suffer from a general adoption of the project to set the clock ahead an hour, but the night business would suffer seriously. This is not guess work, it is certainty. It has been proven, for instance in Australia, where evening admissions at the motion picture theaters and at the speaking stage shows have fallen off very noticeably since the enforcement of the plan there.

"The 'save an hour of daylight' movement is now being given attention as a means to greater industrial efficiency in the preparation for war. It may promise something of a saving in certain industries, but this is debatable. It is certain that there are many offsetting disadvantages. Anything which disturbs the routine of the people is not likely to make them work harder. Readjustment of the hours would tend to have something of the effect of breaking in on a new job. The loss would, I fear, cancel the gain. It is certain that this campaign can have no beneficial influence on agriculture and the crops, where we are most seriously in need of increased production. The farmer and his crops work by the sun and not the clock, anyway.

"Meanwhile, national prosperity and success in the war means that none of us shall get hysterical. Hundreds of the most able business men in the country are counselling that we must continue business as usual if crises are to be escaped and production is to continue. This seems to me to be an excellent reason for letting the clock alone.

"The picture business will have quite enough to do for the next few months without having to readjust itself to daylight reforms."

SIGNAL SPENDS $11,000 ON WRECKS.

The Signal Film Corporation in a little over ten months has spent upwards of $11,000 for railroad equipment for staging spectacular wreck scenes in "The Railroad Raiders," the serial featuring Helen Holmes which is being released through the Mutual Film Corporation. This does not include cars that have been built for wrecking purposes by the technical staff at the studio.

INGRAM FINISHES VIOLET MERSEREAU BLUEBIRD.

Over at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) studio work has stopped on "La Cigale," as Director Rex Ingram has completed Lotta's former starring vehicle, in which Violet Mersereau will appear among Bluebirds in August. The former stage comedy was brought down to the minute by John C. Brownell, who is now in charge of Bluebird's scenario activities in the East.

CAREWE USES FAMILY RELICS FOR ATMOSPHERE.

A dramatic struggle on the roof of a hut is one of the exciting scenes in Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming Metro production, "The Trail of the Shadow," directed by Edwin Carewe and presented by B. A. Rolfe. O. A. C. Lund has written this five-act photodrama of Western life, which has been adapted for the screen by June Mathis. The struggle takes place between Miss Wehlen as Sylvia Mason and Harry S. Northrup as Jack Leslie, the outlaw.

Handsome specimens of Navajo rugs, Indian basketry and beadwork are used in scenes of "The Trail of the Shadow." F. M. Fox, Edwin Carewe's father, brought many of these from his ranch at Corpus Christi, Texas. Learning that his son was about to direct a Western picture, he was anxious to supply some of the "local color" himself. He brought besides these a fine collection of animal skins and heads, which are used for the interiors of Sylvia Mason's cabin. These are relics of hunting expeditions enjoyed by "Eddie" Carewe, his brother Finnis, and Mr. Fox himself.

TRIANGLE ISSUES NOVEL SLIDE SERIES.

Triangle's supply department is getting out a novel and timely aid to exhibitors in a series of patriotic colored slides, made from original designs. They are not only appropriate to the present war situation, but may be used for Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Washington's and Lincoln's Birthdays and other national occasions.

The subjects featured in this series of slides were selected from several hundred designs and portray critical events in our history. The American flag is not played up too flamboyantly, but appears only whenever it is an actual part of the picture. The national colors are, however, used as a decorative border in order to give each slide the proper patriotic setting. It will be noted also that, while these slides are exclusively a trade production, they do not carry either the Triangle imprint or trademark, but are distributed to exhibitors with the purpose of co-operating with them in the work of stimulating patriotic sentiment.

Baby Marie Starts Pathe's Week

"When Baby Forgot" Is Lasalida's Mollie King in Serials for Week of June 24.

A BABY MARIE OSBORNE Gold Rooster play and the last episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross" are features of Pathe's program for the week of June 24. The Gold Rooster play is "When Baby Forgot," the first feature produced by Lasalida Films, Inc.

"When Baby Forgot" is in many respects one of the best Baby pictures yet. Like its predecessors, it is thoroughly clean and wholesome. As to the box office value of the star there is no question. Baby Marie Osborne is today one of the biggest attractions on the screen. The story tells how a little child brings her father and mother together after they had been estranged.

Ruth Roland stars in the seventh episode of "The Neglected Wife" entitled "The Message on the Mirror." A thrilling crisis is reached in this episode when Mary Kennedy learns the identity of the other woman in the life of her husband. Reports from all over the country indicate that wherever this serial is booked it is playing to big business.

"The Double Cross" is the title of the fifteenth episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross," produced by Astra with Mollie King as star. In the closing episode of this big serial the baffling mystery of the idtntity of the girl branded with the mark of the "double cross" is solved.

Harry Meyers and Rosemary Thelby appear on this program in one of their laughter-producing comedies.

The thirteenth release of the "Know America" Combitone scenics is entitled "Cattle Raising (Texas)." It shows especially interesting and timely scenes of scientific farming.

An International cartoon and scenic split reel release, and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 52 and 53 complete the program.

"THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER" (K-E-S-E).

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce that interest bordering on the extraordinary, is shown by exhibitors, in "The Star Spangled Banner," the three-reel Edison production based on a story of life in the Marine Corps. A regiment of Marines assisted in making this picture.

The plot is unusual, the story graphically told in film, and the climax will arouse enthusiasm in all patriotic breasts. Its release date, June 10, fits in with the great drive for recruits that the Marine Corps is making during the week June 10 to 16. "The Star Spangled Banner" has been approved by the Government.

"THE GREATER LAW" (Bluebird).

Created from Charles J. Wilson, Jr.'s, story, "The Code of the Klondyke," the July 16 release on the Bluebird program promises to be an exceptionally fine offering. "The Greater Law" has been selected as the screen title for this newest of the Lynn F. Reynolds series of "nature study" photoplays. Like all of the Reynolds releases, the action has been photographed out of doors, the Sierras, in mid-winter, having been chosen to counterfeit the Alaskan atmosphere necessary to the production.

Myrtle Gonzalez, George Hermandez, Gretchen Lederer and Lawrence Peyton led the Reynolds company through snow knee-deep, operating in the vicinity of Truckee, Cal., with peaks of the Sierras, clothed in frost and flecked with scattering fir trees and evergreens. The camera has caught some wonderously beautiful backings to a series of exciting episodes, reflecting the strenuous life in an Alaskan mining camp.

There are but few interiors and these are used to represent sensational events that transpire in a combination dancehall, saloon and hotel at a time when the Klondyke seethed with the highest pitch of excitement in the first days of the rush for gold. Otherwise the action is out of doors, amid snow and ice—calculated to be psychological in cooling effects on mid-summer audiences.

Pearl White in Summer Serial

To Accelerate Hot Weather Business "The Fatal Ring" Will Be Released in July Instead of September.

THE [illegible] exhibitors throughout the country [illegible] White serial this summer has caused J. A. [illegible] president and general manager of the Pathe [illegible] to announce six slabs and instead of releasing [illegible] Ring" in which Pearl White is starred, [illegible] September, as originally planned, the release [illegible]

The decision was made by the exhibitors because they [illegible] Pearl White is [illegible] the greatest box office [illegible] for the Summer months. "The Fatal Ring" has been [illegible] those who have seen the first episodes of this serial say that it is one of the best productions ever offered Pearl White [illegible] her exceptional histrionic ability and has given her [illegible] opportunity to do more thrilling stunts than those which endeared her to motion picture fans.

"The Fatal Ring" will be a money maker for the exhibitors in the months that they are glad to break even when they have the greatest stars and the greatest features on their programs. A series of three record-breakers during the Summer months have been placed to Pearl White's credit. Last Summer it was "The Iron Claw." The Summer before "The Exploits of Elaine" kept the ticket seller busy. The Summer before that "The Perils of Pauline" disproved the fallacy of many exhibitors who said they could not expect to make money in the Summer time.

In "The Fatal Ring," Pearl White, who plays the lead part of Pearl Standish, is supported by a great cast. Warner Oland, who played the part of Baron Huroki in "Patria," is the villain of this serial. Ruby Hoffman is a woman of mystery, a priestess whose followers do her bidding. Tom Giselle and Earle Fox are supporting members of the cast.

The serial is directed by George B. Seitz, one of the serial experts of the country and the author of the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Perils of Pauline," "The Iron Claw" and the "Shielding Shadow." In "The Fatal Ring" Mr. Seitz has had the co-operation of Fred Jackson, one of the most popular magazine writers of the day. The serial is based on a series of very successful stories which achieved wide popularity under the title of "Nocturnal Adventures of Nicholas Knox" in the Popular Magazine.

Pearl White, the heroine of "The Fatal Ring," is a blase society girl, who has so much money and so many things at her disposal that she finds life a bore. When she is involved in the recovery of a certain violet diamond sought by a strange religious sect, who have no compunction in killing those who oppose their efforts to recover the diamond, she finds life so thrilling and of so much interest that she is kept busy night and day avoiding the perils and pitfalls prepared for her. Her father bought the diamond from an Oriental priest who stole it. Pearl is held responsible for its loss, as her father is dead, and is driven to her best efforts to recover the diamond.

Her fate is wrapped up with the fate of Nicholas Knox, a follower of the strange sect, which part is played by Earle Fox, and with that of Tom Carlton, a reporter, which part is [illegible] by Tom Giselle.

Pathe has become noted among releasing companies for its widespread and efficient publicity campaigns. The campaign prepared for "The Fatal Ring" will be no exception to those which have gone before. Widespread publicity is being arranged for in newspapers. The regular posters, novelties and other things that will attract the attention of the motion picture fans to the serial have been prepared. The advertising campaign in the newspapers of the big cities throughout the United States is scheduled well in advance of release date and will continue during the serial.

THE LEES TO STAR IN FOX PICTURE.

The [illegible] with the Lee children, or as they have be[illegible] famous, "The Fox Baby Grands," is already well under way at the Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J., under the direction [illegible] Kenean Buel, the veteran film-maker who screened the film version of Rider Haggard's "She."

Everyone who has ever seen the Lee kiddies in any of the features in which they have appeared, has come from the playhouse thoroughly convinced that Jane and Katherine are [illegible] pt at the film art as any elder screen star. In addition to the amazing natural talent with which they are endowed, the two have learned every camera trick because they have lived in screen atmosphere almost since they began to toddle.

The picture in which they have the leading parts is rich in wholesome, delightful humor, but it does not want for dra[illegible] [illegible] was taken in preparing the scenario to make one of extraordinarily wide appeal, while adapted throughout to the particular kind of work which Jane and Katherine do best. The picture will be one of Mr. Fox's July releases, on the regular program.

Essanay Exploiting "Do Children Count?"

Supplying a Completely Outlined Advertising Campaign—Co-operating With Welfare Boards.

THE Essanay Company, in addition to supplying a comprehensive exploitation campaign on the "Do Children Count?" series, has also laid a solid foundation for the proper reception of the twelve subjects. These photoplays are a direct result of the demand made on all sides for pictures suitable for children's programs. While the subject is of vital interest to old and young alike, the moral tone is so clean and the child interest so strong, exhibitors are advised to use them as a special medium for increasing the patronage of the kiddies.

In this connection members of the various censorship committees, children's welfare boards and magazines interested in films for the youngsters were all asked to make arrangements with the different exchange managers for advance showing. Criticisms of the most laudatory nature have been arriving for the better part of a week from every part of the country. A complete list of the various organizations and prominent people recommending the series will be made up and furnished every theater where a booking is made, thus providing a testimonial list of inestimable value.

Additional assistance will be supplied in the shape of a campaign folder outlining the best methods for exploiting the little star, Mary McAlister. A most attractive folder which can be used for lobby display purposes has already been mailed to every exhibitor in the country. Two styles of slides, two styles of paper including one sheets, three sheets and six sheets, heralds and cuts have also been gotten up. A lobby display consisting of 22 x 28 photos and 11 x 14 photos is also available.

In addition, President Spoor of the Essanay Company has arranged with K-E-S-E for a special advertising proposition to all exhibitors booking the entire series.

CORNELL'S MAN IN MADGE KENNEDY PICTURE.

Frank Morgan is one of the quartet of four principals who help to create the fun in the first of the screen farce comedies in which Madge Kennedy is starring for Goldwyn Pictures. Miss Kennedy herself is chief of the group. Mr. Morgan, who is not to be confounded with Ralph Morgan, his brother, is a well-knit and good-looking young man of twenty-seven, a typical son of Cornell, of which university he is a graduate. Frank Morgan learned the technique of comedy playing on the stage, his first appearance having been in that money-making farce comedy, "A Full House." Following this were a number of productions in a stock company, during which Mr. Morgan outgrew his novitiate, and an engagement in "In Cold Type."

On the screen Mr. Morgan has been seen in "The Girl Philippa," "A Modern Cinderella," "A Child of the Wild" and other photoplays released by Vitagraph, Edison, McClure and Fox. His role in the Madge Kennedy picture calls forth greater efforts than have yet been required from Mr. Morgan by any character he has portrayed on stage or screen.

WHOLESOME'S NEXT IS "EVERYBODY'S LONESOME.

M. J. Weisfeldt, general manager of Wholesome Films Corporation, announces that production already has started on "Everybody's Lonesome," one of the many good stories from the pen of Miss Clara E. Laughlin. The subject will be presented as a five-reel drama with a competent cast. Miss Laughlin herself is supervising the work of picturizing her famous story.

Production will shortly begin on another of Miss Laughlin's works, "The Penny Philanthropist."

RAMBEAU AND SAUNDERS HEAD MUTUAL.

"The Dazzling Miss Davison" and "A Bit of Kindling" Are Features Week of June 18.

TWO Mutual star productions top the list of releases for the week of June 18, "The Dazzling Miss Davison," featuring Marjorie Rambeau, and "A Bit of Kindling," in which Jackie Saunders plays the lead. In "The Dazzling Miss Davison" Miss Rambeau appears in a different role. An air of mystery surrounds the story. "A Bit of Kindling" shows Jackie Saunders as a ragged newsgirl.

Still More Thrills in "The Railroad Raiders."

"A Desperate Deed" is the eleventh chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," scheduled for June 18. One thriller follows another in quick succession. Helen Holmes manages to escape from the box car which is sinking in the water in one of these.

The fourteenth chapter of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series, ready June 22, is "A Sheep Among Wolves." The story shows the underworld, maddened by the Grey Seal, trying to capture that gentleman, and apprehend him while committing some crime.

"Tillie of the Nine Lives" is the La Salle Comedy released June 19. A small pig plays one of the principal roles in this comedy and serves as a messenger who brings help to Tillie, who is held in the power of a seeress.

The Cub comedy for June 21 is "Jerry's Red-Hot Trail" and features George Ovey, assisted by Louis FitzRoy, George George, C. E. Feehan, Harry De Roy and Claire Alexander. In this comedy Jerry gets mixed up with a Western sheriff and just escapes being hung from the limb of a tree.

Three Topical Films.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," which come to the screen on June 19, show Nantes, a port of western France; Puzzuoli, an ancient town of Italy, and a Russian village in winter.

"Mutual Weekly" will be released on its regular day, Wednesday, June 20.

"Reel Life," scheduled for June 21, is made up of five subjects: Knitting hosiery, an auto-drawn train, reclaiming the everglades, a tilting match on the water, and the most perfect child.

PATROTIC TRAILER FOR GAUMONT'S "REEL LIFE."

When Gaumont's "Reel Life" No. 58 reached the screen June 7 it had attached a patriotic cartoon trailer. This was prepared to arouse interest in the Liberty Loan. To supply the great demand for prints Gaumont delivers "Reel Life" to Mutual over four weeks in advance of the release date. As the motion picture industry only decided upon the trailer idea within the month, the cartoon trailed the release to the Mutual branch and was there attached. The picture used showed boys in the trenches and on the farm. As there are obviously millions of people who cannot serve their country in this way, the cartoon carried out the idea that they also could be of service by subscribing to the Liberty Loan.

"THE ROAD BETWEEN" (Erbograph).

"The Road Between," which will be Marian Swayne's second production for the Erbograph company, is rapidly assuming shape at the studios in 146th street. This picture should be peculiarly acceptable to exhibitors just now, for since the release of "Little Miss Fortune," Miss Swayne's previous production, many requests have come in for another picture with the same star. The producers are confident that "The Road Between" will be even better than its predecessor. While the story is in much the same vein—that of comedy-drama with great human interest—the character portrayed by the star is totally different.

JACK GARDNER IN ROLE OF FRONTIERSMAN.

Jack Gardner, Essanay's new star, will next be seen in "Land of Long Shadows," to be released through K-E-S-E June 18. "Land of Long Shadows" is said to be a vehicle peculiarly adapted for Gardner, giving him many opportunities to display his acknowledged ability. "Land of Long Shadows" was staged in picturesque wilds, and presents Gardner in a characterization role of a Western frontiersman.

Gardner appeared with success as leading man in the musical comedies, "Madame Sherry," "The Chocolate Soldier," "The Belle of Mayfair," and others. He will be supported by Ruth King.

CLIFTON NOW DIRECTING BLUEBIRDS.

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, stars in Bluebird's comedy-dramas, have a new director in the person of Elmer Clifton, who has succeeded William Worthington. The Farnum-Vernon combination is now busy, under Mr. Clifton's direction, in picturizing Jack Cunningham's scenario, "The Fourth Glove." Mr. Worthington's last Bluebird will be released July 5 under the title of "The Car of Chance," with Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon starring.

PATRIOTIC DECORATIONS.

In keeping with the spirit of the times, the United Theater Equipment Corporation has made special arrangements to secure for exhibitors patriotic lobby displays and decorations. These are made of papier mache and are very light, durable and soon constructed as to be convenient for hanging and decorating purposes. Among the most popular sellers are the American Shield, American Eagle and Uncle Sam.

"THE SLACKER" BEING PUSHED.

"The Slacker," the timely forthcoming Metro wonderplay in which Emily Stevens returns to the screen after a successful season on the stage, is being rushed to completion. Last week the company spent most of the time when the weather would permit working on the exterior settings. Two days were spent at beautiful Long Beach, where bathing scenes and scenes along the boardwalk were photographed.

CHICAGO'S CASTLE HAS RECORD WEEK.

Breaking an iron-clad rule, the Castle theater of Chicago laid aside its regular program to make room for a pre-release week's run of the latest Essanay-Washburn feature, "Filling His Own Shoes."

Mr. Washburn's personal appearance at the Castle afternoon and evening, simultaneously with the picture, resulted in a record-breaking week.

Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Lafayette McKee have arrived in Chicago from the Selig studios, Los Angeles, to appear in scenes for "The City of Purple Dreams." Colin Campbell is directing the production.

Margaret Widdemer's story, "The Rose Garden Husband," is being filmed in five reels by Ruth Ann Baldwin, Universal director. It features Mignon Anderson, with Leo Pierson playing opposite. In the supporting cast are L. M. Wells, Julia Jackson, Marie Van Tassel and George Pearce.

Working Airdomes and Theaters as Teams

Harry M. Crandall Is Operating His Savoy and Apollo Theaters in Conjunction with Adjoining Open Air Houses—Same Shows in Both.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Following a plan inaugurated last year, Harry M. Crandall is again "operating double" at the Savoy and Apollo theaters. The first-named is located on Fourteenth street, in the Mount Pleasant section; the latter is on H street, Northeast. Both have airdomes adjoining and these are what are producing the double exhibitions.

To overcome the many objections that arise from all sorts of conditions, the same show is given in the airdomes as is shown in the theaters. This is rather an expensive proposition, but it does away with the complaints that the management formerly received. For instance, on a cool night there are some people who would rather sit inside the theater, but at the same time there are others who would not find the lowered temperature unpleasant. It is difficult to suit both types so that before Mr. Crandall hit upon this scheme he was in quite a quandary as to what to do.

The Savoy park had to be greatly enlarged to meet the demands made upon its seating capacity, and this year many changes have been made. A large frame work has been erected at the back of the park, and in this the large screen has been set. The framework is a sort of imitation stage, with room for the orchestra, which is stationed just beneath the bottom of the screen.

The pathways, or aisles, are covered with beach pebbles, the other parts with crushed bluestone. Another innovation at the park is the varnished benches. It is found that by varnishing the seats a great deal of inconvenience is spared patrons wearing light clothing, for the paint from the benches not varnished wipes off and causes considerable damage.

The parks opened for the business of the season on June 1, but thus far the weather has not been very favorable. Despite war conditions, the exhibitors of Washington look forward to a very satisfactory summer business.

Railroad Congestion Bothers Exchange Men.

Washington, D. C.—Washington exchange managers and the exhibitors throughout the Washington territory suffered great inconvenience during the week because of the congestion in railroad transportation due to the encampment of the Confederate veterans in Washington. The trouble is said to have been that the railroads, as well as the members of the Convention Committee, greatly underestimated the number of people that would attend the encampment. The result was that not only were the express and mail shipments held up, but the citizens of Washington were hard put to it to provide sleeping quarters for the incoming guests.

K. O. Kirkman Appointed Booker at Mutual.

Washington, D. C.—K. O. Kirkman, who for the past year or more has been connected with the Charlotte branch of the Mutual previous to which time he was connected with the office of the General Film in this city, has been appointed booker at the Mutual exchange, succeeding Miss Clara Anderson, who recently resigned. Mr. Kirkman is quite well known in this locality.

Guy Brandt Takes a June Bride.

Washington, D. C.—Among the June brides and bridegrooms were noted Guy Brandt, assistant manager of the Washington branch of the K. E. S. E., and Miss Julia Byron. The ceremony took place in Saint Paul's Lutheran Church on June 4, attended by a large number of friends of both of the young people. R. Berger, manager of the exchange, was best man, and he maintains that he is entitled to that title in all of its various meanings. Following the ceremony the wedding party adjourned to the Ebbitt House, where a dinner was served.

Forty-three Blue Cards in Capital City Exchanges.

Washington, D. C.—The registration of men of military age in the city of Washington went through without a hitch, and the District of Columbia will show up well in furnishing its quota, first of registered and then of conscripted men. Curious to know how the film men stood with respect to registration the Moving Picture World correspondent queried all of the local exchanges. It would be too great a task to take a census of the moving picture theaters, but it is safe to say that all of these have one or more men carrying the blue cards showing that they had complied with the order of Uncle Sam to present themselves as American citizens for registration. The results from the exchanges are as follows:

General Film Company, 6; Universal Film Company, 3; Fox Film Corporation, 2; Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, 4; Metro Film Corporation, 6; Mutual Film Corporation, 4; Sidney B. Lust, Inc., 4; Pathe, Inc., 0; Triangle Film Corporation, 2; World Film Corporation, 2; Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay 3; Paramount Pictures Corporation, 7.

Salesmen Assn. Holds Rally.

Philadelphia, Pa. — The Philadelphia Salesmen Association, composed of a large representative body of the leading talent in this line, will hold its first get-together rally on Sunday, June 24, which will consist of a stag smoker. Edwin Booth, who is chairman of the entertainment committee, is planning several surprises in the way of having a general good time. Assisted by the well-known Allen May, of Selznick, some clever talent imported from New York is promised in addition to some real reels of films. The music will be supplied by an original orchestra made up of a combination from the various theaters. S. J. Ford, the president, who is also one of the leaders in the clean movie campaign here, states that this smoker is expected to be patronized by many exhibitors who will arrive prior to the date of the state convention, which should insure its success.

Noteworthy Features Hereabouts.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" opened at the Leader, Strand and West Allegheny theaters last week, and was put over in fine style. The advanced sale of tickets at these theaters not only reached a high water mark, but the capacity was taxed to the utmost.

The object of presenting this production is chiefly to secure funds for the local and international Red Cross Society for the relief of the war victims in Europe. Pictures to Aid Food Conservation.

When it comes to live wire work in bringing the best out of the motion picture Harry Lewy, co-proprietor of the Great Wizard theater, 31 West Lexington street, is right there. This time it is another movement to aid Uncle Sam in conserving the food supply of the nation. Mr. Lewy is photographing a drama which has been especially written on the subject and is being aided by J. Aler Barry, formerly with the Fine Arts Corporation, who will direct the picture. The Vagabond Players will do the acting. The scenario is not only interesting, but shows the evils of food waste. With a decided "kick" that is timely and up-to-date, this production may possibly prove, when it is done, an exceptional help to those people working upon this subject, not only in Baltimore, but all over the country, provided it really is what we expect it to be.

James Steele Becomes District Manager

Pittsburgh Paramount and Artcraft Offices Now in Same Building—Artcraft Will Be Managed Separately—E. T. Gerrish Heads Cleveland Paramount.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6104 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The local moving picture trade receives with much approval the interesting announcement that James Steele, secretary and treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation for the past year, has resigned that position and will be located from now on in this city as district manager of the Paramount offices in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland.

The new branch of the Paramount Pictures in Cleveland is to be established as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made, which will require a week or ten days. E. T. Gerrish, manager of the Pittsburgh office, has been named to head the Cleveland Paramount exchange.

According to the statement issued here, the merger of the Paramount and Artcraft offices will mean a change in location only. The various Artcraft managers will be retained, it is understood, and the business of that concern will be conduced separately from the Paramount. The Pittsburgh Artcraft exchange has been moved from the Seltzer Film Building to the Famous Players Building, where Mr. Klein, manager of the Artcraft, will continue in the same capacity.

Mr. Steele made the following statement regarding his resignation as secretary and treasurer of the Paramount organization:

"When I accepted the position a year ago it was understood that it would be only temporary. I have a family and home in Pittsburgh, and the ties binding me to the Iron City are too strong to be severed entirely.

"When the Paramount absorbed its exchanges I endeavored to retire from the position I had in the home office, but the time was not propitious and I deferred taking the step until last week, when the final arrangements were made for merging the Artcraft and Paramount business. This move placed a number of good men at the disposal of the directorate, and I deemed the time an opportune one for stepping down."

Leader Film Manager Fined for Uncensored Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Edward Wheeler, manager of the Leader Film exchange, in the Sauer building, Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, was fined $225 for alleged violations of the Pennsylvania state censor law after a hearing before Alderman Alpern recently. E. M. Donehoo Again With Paramount.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—E. M. Donehoo, who resigned some time ago from the road staff of the Pittsburgh Famous Players office to enter the exhibiting business at Butler, Pa., has again joined that organization and is looking after the interests of the Paramount in this district. Mr. Donehoo had been with Paramount about two years, covering at various times West Virginia, Pennsylvania and parts of Ohio, and is quite popular with exhibitors. Although he met with considerable success as an exhibitor, Mr. Donehoo found that the call of the road was too strong and he is now greeting his old friends in the Pittsburgh territory.

Business Notes from Pittsburgh.

In a recent report, the Pennsylvania Censor Board endorsed these comedies very highly for their educational and artistic value. A Motoy production has been secured for exhibition June 11 at the closing session of the National Coneference of Charities and Corrections being held here.

The Court theater, Wheeling, W. Va., contracted for the Paul Terry cartoon, "20,000 Feats Under the Seat," at the National Film Booking Service, and ran it with excellent effect the entire week of June 4, in connection with the presentation of the big film drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Draft Makes Problem for Film Offices

When Soldiers Are Called It May Be Hard to Get Substitutes Able to Do the Work—Training of Understudies Will Be in Order.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Film men of Buffalo and many points in Western New York are already considering how the screen industry will be effected when scores of young men in their employ will be drafted into the federal service. Operators, ticket takers, ushers, managers and others engaged in various capacities at the theaters in this territory in many cases will be eligible to the selective draft. The local exchanges also have their quota of alert, active young men, many of whom this year or later will be called to the colors. The problem of filling their places will have to be considered so that the service and efficiency at the exchanges and theaters will not be impaired. The subject is so vital and far-reaching that local theatrical men are ready for suggestions on the subject, and are therefore watching with interest the discussions of this topic at a meeting of the National Association of Corporation Schools being held in Buffalo this week.

The delegates come from all parts of the country, their business being the training of young men employed by corporations of various kinds. Such work is a big feature, for instance, for the great film corporations which maintain exchanges in all parts of the country, and are constantly developing new blood for the efficient management of their branches.

Will Have to Train New Employees.

The advantage of persistently educating understudies, who will be ready when the time comes to fill the places of young men who will depart for military training, was emphasized at the convention. One speaker said companies will be compelled to train many new employees in a short period. Men are beginning to realize, according to another speaker, that to get the most out of an individual worker he must be studied and nursed along. He said it is not always wise to discharge a man, as it takes a considerable amount of money to train another to take his place. It is generally conceded that in the film business next year, and until the close of the European conflict, there will be such a shortage of young men that young women and middle-aged men will be a factor, as never before, in helping to attend to the hundred and one details at the exchanges and theaters. The wedding bells are ringing furiously in Buffalo these days, but, according to the War Department, matrimony will not hamper a man's eligibility for the firing line.

Notes From the Local Triangle Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Miss Grace Redans, bookkeeper; C. F. Woodward, booker; and Andrew Biersbach, shipper, have resigned at the Triangle office, Buffalo, and are taking a vacation. Their new positions in the film business will be announced later. Recent callers at the Triangle were David Cohen, Symphony theater, Binghamton; Mr. Pierce, Temple theater, Geneva; Mr. Peterson, Mozart theater, Jamestown, and Joseph Patridge, representing McClure's series department.

Hippodrome Not to Reopen.

Get New Licenses This Month.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Vincent H. Riordan, internal revenue collector of Buffalo, announced that all special government licenses expire June 30. He says that after that date any person who continues in business without the necessary tax stamp will have the attention of the United States attorney in this district. He reminded "proprietors of theaters, museums and concert halls that they pay a tax dependent upon seating capacity and population of city or town."

Sunday Closing Plea in Olcott Beach.

Rochester, N. Y.—Various residents near Olcott Beach, a Lake Ontario summer resort, which has moving pictures and other midway attractions, have petitioned Sheriff William Shaw of that district to close the amusement places there on Sundays. An injunction against the threatened closure has been secured, and the Olcott board of trade is trying to bring about a compromise between the anti-closing faction and their opponents.

James Calnay Indicted by Grand Jury.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The grand jury last week returned an indictment against James Calnay, promotor of the defunct Calnay Cinema Corporation, charging him with having obtained $1,300 from Elizabeth M. Hawkins, of Louisville, through misrepresentation. It is alleged in the true bill that after Calnay promoted the Calnay Cinema Corporation, he represented to the woman that the Dixie Film Co., of Nashville, Tenn., with a paid up capital stock of $10,000, was a branch of the local concern, and that it was making money. The indictment charges that all such representations so made by Calnay were false. It is said that Calnay induced the woman to invest all her savings in the company, which closed its offices in the Republic building shortly after he left the city.

R. L. McLean Reopens the Grand.

Frankfort, Ky.—After being dark for more than a year the Grand theater on June 3 threw open its doors to the public under the management of R. L. McLean, former manager of the Capital theater. A few years ago the Grand was the leading theater of the city, but was closed after business became dull through too much competition. The seats have been done over, rear exits provided, the house painted Theater's Stage Becomes Dancing Floor Show.

Louisa, Ky.—On June 1 the New Era theater, of Louisa, Ky., was reopened in the new building on Main street with everything new throughout. There was a full house for both shows, and after the final show the management gave over the platform to the young people and furnished music for dancing, which made the opening a very popular affair. This is something of a new wrinkle in moving picture theater operation, and one that should prove of advantage in a small town where dance halls are scarce articles.

New Picture Shows for Growing Winchester.

Winchester, Ky.—Arthur N. Bloomfield and Fonda Minor, proprietors of the Pastime theater, have closed a lease with the Winchester Masonic Order for the lease of the room formerly occupied by the Cozy theater, and will shortly open the theater as "The Family." The old fixtures, etc., have been leased, and with a few improvements the house will be ready to operate. Both theaters will be operated, and due to the big growth of Winchester in the past few months can be operated profitably. Winchester is in the heart of the big new oil district of Kentucky, which is growing so fast that the city has trouble in housing its residents and visitors.

Charles Scott Leaves the Ben Ali Theater.

Lexington, Ky.—Charles Scott has resigned from the management of the Ben Ali theater. For a number of years Mr. Scott was manager of the Lexington opera house, but went with the Ben Ali in the consolidation. The latter failed to make good as a theater, and was turned into a moving picture theater at which it proved a success. Mr. Scott has been operating both houses, and will probably continue in charge of the opera house, which is operating in connection with the Ben Ali.

Thomas Davis Made Manager of Cincinnati Theater.

Council of Women Wants Children's Shows

Toronto Body Will Encourage Special Matinees—One Delegate Inveighs on the "Horrors" Found in Mo ving Pictures in a Quebec City.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONT.—The Toronto Council of Women recently adopted a resolution to encourage the holding of special children's matinees in moving picture theaters on Saturdays or other convenient days, but not before many cruel, cruel words were uttered by a number of members. Some argued against the proposition on the ground that encouragement of any kind toward moving pictures would not be conductive to public morals, while others had strong opinions regarding the conditions to be found in some theaters.

One of the prominent members, Dr. Margaret Patterson, raised objection, not against the pictures, but against the careless screening in some theaters. She referred to the flicker and speeding, as well as bad ventilation. This lady made favorable references to the Regent theater, Toronto, as one house where conditions were nearly perfect. She could hardly know them all.

It so happened that the National Council of Women, in session on June 2, also dealt at length with the subject of picture shows, with reference to the effects upon child life in Canada. Mrs. Boomer, of London, Ont., pointed out that in a Quebec city where a special committee had examined 300 pictures it had been found that the scenes included "59 instances of free love, three of concubinage, eleven adulteries, five divorces, twenty-eight seductions, twenty rapes, twenty-eight justifications of vice, fifty-two scenes of places of ill-fame, twenty-nine cases of drunkenness, sixty-seven murders or suicides, forty-seven thefts and six acts of criminal incendiarism."

The women admitted that one of the difficulties of the film business seemed to be the inability of the theater interests to make "special children's shows a success financially."

Local Councils all over Canada have been asked to interest moving picture producers and exchanges to provide suitable pictures, "such as fairy tales, travelogues, industrial views and wholesome humorous sketches" for presentation for the pleasure and benefit of children, and that "the whole question of moving picture be taken up by all local councils."

Special Show for School at Crown Theater.

MORE KANSAS CITY NOTES.

"Womanhood" Enters Kansas Under Favorable Auspices.

Kansas City, Mo.—"Womanhood" is giving many exhibitors of the Kansas City district a chance to show their mettle—and make some extra money. The Altmans put it over big in Kansas City, at their New Center theater, not hesitating to spend a little money on special music and advertising.

J. H. Hooper, manager of the Orpheum at Topeka, has probably gone the limit, not only in devising plans for exploiting the picture, but in getting local cooperation that makes the showing a real event. The picture enters Kansas under very favorable conditions, most interesting of which is the earnest support of Major A. M. Fuller.

Major Fuller saw the picture when it was before the board of review. He pronounced it one of the greatest he had ever seen, and declared that the governor should buy it for the state, so that everybody could see it. He is cooperating with Manager Hooper in the Topeka engagement. Lieutenant Carr of Battery B, Kansas City, will speak at the theater. There will be a special chorus, led by the two girls who led the Kansas City Grand Opera Chorus that sang during the engagement of "Womanhood" at the New Center theater. Army and navy officials will speak on different days; and there will be drilling on the stage by the drill team of the Boys Industrial School. Recruiting will be conducted in the lobby.

The biggest feature of the Topeka engagement is a patriotic parade, in which civic organizations will participate. One of the girls will ride a white horse, dressed as Joan of Arc.

"Womanhood" was given a private showing at the Colonial, Wichita, May 26, to nearly 1,000 city officials, newspaper men and exhibitors of that city and surrounding towns.

Springfield, Mo., Exhibitors Get Back to Pictures.

Springfield, Mo., is enjoying the benefits now of a consolidation of two moving picture theaters. There had been a surplusage for some time, and competition had got to the warm point where nobody was making much money. The Aladdin Theater Co., one of the most progressive and aggressive of the exhibitors, recently took over the Alhambra, and closed the Aladdin. The latter was one of the smaller houses, but had been getting good patronage. The trouble with the business was not so much in patronage, as in the cost of doing business. In the eager desire to offer more than the other fellow, the exhibitors got to putting in vaudeville and all sorts of attractions, until the moving picture end of the business was almost lost sight of. A new era is dawning now.

The Alhambra, managed by strong interests, and with progressive ideas, will stick exclusively to pictures, and let the people know that pictures are worth seeing for themselves alone. It will eliminate vaudeville and "tabs" and show what a real picture show can accomplish in attracting patronage, and in making money.

Liberty Bond Booth at Princess Theater

Harry Sudekum Instituted Innovation to Help Sale of Liberty Loan Bonds—Bankers Send Representatives to Negotiate Sales.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Manager Harry Sudekum of the Princess theater has launched an innovation in placing a Liberty Bond loan booth in the spacious lobby of this theater, and has set a good example. Bankers have long realized the value of the moving picture and vaudeville theater as a means of advertising, and this cooperative move on the part of Mr. Sudekum and the Nashville banks will serve a manifold purpose on account of its being in the interest of the great American war loan.

The Liberty booth occupies a prominent section of the main corridor, being built along the wall for a distance of some twenty-five feet or more, flanked on all sides by large posters of a patriotic nature, such as "No Sacrifice Too Great When Liberty and Honor Are at Stake," and "'You May Be Out of the Age of Conscription Yourself, But Your Dollars Never Grow Too Old to Help." A representative from each of the Nashville banks, twelve in number, were stationed at this booth before and after all performances, and during the show, armed with applications for Liberty Bond subscriptions.

In addition to the lobby plan, the management arranged for a speaker to appear at each performance and explain in detail the workings of the war loan to the people, telling just how the subscriptions could be entered on both the cash and installment plan, and calling attention to the vital necessity of having the American public support the bond issue to the fullest extent. This, it is explained, is the keynote to America's part in winning the great world war.

Manager Harry Sudekum is deserving of every consideration as a patriot by reason of his many patriotic moves since the German crisis assumed serious aspects, and through the good offices of his theater has attracted many men to the first line defense work, while his assistance with the Liberty Bond movement will undoubtedly prove a tremendous asset to the cause of its overwhelming success in Nashville.

Mayor's Order Stops All War Pictures.

Nashville, Tenn.—Mayor Robert Ewing on June 1 issued instructions to the Nashville Board of Moving Picture Censors to stop the presentation of all war films in Nashville moving picture theaters. This step was taken upon advice of the State Federal Registration Board, the members of which are of the opinion that the war pictures have a tendency to make the registration on June 5 more difficult than would ordinarily be the case, and for a number of days reels depicting war scenes have been ordered off the screen. Hamilton Love, chairman of the local censor board, and a member of the National Board of Review, has requested advance showings on all pictures of this nature. Even cartoon comedies of war have been taken off.

"Womanhood" Passes.

A private exhibition of "Womanhood," however, convinced the censors that not all war pictures are bad for enlistments, and after an advance showing at the Strand, where the picture is booked for a four days' run, the board was of the opinion that much more good than harm would be accomplished by its exhibition. E. C. Faircloth, a member of the board, stated: "If it does not wake every spark of manhood in a person, that person is not much man, and if a picture like that should keep him from enlisting, he had no intentions of enlisting anyhow."

Among the invited guests at the private showing were Governor Tom C. Rye, the city commissioners, and others.

The local army recruiting stations are rendering assistance in bringing the crowds to see this play, realizing the wonderful effect it will have toward stimulating recruiting. The picture itself bears the Adjutant-General's testimonial. A recruiting officer has been placed in the lobby of the Strand during the picture's run to receive enlistments in the regular army. It is said that on the night of its first presentation in Atlanta, seventeen men from the audience signed applications for enlistment at the door.

Mutual Now Located in New Home.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Mutual Film has moved from 500 South Main street into its new quarters at Fourth and Union streets, where they are prepared to take care of the company's business in a more prompt and efficient manner than ever before. Mr. Gandolphi, who has been representing the Mutual interests in New Orleans, has removed his quarters to the Memphis office, and will travel out of this city in future. Manager E. L. Rifer of the local branch states that Mutual has been unusually successful in this territory with their big Lone Star only proposition of Chaplin releases, and that there have been more calls for the Mutual Weekly than it has been possible to fill.

Memphis Theater Activities.

Memphis, Tenn.—Work is progressing very rapidly on the new Daisy theater on Beale street. Manager Joe Maceri states that he will have one of the finest theaters operated exclusively for colored people in the entire South.

The Liberty, a Beale street house, is being thoroughly repaired and renovated, and will open within a few days.

The Chelsea Airdome will be opened by Mrs. J. C. Craig for the summer season. High class shows are planned.

Nathan & Frank, who operated the Bellevue Airdome last year, will reopen this house at once.

During the four days' run of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," Manager Wassman of the Knickerbocker placed upon the streets a novel and attractive advertisement in the form of a big submarine with guns mounted, etc., advertising the big feature.

Loew Runs Free War Loan Pictures.

Memphis, Tenn.—Loew's Lyceum on May 30 issued invitations to every business man in Memphis to a free Liberty Bond matinee on that day, at which time a special film, running fifteen minutes, was shown in behalf of the loan movement. Speakers from the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations made talks in favor of the bond issue, the films depicting preparations being made in many of the governmental departments for prosecuting the war with Germany, and a heavy attendance was the result.

Kaufman Notes.

Memphis, Tenn.—On April 14 the Mutt and Jeff series of animated cartoons had been before the public for one year, and A. H. Kaufman, of Kaufman Specials, lays claim to the fact that this is the only cartoon to last that long on a state-rights basis. On May 28 an educational subject was added to the cartoons, making a full reel picture.

Mr. Kaufman announces that his company has secured the new Everett True comedies, adapted from leading papers over the country. Owing to the popularity of the famous Everett, an unusual run is predicted for this new feature series of comedy, which were placed for distribution on June 4.

Birmingham, Ala., Business Picking Up.

Birmingham, Ala.—"During the cool weather recently experienced here, business has been only fair with us," said Manager Doc Graham of the Queen Feature Service recently, "but is getting better all the time, and as soon as the sun comes out on both sides of the street to stay things will look up considerably." Mr. Graham reports that the Marcus Loew circuit has booked Christie Comedies, for which his exchange is distributor, for all of their Southern houses.

Local Exchanges Need More Room.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Cleveland is sorely in need of another building devoted in part or entirely to film exchanges. At the present time the Belmont building on Prospect avenue and the Sincere building on East 4th and Prospect avenue house a majority of the big exchanges. There are still some film companies located in other buildings who would like to move, but they can't get the accommodations.

The General Film has been looking for a place big enough for several months. It finally succeeded in getting an option on space in the Sincere building, with more available later.

The Famous Players expect to open a big exchange in the Forest City within a month and are looking for at least 6,000 feet of floor space. At present the Cleveland and northern Ohio business is handled out of Pittsburgh.

The new Goldwyn exchange will have temporary quarters probably in the Sincere building. But in the fall, when the releasing is on in earnest, they will need large quarters. Manager Bandy has been looking high and low for space.

Leon D. Netter, president of the Masterpiece company, will locate his exchange in the Sincere building on the fourth floor.

Tri-State Has Slight Difficulty.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The local office of the Tri-State exchange, handling Art Dramas and Christy comedies, was in the hands of a court officer the last week, due to a misunderstanding between the Tri-State and a New York producing company. It is expected that the difficulties will be settled shortly, however.

Hippodrome Goes Back to Vaudeville.

Cleveland, Ohio.—After four weeks of big pictures, the Hippodrome has gone back to vaudeville. The big house always has been a vaudeville house and, while the pictures did good business, it was not enough to justify continuing the policy. The Hipp seats 4,000.

A Piece of Outrageous Mischief.

Newark, O.—Destruction of property and perhaps loss of life was prevented in the Auditorium theater, Newark, recently, when the operator discovered that matches had been placed at intervals in the eight reels of the preparedness picture, "Womanhood." Police are investigating.

Local Theaters Observe Registration Day.

Cleveland, O.—The theaters of Ohio closed until 2 p. m. on Tuesday, June 5, Draft Registration Day, in accordance with a proclamation issued by Governor Cox. Stores, banks, parks, schools, saloons, etc., were also closed, some all day, making it a holiday.

Mr. Perry came here about two years ago, starting in as special representative; then appointed assistant manager and now he is the manager. He has surrounded himself with a capable organization of salesmen, and it is generally known in this territory that the Pathe salesmen earn more money than their competitors, as they operate on salary and commission. Michigan is mighty good both to Pathe and C. A. Perry, manager, and in return Michigan is getting mighty good pictures from Pathe.

C. A. Perry.

McGaw, formerly manager of the Washington, is taking the place of the various managers while on their summer vacations, and will later take charge of the new theater on Adams avenue which Mr. Kunsky will open some time in July. Harry W. Irons, formerly at the Liberty theater, goes to the Washington, while Mr. Smith, formerly assistant to Mr. Gardiner at the Royal, goes to the Liberty.

A. I. Shapiro Returns to Open Goldwyn.

Detroit, Mich.—We are glad to report the return to Detroit of A. I. Shapiro, who will manage the Goldwyn exchange. Mr. Shapiro will arrive in Detroit on June 10 and look for a temporary office. When the new film building at John R and Elizabeth streets is completed next September, the Goldwyn corporation will occupy the sixth floor. Mr. Shapiro tells the World correspondent that from now until September he will be busy screening the completed Goldwyn productions for exhibitors, so that they can take only such pictures as they want.

Mr. Shapiro is well known to Michigan exhibitors, having formerly managed the Fox exchange and later the Triangle exchange. For the past four months he has been in Buffalo handling the Selznick productions. The appointment of Mr. Shapiro to the Detroit management of Goldwyn was made by Abraham Weiss, formerly with Triangle and now vice-president and exchange manager for Goldwyn.

With Feature Films Locally.

Detroit, Mich.—"Intolerance" will complete its fifth week at the Detroit opera house on June 16, and on the 17th "Joan the Woman" will start an indefinite engagement at the Opera House. Following this engagement will probably come "Within the Law" (Vitagraph) or "A Mormon Maid."

Detroit, Mich.—Howard A. Bauer, who has been Detroit manager for the Artcraft for the past six months, has resigned, taking effect June 9. The general management of both Paramount and Artcraft in Michigan and Northern Ohio will be in the hands of H. A. Ross, who has now surrounded himself with a capable office and sales organization.

General's O. Henry Stories Going Big.

Detroit, Mich.—O. Henry stories, released through the General Film Co., are becoming extremely popular with Michigan exhibitors. The Madison and Washington theaters are running them a full week, and the best theaters throughout the state are booking them. Dave Prince, manager or the General exchange in Detroit, is also pushing the Black Cat series, and he expects numerous bookings on the new Kalem-Stingaree series.

Duplex Theater Reopens.

Detroit, Mich.—The Duplex theater after some legal entanglements has reopened under the general direction of George W. Weeks, who also is director general of the Drury Lane theater, and in addition controls the Michigan and Northern Ohio rights to Bluebird productions. Mr. Weeks plans to hold different attractions in both auditoriums at the Duplex. For the week of June 3 he is showing "Birth" in No. 1 auditorium and Bluebird productions in No. 2 auditorium.

Manager Smith of the Ferry Field on Leave.

Detroit, Mich.—William B. Wreford, one of Detroit's most popular newspapermen, is temporarily handling the affairs and bookings of the Ferry Field theater, Grand River and the Boulevard. W. R. Smith, former manager, is taking a three-months' leave of absence owing to poor health, upon the advice of his physician. Mr. Wreford is an officer in the company and is taking an active interest in the theater's affairs.

Bluebirds on Open Booking Plan.

Detroit, Mich.—George W. Weeks, manager for Bluebird in Michigan, is offering to exhibitors in his territory the first thirty Bluebird releases on the open booking plan. This idea of taking the old releases and "open booking" them seems to be growing in popularity. The Paramount now has its first 104 releases on the open market; the Fox Film is offering its first nineteen two-reel comedies open booking, and now George Weeks comes along with a similar plan. Is the day coming when all pictures will be "open booking"?

Open Booking and Theater Publicity.

Detroit, Mich.—The great objection on the part of some Michigan exhibitors to open booking is this: For instance, they advertise their house as a Paramount theater or as a Fox theater, playing up the name of the producer just as much as the star or the production. These theaters for instance advertise in the papers and in their programmes "exclusive distributors and the home of Paramount Pictures" or Fox pictures or whatever the production may be which they control. Now, then, open booking comes along; their competitor has the same chance to get these productions; at least they can show what the other exhibitor does not want, which means that both houses can show Paramount, Fox or some other productions which heretofore was held by the one house. The result is that the first exhibitor can no longer advertise that he has these productions exclusively or that he is the "home" of such productions. The writer has heard a lot of just such criticism on the part of exhibitors, but, of course, there is also the side of the producer, who no doubt has come to open booking, believing it for the best interests of the industry.

Senator Bolen Has Another Censor Bill Ready.

Battle Creek, Mich.—Senator George Bolen of Battle Creek, Mich., who introduced a censorship bill at the last Michigan legislative session promises to introduce a similar bill when the legislature meets again in 1919. This should behoove Michigan exhibitors to do two things—show clean pictures only, and organize into a strong state association.

Theaters Co-operate on Liberty Bond.

Detroit, Mich.—Michigan theaters are co-operating splendidly in advertising the Liberty Bond Loan. At the leading Detroit theaters prominent business men have been giving five-minute talks almost daily, urging people to buy liberally of the bonds. Over in Jackson, W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic, followed the same plan. Theaters are showing slides besides advertising the Liberty Bond Loan in their programmes. Individually the proprietors and managers are buying unsparingly of the bonds. One of the biggest purchases was made by the Majestic theater, Detroit, amounting to $25,000. At most of the Detroit exchanges employes—from the shipping clerk to the manager—are buying bonds, the companies having arranged for their easy payment. Not an employe at the World or Universal exchange has failed to buy a bond.

Atlanta Proposes Raising Theater Licenses

Deficit in City's Finance Sheet—Council Wants to Increase Theater License Rate by 500 Per Cent.—Exhibitors May Protest.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—Since the Atlanta council has no power to increase the city's tax rate to meet the deficit in the June finance sheet, and since it is futile for council to anticipate more than a certain amount of revenue it is now proposed to increase the city's revenue by raising business license taxes.

The tax committee of council, headed by Alderman Jonas H. Ewing, set about this work Friday, May 25, and after going over the 1916 tax ordinance thoroughly, made increase in the license taxes of over 50 businesses. The revised list as proposed by committee was to be submitted to council at its next meeting. Among the taxes raised was that of motion picture shows from $100 to $500. It has not as yet been decided by the exhibitors just what protest, if any, will be made.

Exhibitors Thank Georgia Senator.

Atlanta, Ga.—Exhibitors over the South are especially thankful to Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia for his successful fight in the interest of the smaller moving picture theaters throughout the whole country to escape the heavy war tax assessed against them by the lower house of Congress. The Senator has pushed to a successful conclusion a fight in the Senate Finance Committee exempting from the tax all moving picture theaters whose admission charge is less than 25 cents. It is believed the Senate will approve the action of the committee. Many smaller theaters, especially in small towns over the South, were closing, knowing, as they did, that this tax would do the work. Atlanta exchangemen are much pleased with the new order of affairs.

Atlanta, Ga.—Arthur Lucas, proprietor of the Strand, the Vaudette and other motion picture theaters in Atlanta, has been in Washington, D. C., representing before the Senate committee the interests of several hundred small theaters throughout the state, with reference to the proposed war tax on moving picture theaters.

Atlanta Business Notes.

Several Atlanta Exchanges will handle certain sections of Florida after June 1st on account of the closing of branches in Florida cities.

Monday's initial showing of "The Submarine Eye" at the Rialto theater, where it is having a week's run, more than made good the elaborate advertising that preceded it. Capacity held all week.

With a view to stimulating recruiting in the navy and acting under the advance of the Navy Department, Lieutenant Keller, of the recruiting station worked in conjunction with Manager Willard C. Patterson of the Criterion theater last week and rendered every assistance in the effective presentation of "Womanhood," the Vitagraph preparedness spectacle, which is being shown for a six-day engagement.

Atlanta Exhibitors Rejoice at Prospect

It Is Expected that 80,000 of Uncle Sam's Chosen Lads Will Be Encamped Here This Winter—Theaters to Provide the Best for Them.

ATLANTA, GA.—This community has been selected for several encampments for the training of war recruits, and is to become one of the best amusement centers in the South. It is estimated that 80,000 soldiers in training will be located in Atlanta all the time. Airdomes and small theaters are being planned near each encampment, and also near Fort McPherson. These, in addition to the many large moving picture theaters in the city, will soon be brushing up the "standing room only" sign. Soldiers must be amused, when off duty, and in the case of Atlanta, as in nearly every other instance where an opportunity looms up for lots of business, it is spoiled by the creeping in of cheap, no-account moving picture shows; but the Atlanta managers are preparing to succeed, and to offer good clean and, as near as possible, first run films, and to see that the soldiers are given their money's worth.

Jake Wells Gives Use of Lyric for Fire Benefit.

Atlanta, Ga.—The services of the Lyric orchestra, also those of a number of Atlanta vocalists, and a showing of moving pictures, were given at a concert at the Lyric theater Sunday afternoon for the benefit of the fire sufferers. Jake Wells gave the free use of the theater and various attaches also gave their services to Manager George Hickman. Every cent of the voluntary contributions given were turned over to the fire sufferers' fund.

Many Changes in St. Louis Film Row Offices

E. W. Dustin Made Manager of Triangle Exchange Succeeding Floyd Lewis, Who Will Open Goldwyn Branch—D. M. Thomas Heads Fox, Joe Levy, Bluebird.

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Pl., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—E. W. Dutsin has been made manager of the Triangle exchange in the Plaza building, succeeding Floyd Lewis, who will open the Goldwyn offices for this territory.

Mr. Dustin is one of the best known amusement experts in the country. He knows the regular stage from the footlights as well as from the box office and manager's office angle, and his experience in the pictures includes a knowledge, gained through actual experience, of production, selling and exchange management and methods. Dustin opened the Pathe exchange when they withdrew from the General a number of years ago. From there he went to the World Film when that organization enlarged its output, and from that to open the International offices, where he remained until the Hearst interests merged with Pathe.

Dustin, or Eddie, as he is called, has one of the largest circles of friends and acquaintances in filmdom, and is called a good scout, and all the other titles that are bestowed upon men who have the happy faculty of being all around good fellows in business as well as in social affairs.

J. Baker as manager. Mr. Levy is well known in the territory, having been manager of the Fox exchange a few months ago.

The new Bluebird offices are fitted up in fine shape, with a private office for Manager Levy, and a generous sized reception room for exhibitors and visitors. Mr. Levy says he is glad to get back to St. Louis and Film Row, and that the latch string is always out for old friends and acquaintances at the new Bluebird nest.

Lewis to Distribute Goldwyn Products.

Floyd Lewis, who was in charge of the Triangle exchange since its establishment, has resigned to assume management of the Goldwyn offices, which are being fitted up in the Plaza building. The Goldwyn headquarters will be on the second floor, immediately behind the Plaza Hotel, with an entrance on Locust street. The new exchange is being fitted up with steel vaults and other appurtenances of first class film distributing offices.

Kansas City News Letter

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

George H. Bowles Understands Publicity.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The moving picture industry is setting a commendable example to other industries, in the agressiveness with which it is going after business. George H. Bowles, manager of the Bluebird exchange at Kansas City, announced after a conference at Chicago, with E. H. Goldstein, general manager, that he was going to spend several hundred dollars a week in Kansas City and other large cities of the territory, appealing directly to patrons.

The Kansas City papers circulate over a considerable territory, and every boost for Bluebird in them will help the exhibitors generally. Other large papers in the territory will further emphasize the pictures. The advertising starts June 7 with the release of "A Doll's House." Three-column 12-inch space will be used Thursdays in the Post, and Saturdays in the Star and Times.

Every theater in the district that uses the pictures, will be mentioned in the advertisements. The copy is prepared in New York, and gives equal prominence to all the stars, so that the Bluebird releases will all prove equal drawing cards. The advertising will be handled directly through the exchange.

In this way the Bluebird company secures the maximum benefit from its very effective advertising to the trade.

Ohio Theaters Observe Registration Day

Local Exhibitors' League Fall in With Governor Cox's Appeal and Keep Houses Closed Until Five O'Clock.

From Kenneth O. Crain, 307 First Nat. Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—At a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce, held the week before June 5, Registration Day, it was unanimously decided to close all theaters until two o'clock in the afternoon, in accordance with the request of Governor Cox. Furthermore, the managers decided to devote the remainder of the day to patriotic demonstrations, in connection with their regular programs, and this was done. As a general rule, the routine observed was the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" on opening at two o'clock, with the audience singing the anthem. The film announcement of the Liberty Loan was then shown, with a picture of President Wilson and information regarding the Red Cross and local enlistment stations. At the conclusion of each program the national air was also played. This routine proved very satisfactory, adding much to the patriotic air of the day, and seemed to please the public greatly.

Dayton, O.—At a special meeting of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, with President Thompson presiding, it was decided to comply with the request of Governor Cox to close theaters until two o'clock on June 5, the day for registration of eligibles to the conscription act, and all houses in Dayton and other towns affiliated with the league were therefore closed on that date. A resolution to that effect, signed by Dr. Thompson and by Secretary A. F. Kinzeler, was made public after the meeting.

Hamilton, O.—Although at first there was objection on the part of moving picture managers to closing on June 5, on account of Registration Day, due principally to an understanding that closing for the entire day was desired, the managers later agreed without dissent to close until two o'clock, following the plan adopted elsewhere. Manager Broomhall of the Jefferson and the Jewel adopted this policy, as did Manager Goodwin of the Grand, Manager Schalk of the Eagle and other leading exhibitors.

New Policy at Family Theater.

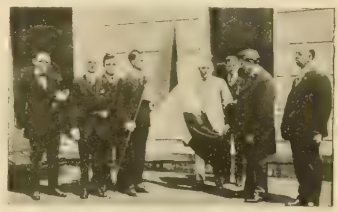
Cincinnati, O.—The Family theater, which, since its change to the feature policy, under the management of I. Libson, has followed the usual course of showing two programs a week, has decided upon the addition of a third program, making changes on Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays instead of on Sundays and Thursdays. The new policy was designed to make room for additional material which the management desires to use. The Triangle productions will continue to feature the Family programs, William S. Hart in "Wolf Lowery," one of the latest of the Triangle pictures featuring him, starting the new regime.

C. C. Hite Will Open Goldwyn Office.

Cincinnati, O.—The resignation of C. C. Hite, for two years manager of the Cincinnati Triangle exchange, has been announced. He will take charge of the interests of the new Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in Cincinnati, representing the Selwyn-Goldfish combination. Mr. Hite has been well known in the Cincinnati territory for several years, as he also has represented the Mutual. He is preparing to open the Goldwyn exchange in Cincinnati, and is gathering an organization. Don A. Muchmore, who has been Mr. Hite's right-hand man for several years, succeeds as manager of the Triangle exchange. Mr. Muchmore states that there will be no changes of any sort in the operation of the Triangle's Cincinnati office, but that the present staff and quarters will be continued.

Cincinnati Chamber Receives a French Flag.

Cincinnati, O.—Recently the World Film Corporation, through its manager at Cincinnati, Harris Hurst, presented to the Foreign Trade Department of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce a very beautiful French flag, which had been used by them in connection with an exhibition of the great film, "Mothers of France," in which Madam Sarah Bernhardt took part.



Presentation of French Flag.

Eugene Pociey, the French consul at Cincinnati, was also at the presentation ceremonies and received the flag, after which he presented it to the Chamber of Commerce through A. S. Wilson, their foreign manager.

Officers of the Foreign Trade Association of the Chamber of Commerce—a large organization composed of the officials of Cincinnati's great exporting companies—were also present at the ceremonies. The above is an illustration of the members, who are, reading from left to right:

Messrs. A. B. Fishwick, vice-president; Robt. S. Alter, president; Wm. A. Biddle, treasurer; A. S. Wilson, manager, foreign department; Eugene Pociey, French consul; John Etzkorn, World Film Corporation; Harris Hurst, manager, World Film Corporation; W. C. Culkins, executive secretary, Chamber of Commerce. .

Cincinnati Exhibitors Aid "Four-Minute Men."

Cincinnati, O.—Cincinnati moving picture houses are aiding the cause of recruiting for the various branches of the service by cooperating fully in the work of the "Four-Minute Men." This is a national movement, with speakers enlisted in every city who devote their time to four-minute addresses at moving picture theaters and other public places. Some of the best-known men in Cincinnati are on the staff of the organization in the Queen City, and have aroused much enthusiasm by their short but fiery talks.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Lima, O.—The Lyric theater had an unusually timely and interesting subject for display in "Motherhood," the Mutual release featuring Miss Marjorie Rambeau, and dealing with the European war.

Victor Noonan, safety director of the commission, is making plans for having pictures taken of safety devices in use in local factories, for the purpose of having them shown in the picture houses.

New Theater Royal Opens Decoration Day

House Erected on Site of Old Royal Theater Has Its Premier—Auditorium Impresses With Its Grace and Simplicity—Seats 500.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—Decoration Day marked the opening of the new Theater Royal, recently erected on the site of the old Royal, on the southeast corner of Eighth and Locust streets. The new building is a two-story brick one, with a 45-foot front and 88-foot depth. The whole building is given over to the theater with the exception of two small office rooms on either side of the lobby. An elaborate canopy extends across the whole front of the building and a mammoth electric sign flashes on the corner of the building. The front of the building is faced in red brick with an artistic arrangement of small and narrow windows above the canopy.

The lobby has the conventional ticket booth in the center with wide double entrance and exit doors on each side of heavy silver gray oak. The lobby is painted a cool light tan and decorated with panels of stencil in the national colors. Over the booth a conventional design in flags is worked out with the initials R and T. A wide and long foyer, carpeted in heavy Wilton velvet, is lined with large pier glasses. On the left a stairway finished in the same heavy silver oak leads to a back balcony on which a ladies' retiring room, richly furnished, a business office, a storage room and an unusually large and convenient operating booth are located. Two new 1917 models of the Simplex machines in the hands of two capable operators furnish the light. Manager Hightower of the Theater Royal is expressly proud of his operating booth. At the right end of the foyer a large double exit is arranged, opening on Eighth, the lobby facing Locust.

The big auditorium has a 24-foot beamed ceiling. The first impression of the auditorium is of grace, simplicity and size, and a feeling that one can breathe deep. The walls are tinted the same light, cool tan with the same stenciled panels that are featured in the lobby. The theater contains over 500 comfortable seats, to which access is afforded by a wide aisle on each side of the house. The seats are of the wide, comfortable, wooden variety. The auditorium is lighted by the indirect system and is at all times light and airy, since the high ceiling and numerous well located fans make the ventilation perfect. The floor has been given a five-foot drop and the screen is located high and well set back on a narrow stage that has been arranged more to enable a convenient pair of exit doors at the front of the theater than to afford stage room. A splendid Mirror screen secured from the Rembusch Co. of Shelbyville, Indiana. There is a 70-foot throw and the result with the aid of the new machines and the competent operators is a perfect projection.

A Seeburg pipe organ orchestra has been secured and K. F. Schneider has been engaged to operate it. Mr. Schneider is a splendid musician, having played in many of the finest orchestras in the city.

Manager G. E. Hightower, who successfully managed the old Royal, will have full control of the house management of the new theater. E. I. Van Dyke, president of the company that owns the theater, is justly proud of his new building.

The opening program consisted of "The Tell Tale Step," from the K-E-S-E Service. Since Shirley Mason is justly popular in Des Moines since her work in McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins," the opening was well attended. Manager Hightower has arranged to show the Bluebird pictures on Sunday and Monday. On Tuesday only the Pathe serial, "The Neglected Wife," will be shown with a Pathe Gold Rooster feature. Wednesday and Thursday the K-E-S-E pictures have been arranged for, and the week is finished with a World production.

Exhibitors and Exchangemen Meet to Fight Blue Law.

Des Moines, Ia.—On Friday, June 4, the Des Moines exhibitors and exchangemen had a meeting and talked over an arrangement for taking the Blue Law fight to the Supreme Court if it is necessary. Attorney General Havner seems to have quited down a little, for Sunday, the 27th of May, was wide open as far as the theaters and parks were concerned and nothing was said, in spite of the fact that he has been quoted as saying that he was not through with the enforcement of the law yet.

Public approval has been unanimously against the closing of the theaters, even many of the ministers have advocated the opening of the motion picture houses after church hours.

The Ozone Opened Under New Management.

Des Moines, Ia.—On Monday, the 4th, the Ozone theater in Highland Park opened under the management of E. T. O'Dell, who is part owner of the Alamo theater on Sixth and College streets, one of the most successful of the Des Moines suburban houses. The Ozone has been remodeled to some extent and Manager O'Dell opened with Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law." With this opening Mr. O'Dell expects to set the pace for his future program.

The new manager is a pleasant, friendly sort of a man, always greeting his patrons with courtesy and a quiet simple manner that takes. Mr. O'Dell will continue in his part ownership of the Alamo for a while, but since the Alamo is his own personal venture he doubtless will spend most of his time there.

Ryan, of Art Dramas, Visits City.

Des Moines, Ia.—Phil L. Ryan, advertising and sales manager of the Standard Film, stopped off in Des Moines a couple of days last week on his way to Clear Lake, where he expects to take a few days of much needed rest. After this short vacation Mr. Ryan is planning a trip over the Iowa territory, in company with Marty Williams, manager of the local Standard office. On this trip Ryan and Williams will call on the larger houses in the state, acquainting the managers of a new system of advertising that Ryan has originated. They plan to get back into Des Moines just in time for the big convention on the 12th and 13th of June.

Frank Gehring With Local Art Dramas.

Des Moines, Ia.—Frank Gehring, lately of the Kansas City World office, where he acted as salesman, is now selling Art Dramas out of the local office of the Standard Film. Gehring takes the place of William Parsons, who left the Standard to enter the aviation corps. Pearson says that his father, grandfather and all his other ancestors were soldiers and that it is up to him to keep the good work of defense going.

Miss Ann Thomas, secretary to M. J. Frisch, assistant manager of the Pathe office, has been ill with appendicitis for some ten days. She was operated on last Thursday and is now on the road to rapid recovery.

M. J. Frisch was out on the road part of last week in the northern part of the state, with "The Neglected Wife," the newest Pathe serial which opens its Des Moines run in Des Moines at the Royal Tuesday, the 5th.

It is the custom of Manager L. A. Sheridan of the local Pathe to hold a sales meeting every Friday and Saturday for the benefit of his salesmen, where they talk over their weeks' experience and tell of their successes and failures, each profiting by the others' tales. Last week the meeting was honored by the presence of V. H. Hodupp, assistant to the Pathe business manager.

Lowell Calvert Meets Hart and Books Hart-Triangle.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The accompanying cut is a reproduction of the physiognomy of one of Minneapolis' most successful theater managers, Lowell V. Calvert, of the New Garrick. The New Garrick is the Northwest's largest exclusive photoplay theater, seating 2,400 persons, so one can imagine that he must be a pretty big man to look after it. He has been connected with the film industry since it was pink behind the ears, having sold films, machines and accessories for Essanay ten years ago. He has also worked in exchanges and sold baking powder to Indians, both noteworthy accomplishments. Mr. Calvert has always been a strong Paramount booster, but meeting W. S. Hart recently has caused him to add Hart-Triangle releases to the New Garrick's future booking sheet.

Newton Davis Becomes Manager of the Nest.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Another new exchange manager made his debut the week of June 3. Newton Davis, formerly with the Universal exchange and indirectly with the Bluebird, has succeeded John H. Margoles as manager of the Bluebird exchange here. Mr. Davis has been in the film business about a year, but he appears a past master at it.

Two of 'Em Go Back to the Farm.

Minneapolis, Minn.—With the intention of becoming millionaires by fall, Lee A. Horn, manager Selznick exchange here, and Myron T. Conhaim, of the Supreme exchange, have purchased a farm (?) near Fridley, Minn., and are to raise potatoes, bugs and all, during the summer. On the first trip to the "Farm" the boys' jitney skidded upon coming down to high speed, and jumped over the farm into Ben Drum's "Farm" and completely ruined three tomatoe plants valued at about $30,000.

Theater Equipment Not in Merger.

Minneapolis, Minn.—J. George Feinberg, of the Theatre Equipment Co. here, has denied the report that his firm had been merged with the so-called theater supply trust recently formed. Mr. Feinberg announces that the Theatre Equipment Co. will continue its present policy, and that it is behind the Simplex distribution stronger than ever.

It is expected that the Artcraft exchange in the Film Exchange building will shortly be taken over by the Paramount. If such action takes place the Film Exchange office will be given up and Goldwyn's representatives will likely step in. Mr. Fox, of the Artcraft, was unable to state last week just how Artcraft's business would be looked after if the exchange was moved to Paramount headquarters in the Produce Exchange.

Indiana Notes—"Barrier" Makes Big Hit

Sale of Orpheum Theater at Lafayette to Mrs. Olive M. Ross—Opening of a New House at Newcastle—Gleaning of Theater Items.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 851 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—It has been quite a long time since the citizens of Indianapolis have had the opportunity of witnessing as inspiring and as interesting a photoplay as "The Barrier," by Rex Beach, which showed to capacity crowds at the Circle theater all last week.

From the time the curtain arose on a massive stage setting depicting the mountains of Alaska, flooded with the light of a bright sun, then almost obscured by an arctic snowstorm, after which they glowed in the varied colors of the aurora borealis, till the curtain dropped on the final scene of the picture itself, the audience was held spellbound as the scenes of life in the Klondike, during the days of the great gold rush, were depicted.

As an added attraction Gerald Gardner, a basso of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, sang a series of songs of the northland in a manner that was entirely pleasing to the audience, as indicated by the applause accorded him. All in all, the program was one of the best that the Circle has given for several weeks.

Olive Ross Takes Orpheum at Lafayette.

Lafayette, Ind.—Mrs. Olive M. Ross has purchased the Orpheum theater here from James Sheetz, who has been operating the popular photoplay house for several months. She will take possession next Monday and will be assisted in the management of the place by her brother, Ralph Stoggsdill.

The interior of the theater will be redecorated and Mrs. Ross has some rather elaborate plans for the future, including high-class motion picture service and the substitution of an orchestra for the present mechanical musical accompaniment.

Mrs. Ross has been operating the Star theater at Frankfort for some time and has met with much success in her venture. The Frankfort house is included in the deal for the Orpheum and Mr. Sheetz and his son, Roy, will operate it for the present, but their plans for the future are indefinite. Mrs. Ross will have the distinction of being the only woman exhibitor in Lafayette.

Newcastle's New Strand Ready to Open.

Newcastle, Ind.—The New Strand, the new motion picture theater, which is located on the corner of South Main street and Central avenue, will be opened to the public within the next few days. The building is absolutely fireproof and up-to-date in every respect. It will have a seating capacity of 600, a pipe organ and a ladies' rest room, making it one of the coziest little theaters in this section of the state.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Warsaw, Ind.—Tom Gilliam, the genial manager of the Centennial theater, has returned from Chicago, where he attended the banquet and reception given for William S. Hart, the motion picture star, at the Hotel Sherman. Mr. Gilliam reports that he had a mighty enjoyable time.

Washington, Ind.—Hugh O'Donnell, manager of the Grand theater, Washington's only motion picture house, has announced the immediate reinstatement of the William A. Brady's feature pictures. The service was discontinued three months ago and has been restored at the request of patrons. Mr. O'Donnell was in Indianapolis last week mingling among the exhibitors. He says the war apparently has not had any bad effect on business down his way.

Suit Over Cozy Theater Settled Out of Court.

MARINETTE, WIS.—A suit in the circuit court by Herbert Despins against W. F. Coffey, involving the ownership of the Cozy theater, was settled out of court. Despins asked for an accounting of partnership, but Coffey contends that no partnership was formed at any time. Following the settlement of the suit, Despins announced that he had sold his interest in the Cozy theater to Coffey for $1,750.

Wisconsin Theater Changes.

Neenah, Wis.—A. A. Green has sold his half interest in the Neenah theater to Miss Clara Neubauer, and will go into the state rights business in Wisconsin. Miss Neubauer has been associated with Green for some time, and has experience in operating a theater.

Sheboygan Falls, Wis.—R. B. Guyett opened his new Falls theater June 7. The house, which seats 400, is distinctive in appearance. The front is of oak bark, with pattern brick and stucco panels. Nothing in the way of equipment has been omitted, the house having its own heating plant and its own private lighting plant in addition to its power from the municipal light plant.

Marinette, Wis.—The Cozy theater had a small fire, believed to have been caused by somebody throwing a cigarette into the ventilating shaft. The theater itself was not damgaed, but smoke in the course of a performance made it advisable to urge patrons to leave.

Mondovi, Wis.—J. U. Luetscher and C. E. Steinfort are now in charge of the Gem theater.

Exhibitors Can Get Short Red Cross Reel.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Minnesota division of the American Red Cross Society has arranged to distribute a short reel of pictures to exhibitors of the state, showing interesting bits of Red Cross work. The reel can be secured by exhibitors from F. A. Ossanna, Red Cross headquarters, Eighth and Marquette, Minneapolis. Exhibitors pay a per cent. of their receipts for the film, thus doing "their bit."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Hugh C. Andress of The Lyric here has announced that the theater will not be closed while repairs are being made, but that the work will be carried on before and after show hours.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager James A. Keough of The Strand theater has contracted with J. R. Levy of the World exchange for first run Brady-Mades in the future. "Bought and Paid For," featuring Alice Brady, was shown at The Strand Sunday, June 3, to a good business.

Des Moines Visitors.

Des Moines, Ia.—John L. Shipley, well known in Des Moines and Iowa as publicity man for the A. H. Ed. Awe of the Strand in Fort Dodge, H. A. Travis of the Pleasant Hour in Pleasantville, N. C., Treloar of the Treloar opera house in Ogden, G. H. Peterson of the Jewel in Story City and R. S. Bollander of the Palace in Adell were all Pathe callers last week.

Cressey Interests to Build New Theater

Dallas to Have New 3,000 Seat Picture House—Will Probably Be Begun in July—J. A. Cressey Looks for Big Things to Come.

By Kent Watson, Newspaper Club, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—The construction of a $300,000 moving picture theater, one of the largest and finest in the South, will be started here within the next month, according to information given out by the J. A. Cressey interests. New York and local capital is behind the proposition. Plans for the new house have been completed, the property on which it will stand purchased and all stock subscribed. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 3,000 persons.

Two prominent New York theatrical men, who decline to have their names mentioned in connection with the new theater, have just returned to New York after having completed arrangements for the exterior and interior and leasing privileges of the building.

"Dallas business warrants such a theater," stated one of the men, "and this new house will be of such magnificence that Dallas people will be justified in appreciating it. Nothing is to be left undone in making it the nicest house in the South."

The theater will stand on a site 75 x 100 feet, at the corner of Elm and Ervay street, in the heart of the Dallas business district.

In speaking of the theater, J. A. Cressey, who is well known throughout the state as a film man, said:

"The moving picture business is growing faster than any other business in the world. There is a crying need in Dallas for a theater second to none in the country and it is my belief the new theater will have no peer in the United States."

Clara Kimball Young Seeking Studio Site Here.

Dallas, Texas.—Clara Kimball Young, who recently severed her connections with Lewis J. Selznick, will shortly arrive in Dallas, it is auehentically announced, for the purpose of being shown local available sites for a studio, in which, it is said, she will play leading roles in her own company. J. A. Cressey has received telegraphic communications from Miss Young advising that she will close a contract for him to book her productions over the entire South.

"The chief obstacle in locating a studio here," said a local theater man regarding the proposition, "would be in securing costumes and scenery."

Old Mill Theater Again Bright.

E. H. Hulsey's Old Mill theater, which recently was heavily damaged by fire, is again open to the public, having been thoroughly remodeled and redecorated. The Old Mill is easily the finest and most beautiful theater in Texas.

Manager Laurence Stewart has initiated a military usher system, which, as a patriotic move, is proving quite popular.

The Newport theater, located alongside of E. H. Hulsey's Queen theater on Elm street, is now dark.

Theaters Asked to Help Sell Liberty Bonds.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The New Orleans Chapter of the American Institute of Banking recognizes the importance of the motion picture theater for the purpose of spreading a propaganda. President Norbert B. Hinckley, connected with the Hibernia Bank & Trust company, requested President Gugel, of the Louisiana Exhibitors' League to enlist the co-operation of the exhibitors of Louisiana in offering their theaters to speakers who would explain the operation of the Liberty Loan Bonds. On Tuesday, May 29, the exhibitors held a meeting and in nearly every instance gladly offered the use of their theater to speakers who might find it convenient to talk to their patrons on any night prior to June 15. The fact, as stated in the appeal to the exhibitors, is that Louisiana has not been coming up to the pro rata expected in the subscriptions for the bonds, and the motion picture theaters have been asked to help because of this fact. The motion picture has come to be known as a potent factor in the patriotic movement in the country and it has received more attention along this line in this section of the country than any other institution of a public nature.

May Start New Chain of Theaters in South.

New Orleans, La.—W. H. Darragh, one of the leading motion picture exhibitors of Galveston, Tex., has been here since the latter part of May and has about closed negotiations with Manager Chisholm of the American Amusement Company operators of the Diamond theater for the establishment of a chain of theaters in southern cities. The Casino at Galveston, the Diamond and perhaps a modern suburban theater in New Orleans and projected theaters in two or three other large cities will constitute the initial properties under the new arrangement. These gentlemen have unlimited financial backing and are already the owners of the theaters that are to start the circuit, and they believe that the operation of a chain of photoplay houses under the personally selected pictures policy will get them the money.

R. M. Chisholm.

Saenger-Fichtenberg Notes.

Since the consolidation of the Fichtenberg theaters with those of the Saenger Amusement company in New Orleans under the exclusive management of the officers of the latter company, there has been a rearrangement of the personnel of the operating forces. Gaston Dureau, who for years has been the publicity manager for the Fichtenberg interests, has severed his connection with the motion picture business in the capacity of press agent, and it is stated will enter other fields. W. H. Gueringer, manager of the Fichtenberg houses, will be transferred to the Saenger offices, where he has been appointed assistant manager, and will work in conjunction with General Manager C. V. Richards. The Saengers now have more than thirty motion picture theaters in the South under their control, and they are a power in the motion picture field in this section.

Lafayette Theater Opens to Big Audiences.

New Orleans, La.—The opening of the Lafayette under the Pearce banner on Monday, May 28, was a most auspicious event. Manager Jack Clark was the recipient of beautiful floral remembrances and other testimonials of good wishes from his wide circle of friends. The first showing of the nine-reel program proceeded without a hitch, and the big audiences were enthusiastic in their praise of the pictures, the courtesies and the general homey atmosphere of the Lafayette. The offerings were "Even As You and I," by Lois Weber, and "A Brass Monkey," one of the new Hoyt comedies. Both of these productions proved more than ordinarily attractive.

Mrs. Anna Sessions Celebrates.

Mrs. Anna H. Sessions, of the World Film Corporation exchange had the unusual experience of celebrating three anniversaries during the week of May 20. Two years ago she accepted her first position in the New Orleans exchange, and just a year later she was advanced to the position of manager. Then during the same week in the same month some years ago, not such a big "some"—she first saw the light of this mundane sphere and started to carve a name for herself. Her birthday appears to be her lucky day as is noted by the promotions which come to her concurrent with its return.

Empire Theater at Montgomery Ready to Open.

Montgomery, Ala.—The new Empire theater at Montgomery is rapidly nearing completion and it is now planned to open the house for business on June 25. It is one of the most pretentious motion picture theaters in the Middle South and without a doubt will receive very liberal patronage from the citizens of the city.

Plaquemine's New Theater a Beauty.

Plaquemine, La.—The new theater which is being constructed here will soon be ready for operation, and it is a structure that is a credit to the city. It is being erected on the site of the old Electra theater, but is altogether likely that its owners will give it a new name upon its completion. Plaquimine is a fine motion picture town and the people are looking forward to the occupancy of the new theater with pleasant anticipations.

Charles Hatcher Rearranges Tri-State Service.

New Orleans, La.—Charles Hatcher, manager of the Tri-State Amusement company of Meridian, Miss., spent part of the week of May 27 in New Orleans and while here he rearranged his program to meet the changing requirements of his enterprises in the Mississippi city. He reports business as very good under the existing conditions.

Manager Guy Stubbs Calls at Exchanges

New Orleans, La.—Guy Stubbs, manager of the Picture Garden at Monroe, La., came to New Orleans about the last of May days and spent considerable time among the exchanges. Manager Stubbs has the distinction of running a very good show in the face of very stiff competition, and he appears to be making a success of the venture. The name of his theater indicates his inventive proclivities. He has what careless managers would call an airdome, but he gives it class by calling it a Picture Garden.

New Strand Orchestra to Travel to Advertise Theater.

New Orleans, La.—A most novel and expensive project for the advertising of a new photoplay theater has been inaugurated by the Saenger Amusement Company in connection with their new Strand, which it is expected will be ready for the formal opening about the middle of June. A tour of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida is to be made by the Saenger orchestra of twenty-five skillful musicians under the direction of Don Philippini, the noted band and orchestra leader. It is the purpose to give concerts in all of the cities where the Saengers have theaters and also in other towns of importance.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Committee for Better Films, of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and the Parent-Teachers' Association, has noticeably favored the Mary Miles Minter series of photoplays by recommending them as being especially suitable for children's and family programs. This endorsement is very pleasing to the dainty Miss Minter, who is a great lover of the little ones.

A Benefit Vaudeville at Berkeley T. & D.

Berkeley, Cal.—A benefit vaudeville was staged at the local T. & D. on the evening of May 28, under the direction of Mrs. Harry A. Williams, assisted by Ralph MacFayden and Mrs. Frank Glass, and the proceeds amounting to nearly a thousand dollars will be turned over to the American fund for the French wounded and for the fatherless children of France.

Program Proves Costly.

San Francisco, Cal.—Unless the verdict of Judge William Van Fleet, of the United States District Court, is reversed, the Turner & Dahnken circuit will have to pay $1 a copy for every copy of a program distributed at the Oakland house containing a song, "My California Rose," written by Alma Crowley, a musician of that city. The theater owners were held to have violated the copyright law in publishing the song without authorization, and it is believed that about seven thousand copies were distributed. In giving judgment, the judge stated that he did not believe that the amusement concern published the song intentionally without getting permission, but were led to believe that they had the right. However, he felt that he had no alternative under the law but to give a judgment against the firm.

Turner & Dahnken Tea Room Helps Theater

Refreshment Room of Oakland's T. & D. Theater Said to Be One of the Most Beautiful Rooms in America—Is Ladies' Waiting Room.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

OAKLAND, CAL.—One of the most distinctive features of the new T. & D. theater at Oakland, Cal., is its magnificent tea room on the mezzanine floor, declared to be one of the most beautiful rooms in America. Here lady patrons gather to await the arrival of friends or to rest pending the announcement of the start of a new picture, should they chance to arrive in the midst of the presentation of a subject. Those wishing refreshments are served tea and cakes without charge by a dainty Chinese maid, the tea, cream and sugar being in individual containers and of the very highest quality. Refreshments are served during the matinee performances, and about two hundred and twenty-five cups are dispensed daily on the average.

The expense of conducting the tea room is not as heavy as might be imagined, as the services of a maid would be required anyway for the adjoining retiring rooms, and a large waiting room is almost a necessity in a house of this size, which accommodates almost four thousand persons. The tea service is made use of by but comparatively few who visit the theater, but is one that is greatly appreciated by those desiring refreshments and serves the purpose of keeping the house in the public mind as a distinctive institution.

The Pompeiian Room adjoining the women's tea room is open to both men and women and is also proving to be an attractive resting spot, many patrons remaining here until the announcement is made that a new production will shortly be on the screen. The stone table, with its well-filled aquarium, its chairs, vases and statuary in pure Pompeiian style, appeal to the lovers of the beautiful. These two beautiful rooms, while intended primarily to add to the comfort of visitors, are proving to be drawing cards in themselves and illustrate the tendency on the part of the public to go to moving picture houses to see and enjoy other than that offered on the screen.

Many Film Companies in San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—A number of moving picture companies have been working in this city and vicinity during the past few weeks, most of them coming from the Los Angeles studios for from one to three weeks to get special settings, and many more will be here during the summer. According to the passenger officials of two of the leading railroads, no less than seventy companies have already made arrangements to be here during the next four months. Much interest is being taken by producers in the records of the Smithsonian Institute which show that San Francisco and its suburbs form an unusually favorable location for the making of moving pictures, from the standpoint of weather conditions. Redwood City, a suburb of San Francisco, is placed in the center of what is considered a "perfect climate belt." There are three such belts, according to the Institute, one on the Canary Islands, another in Africa, and the third on the peninsula of San Francisco. Government statistics covering a period of thirty-six years in Redwood City, thirty-seven years in Los Angeles and forty-three years in San Diego show that the climate of the northern city is far superior to that of other places which make so much of their climatic conditions. In this period Redwood City has had an average of 233 clear days a year, 132 cloudy and 43 wet days. San Diego averaged 219 clear days a year, 146 cloudy and 48 rainy.

Press Man Writes Autobiography.

San Francisco, Cal.—William H. Jobelmann, publicity manager for the Turner & Dahnken circuit, with its ten houses in California and Nevada, is turning out press matter so different from the ordinary run of offerings that newspaper editors are commencing to sit up and take notice. Not only that, they have seen fit to welcome him as a member in their exclusive organization and he is recognized as an originator of moving picture publicity, not as a skillful wielder of the shears and paste brush.

When asked for a story of his life he prepared the following autobiography: "Undoubtedly the moving picture fraternity at large will be astounded and greatly pleased to hear that I was born some twenty-eight years ago, and was a mere babe when I press-agented myself into this giddy world of lies. In order to make this personally written biography short, and of course, sweet, I'll preface further remarks with the statement that after a short career of varied industry (?), which included six years in the U. S. Navy, editorship of a well-known hotel journal, later scouting news on one of San Francisco's large dailies, I talked myself into a job with the Turner & Dahnken circuit, and through a series of persiflage, have gradually worked up to the present mighty important position I command, namely, press agent for the circuit, which, by the way, is the biggest thing in this part of the country.

Northwest Exhibitors Want Ticket Stamps

Washington State Film Men Are Peppering Capital with Petitions to Have Canadian Plan of Taxing Theaters Followed.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Exhibitors throughout the State of Washington have awakened to the seriousness of the tax situation and are "peppering" their senators with letters and wires, and they are not slighting Mr. Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, in whose hands the bill now rests.

George P. Endert, Seattle manager of Pathe, has helped to stir things up by sending out letters to exhibitors in the small towns all over the state, advising them to hurry with their endorsement of the plan suggested to the Finance Committee by the M. P. E. L. of America, by which the tax would be levied on the tickets bought at the box office, instead of on the producer and exhibitor.

J. W. Parry, salesman for Fox, has just returned from a trip to the Spokane territory, where he reports all exhibitors are holding up on business until they learn how the issue is to be settled; and in the meantime, he states, they are keeping the wires and the mails hot. The exhibitors in the small towns and many of them in the large towns, says Mr. Parry, would consider themselves lucky if they could make a ten per cent. profit the year round, and the passage of the bill in its present form would simply mean that most of the small towns would be without any theater. Practically all of the exhibitors of that territory, Mr. Parry informs us, are in favor of the stamp tax on the tickets.

Why Don't They Use the Publicity Paper?

Seattle, Wash.—W. S. Brewster, representative for Elliott and Sherman in the Northwest territory, has just returned to Seattle from a trip through Washington, wherein many of the small towns he said his heart was almost broken by the sight of beautiful heralds and other expensive booklets and paper which had been donated by distributors, to help exhibitors advertise their shows, lying around on the desk or on the floor in the exhibitors' offices, while half the people in the town knew nothing whatever about the picture being shown in the theater. Mr. Brewster told of one instance where he arrived in Pullman, Washington, and found an exhibitor ready to show the 10-reel feature, "Romana," that night, without having put one line of advertisement in the newspapers or even having taken the trouble to distribute among the teachers and students of the two large schools in the town the beautiful booklets, furnished him by Elliott and Sherman, illustrating the play and giving a synopsis of the story.

Seattle Exchange Men at Convention in a Body.

Seattle, Wash.—Seattle was all but empty of exchange men May 29 and 30. Most of them had gone down to Portland either in the afternoon or the evening of the 28th to look after the decoration of their booths and to be on hand at the first sound of the gavel at the exhibitors' convention next day. Those who went were: J. A. Koerpel, World manager; R. C. Montgomery, World salesman; C. F. Hill, Triangle manager; F. C. Quimby, Pathe Northwest supervisor; B. R. Cunningham, Artcraft manager; F. S. Fountain, Paramount manager; Mike Rosenberg, president De Luxe Features; Louis Rosenberg, De Luxe salesman; G. A. Faris, Vitagraph manager; A. E. Allen, Vitagraph salesman; C. J. Kerr, Metro manager; W. A. Crank, Metro salesman; Jack Lannon, president Greater Features Company; I. Rosenthal, manager Western Civilization Company; A. W. Eden, Fox manager; W. A. Mead, Fox salesman.

Personal Appearance of Four Stars in Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—The photoplay fans of this city have been enjoying several unusual treats during the last ten days; for within that time four motion picture stars have made personal appearances on the stages of Seattle motion picture houses. The first to come was J. Warren Kerrigan, who appeared for three days at the Clemmer theater, May 23 to 25 Then Margarita Fischer and Dorothy Dalton arrived on the same day from Portland, where they attended the Movie Ball. Miss Fischer addressed her Seattle admirers from the stage of the Strand on May 31, and Miss Dalton spoke at the Liberty on May 31 and June 1. Last, came one of Seattle's favorite heroes of the screen, William S. Hart, who appeared at the Liberty on June 4.

New Theater for Walla Walla.

Walla Walla, Wash.—A. W. Eiler, manager of the Bijou Grand of Walla Walla, is having a 1,000-capacity house built. The building is of brick with a terra cotta front. It is to cost $85,000 and will be completed about July 1.

Juneau Theater Under New Management

Juneau, Alaska.—John D. Spicket has closed his Orpheum theater and taken over the Palace, Juneau's newest and finest picture theater.

Two Pasco Theaters Remain Separate.

Pasco, Wash.—Contrary to the report circulated some weeks ago, that the Liberty and Empire theaters would be amalgamated, these two houses still remain and will continue to be separate. Mrs. Martha E. Reynolds, of the Empire, is still showing the high-class features that she has always given on her programs, viz., Paramount, Artcraft, Selznick and Triangle.

Seattle Exchange Notes.

Seattle, Wash.—W. S. Brewster, representative in the Northwest territory for Elliott & Sherman, until the dissolving of the firm, will continue to handle the same pictures for Jack Elliott.

G. A. Faris, Greater Vitagraph manager, recently gave a private showing of "Within the Law" in the auditorium of the Vitagraph office building. Mr. Faris arranged for special music to accompany the picture, and quite a number of out-of-town exhibitors stayed over night to be present at the showing.

All four of the Pathe men who have anything to do with the selling in the Washington territory have automobiles of their own, and use them for covering their territory. They are F. C. Quimby, Northwest supervisor; George P. Endert, Seattle manager; William H. Rankin, Seattle salesman, and P. L. Carroll, Spokane salesman.

H. G. Rosebaum, who left the management of the Seattle Artcraft office recently to take charge of the Philadelphia office, will soon return to his old post.

Recent Visitors in Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—Waring & Finck, supply dealers, report an unusual influx of out-of-town visitors this week. They were:

Soice, Dream theater, Kent; A. H. Hilton, Paramount theater, Lewiston, Idaho; E. W. Groesbeck, Cosmo theater, Buckley; R. H. Glenn, Glenn theater, Issaquah; A. V. Chudley, Grand View theater, Grand View.

Forced to Ask for Higher Admissions Because of the Financial Problems Facing Managers of Picture Theaters Throughout Country.

By Frank H. Madison, 633 South Wabash Ave., Chicago.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.—Admission prices have been raised by local exhibitors. In the announcement preceding the notice of the actual raise the managers declared that the exhibitors throughout the country are face to face with the most serious financial problem in the history of the amusement world, and many of them will be unable to weather the storm. The Grand, which runs Western vaudeville, is charging 15 cents for the balcony and 25 cents for the lower floor. The Reel theater in East Grand Forks is getting 10 and 15 cents, and for some attractions 10 and 20 cents. Out of this number seven were rejected completely, cuts were made in 55, and 248 were passed without cut. The censor was upheld by the board of appeals in six of the seven that were rejected.

Spokane Filmdom Has Gilt Letter Week

Several Leading Lights in Photoplay Business Pay City a Visit—Especially Interesting Film Show—Other Items Worth Recording.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—An insight into many angles of the moving picture industry was given Spokane people during the week starting May 26, and additional to this French war pictures were shown at the Davenport hotel on the night of May 25. Announcement was also made that Thomas H. Ince, head of the New York moving picture corporation and the Kay Bee force and founder of Inceville, and Will S. Hart would visit the city on Sunday, June 4. Other news of interest, during the week, included the visit of Miss Dorothy Dalton, one of the Ince stars, and John Blackwood, advance man for Will S. Hart. Mr. Blackwood spent a couple of days here and arranged with manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater, where the Hart pictures are shown, for the Ince star to appear in person on June 3.

F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World, was the guest of honor at a banquet given, in Masonic Temple, by operators, exhibitors and moving picture exchange men on the night of May 30.

A new moving picture producing company filed articles of incorporation, to produce pictures in and about Spokane the same week.

The Strand theater closed its doors for the summer vacation.

From the various moving picture managers of the city comes the announcement that business for the past couple of weeks has been excellent, part of which is attributed to the excellent programs presented and part to a general improvement in business conditions.

Scenes of the American army and naval training stations in the Hearst-Pathe weekly and an animated cartoon on Liberty Loan bonds proved a good attraction and won liberal applause at the Liberty theater; Marie Doro, who draws well here, attracted patrons to the Clemmer theater; George Walsh was the principal attraction at the Casino, and Dorothy Phillips, in "The Flashlight," which includes beatiful forest scenery, drew well at the Class A theater.

The Spokane moving picture managers have taken an active interest in urging the purchase of Liberty Loan bonds by the use of slides, and manager H. S. Clemmer's club of red-headed boys, numbering about 100, has purchased bonds.

Manager Potter of Big U Starts Interesting Department.

Spokane, Wash.—With a view of aiding its patrons and lightening the burdens of moving picture operators and managers throughout eastern Washington, Northern Idaho and Western Montana, W. OREGON NOTES OF INTEREST.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater, Portland, Ore.

On the Blue Law Question.

EUGENE, OREGON.—The effort made by Dan Kellaher, candidate for city commissioner of Portland, Oregon, to effect a repeal of the drastic Eugene Sunday closing law was without avail. The City Council on May 2 decided to repeal the pool and billiard ordinance now in effect, and the Sunday closing issue is again up in the air. At the time of Mr. Kellaher's adress before the City Council a committee was appointed by the Mayor to report on the matter. It reported adversely.

Theaters Permitted to Show Sundays Pending Referendum.

Corvallis, Oregon.—The picture theaters here have been temporarily operating on Sundays by special dispensation pending the initiative vote at the city election June 4. Heretofore Corvallis has been blue as the sky on the Sunday question, and it is a matter of common knowledge that there are times when a double collection is taken at the churches. The outcome of the election is entirely a matter of conjecture.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Published by the

Preface by the Author

In the preparation of this volume on "Modern Theatre Construction" no claim is made that this is a wholly original work. The book is merely a compilation of the best obtainable data on the subject, interspersed with original ideas. Nor has any attempt been made to produce a technical treatise on the subject. This is rather a hand-book of practical suggestions intended primarily for the general reader, which may serve as a guide and reference for prospective owners, managers, architects or builders in search of reliable information on this type of structure.

The collection of the necessary matter for proper presentation has entailed a considerable amount of painstaking labor, and the author has often found it desirable to adopt the matured thought and in some instances even the very expression of thought of competent writers. To these authorities grateful and appreciative thanks are extended.

The absence of any serious or exhaustive published treatment of this important topic within the past quarter of a century, coupled with the present general tendency toward architectural uplift throughout this country, which aims at a simpler and truer form of art, renders the occasion opportune for the publication of such a volume as this.

In illustrating or citing the work of other architects the writer disclaims any malicious intention in pointing out faulty features. He simply offers them as examples of defective construction to be avoided.

April, 1917. EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA.

RAY COMEDIES.

CASEY THE BANDMASTER (June 18).—The cast: Casey (Johnny Ray); Mrs. Rockabilt (Emma Ray); Professor Scherenaz (John Owns).

Leader of a villainous brass band which excels in pinochle but not in sharps and flats, Casey secures an engagement to play at a reception given by Mrs. Rockabilt. For this he and his crew are to receive the sum of twenty-five dollars. At the same musicale is to appear the famed violinist, Professor Scherenaz, who has consented to play one solo for the low figure of one thousand dollars. Hearing of this Casey manages to intercept the foreign artist and through dire threats of violence at the hands of his "musical" cohorts forces the professor into a bargain. The violinist is to seat himself in a peculiarly constructed chair in the drawing room over which a curtain is hastily thrown. Seated upon his knees, Casey is told to hold the instrument while the real musician will go through the motion of playing.

The spectacle of a violin apparently giving forth music from invisible hands is too much for the guests. They flee in wild disorder. In the confusion Mrs. Rockabilt discovers Casey's hoax. A lively chase ensues. The fun becomes fast and furious. The scheming bandmaster, after divers encounters with servants and policemen, discover an automatic vacuum cleaner and a press of the button disposes rapidly of his pursuers as they disappear one by one into the yawning mouth of the cleanser. Mrs. Rockabilt is the last to suffer the awful vengeance of the patent vacuum at Casey's hands. His heart melts at the thought of the indignity to be visited upon the good lady. A compromise is effected when the bandmaster receives the thousand intended for the poor professor, and Casey departs in glee.

SELIG.

SELIG WORLD LIBRARY NO. 4.

The Cliff Dwellers of New Mexico.—The aboriginal America race that preceded the Pueblo Indians and built these ancient communal dwellings; these circular ruins contain 127 cell-like rooms and afforded shelter to about 1,500 people. Access to the dwellings is very difficult. A narrow dangerous path leads down from the top of cliff. Although peaceful people, these "cliff palaces" were at the time of habitation veritable fortresses.

Fashions at the Beach.—Oh! See the novel and nifty costumes exhibited on our bathing beaches. Here is Diana, of the sea. Chicago girl. The Zebra effect. The Queen's Cloak and the Geisha girl.

The Whaling Industry.—In the 18th century whale-fishery was one of the most important industries, but has declined, owing to the restricted use of whale-oil and whale-bone. The primitive form of capturing marine mammals was by throwing a hand harpon. The modern method is the harpoon gun. Whales are valuable chiefly for their oil. Their teeth were once our chief source of ivory.

A Peep into Jungleland.—Oswald, aged 250 summers and as many winters, partakes of 55 pounds of beef three times yearly. Oswald is 32 feet long and refuses to eat in captivity.

KNIGHTS OF THE SADDLE (Two Parts).—The picture presents cowboys and cowgirls in a great western rodeo competition. Men and women who have spent years in becoming expert in riding, roping, shooting and in "bulldogging" steers are seen in the performance of their most daring feats.

Among the feats of skill presented are fancy roping, riding bucking bronchos, a Roman chariot race, bulldogging, efficiency test riding, changing saddles and chaps, efficiency test pitching tent and making a fire, stage coach driving, etc. During the course of the production an accident is shown in which Tom Mix, the movie star, and others, were hurt.

THE FONT OF COURAGE.—The cast: George Fuller (Leo Pierson); Sid Fuller (Robyn Adair); "Bull" Parker (E. J. Brady); Stella Brandt (Virginia Kirtley). Written by Will M. Ritchey. Produced by Burton L. King.

George Fuller, a sheriff, is known for his bravery, and his great humiliation in life is the fact that his only son, Sid, has been a coward since childhood. It is a weakness that the boy has seemingly never been able to overcome. Sid grows to young manhood and falls in love with Stella Brandt.

"Bull" Parker is known as a bad man. He goes on a rampage, and finally brands Sid Fuller as a coward. When Sheriff Fuller goes to arrest Parker, he is shot and wounded. He tells his son that he, Sid, must arrest Parker to save the family honor. The boy is frightened nearly to death. The father tells him that he must arrest the man, and that he will keep Sid covered with a gun unless he does so.

The boy meets Parker, and his nerve is about to fail him when Stella calls for his aid. Then it is that courage returns, and he arrests "Bull" Parker.

ESSANAY.

MR. PRINGLE AND SUCCESS (Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Eddie Delane (Donald Clayton); Doris Pringle (Hazel Daly); Jonathan Pringle (Robert Bolder).

Jonathan Pringle gets the "efficiency bug" from reading a book on "How to Succeed." He discharges his aged office manager and employs Kelly, a younger man. Eddie Delane, a reporter, is in love with Doris Pringle. However, her father squelches the budding romance; Eddie is not efficient, he thinks. The reporter and Doris appear at the Pringle Company's office to inform the old man that they intend to elope unless he gives his consent. Eddie catches Kelly in the act of robbing the safe. In his effort to be efficient, Mr. Pringle unknowingly had employed a notorious safe-cracker. It marks the downfall of efficiency. Pringle consents to the marriage and rehires his old manager.

THE RAINBOW BOX (Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Carol Blair (Marguerite Clayton); Wesley Jamison (Roderick LaRock).

Carol Blair, a clerk in a modiste's shop, dreams of some day possessing the latter. Accidentally she meets Wesley Jamison, who appears to be wealthy. Fearing he would spurn a mere modiste's clerk, Carol poses as a millionaire's daughter. She grows to love him too much, however, to continue to deceive him, so confesses her pseudom. In turn he confesses deception also, admitting that he is in reality only a bookkeeper. The parting of their ways seems to have arrived, but Carol decides that after all true love beats all the wealth in the world.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE GOLD THAT GLITTERED (Two Parts—One of the O. Henry Series).—The cast: General Falcon (Albert Roccardi); Mrs. O'Brien of New York (Miss Leila Blow); "Spider" Kelly (Frank Brule); Jimmie Dunn (James Costello). Directed by Thomas R. Mills.

Armed with $25,000, a brave heart and a store of simplicity as to New York and its ways, General Falcon arrives in the metropolis from South America to purchase arms for revolutions. After a long walk he finds a small side street hotel with a card in the window stating Spanish is spoken here. The General gets a cordial welcome from Mrs. O'Brien, the proprietress. The impressionable stranger falls in love with her.

That evening upon a walk he meets with various metropolitan adventures with traffic, and is returned to his lodgings by "Spider" Kelly, an adventurer of the slums, who plays Good Samaritan with a confidence game victim in view. Kelly, having his prospect successfully located, takes Jimmie Dunn as a partner in his scheme to relieve the Latin-American of his $25,000. They hire a warehouse for three days, store it with rifle cases filled with bricks, and pester General Falcon to close the deal. About this time Mrs. O'Brien, who is not so guileless as the stranger, realizes that he is in peril of being plucked, and to distract his attention makes herself so attractive that he ignores all business in adoring her. When the day arrives for the inspection of the arms, Dunn, a shabby Bowery tin horn sport, brazenly poses as the U. S. Secretary of War as Kelly brings in the victim. Mrs. O'Brien, the latter's guardian angel, comes along too, and prying about discovers the substitution of bricks for guns. When the hour appointed for the exchange of General Falcon's bank roll for arms finally arrives the conspirators find him sans cash. He has married Mrs. O'Brien and she has blarneyed him into buying the hotel.

A SERVICE OF LOVE (Two Parts—One of O. Henry Series).—The cast: Joe Larrabee (Walter McGrail); Delia Caruthers (Mildred Manning. Directed by John Robertson.

Joe Larrabee came out of the Middle West pulsing with genius for pictorial art. Delia Caruthers did things in six octaves so promisingly in a village of the South that her relatives chipped together to send her North to finish. Joe and Delia met in a studio where students of music and art gathered. They married. They continued their studies under high priced masters until their money gave out. She decided to give music lessons and went out several days to look for pupils. Regretting the necessity for this step by his wife, Joe made new efforts to sell some of his art. One evening they both came home elated. Delia had found a delightful pupil, Clementina, daughter of General Pinkney, on 71st street—three lessons a week at $5 per lesson.

Joe about this time decided to do some early morning sketches in Central Park, so they breakfasted early. On Saturday night Delia, proud but languid, produced three crisp five dollar bills and many details about her pupil and her home. Joe then produced $18. "Sold that water color of the obelisk to a man from Peoria," he tells the proud little wife. One night Joe gets home first. Delia comes in with her hand in bandages and tells him that Clementina insisted upon a Welsh rabbit after her lesson and had spilled boiling hot water over her hand. Tenderly Joe undoes the bandages to see the hurt. He asks a question about the time she had burned it when the soft cotton waste came from around the burn. Then the question direct—"What have you been doing the last two weeks, Delia?" She tries to fib further, but gives it up and confesses that she has been ironing shirts in a laundry. Joe in turn confesses that he has sold no pictures and that he has been firing the engine in the same laundry for two weeks—and that at five o'clock he had sent up this oiled waste cotton for a girl who had been burned with an iron in the laundry.

Willie Mackarel, the prison keeper, is in love with the warden's daughter. They are spooning in the park, when they are seen from a distance by Ham and Bud. Ham decides to stop the "flirtation." But when he finds that the culprit is his old Nemesis, the keeper, he and Bud flee for their lives. The keeper catches them, but promises them a chance to make a getaway if they will get him a minister.

When Bud, disguised as a minister, comes upon the scene simultaneously with the enraged warden, things begin to happen and finally end up in a whirlwind climax when Ham and Bud are pursued by the keeper in a boat which happens to have no bottom. They finally forsake the water for the sky, when the keeper hurls

SAGE BRUSH LAW (An episode of "The American Girl—2 parts).—The cast: Madge King, "the American girl" (Marin Sais); Roger King, her father (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin (Edward Hearn); Tex Marlin (R. E. Bradbury); Jasper Tibbitts (Knute Rahm); Nels Lieburg (Edward Clisbee).

Tex Marlin is the chairman of the "Committee of Six," which has assumed the responsibility of curbing a reign of lawlessness in the western town of Santa Mona. When they hang a member of a gang of bandits, Roger King, a wealthy rancher, and his daughter, Madge, object to the hasty action. In the dispute that follows, King's superintendent, Larry Kerwin, gets into a fight with old Jasper Tibbitts, the postmaster of Santa Mona. That evening Larry comes to the assistance of Nels Lieburg, a friendless unfortunate.

Returning to the ranch, Larry sees a mysterious band of men place a note in a hiding place. He gets it, and reads: "Rim Rock Corral. Midnight. O.K. Postoffice." The following morning, Jasper Tibbitts is found murdered in the postoffice. Because of his quarrel with the postmaster the day before, Larry is suspected. Marlin arrives with the information that he has seen a man riding the postmaster's pinto horse. This man, when captured, proves to be Nels Lieburg, the Swede.

Larry remembers the mysterious note of the previous evening, and rides to Rim Rock Corral to investigate. The sheriff sees him go, and, still suspicious, follows him, while the "Committee of Six" convinced of the Swede's guilt, drag him from the King ranch to hang him. At Rim Rock Corral, Larry discovers a buried box of stamps and money apparently stolen from the postoffice. The sheriff arrives upon the scene to find him with this box, and becomes fully convinced that Larry is the thief. He takes him into custody.

Madge and her father, determined to save the Swede from the "Committee," arrive in the nick of time. Larry and the sheriff arrive as the Swede, who had been blindfolded, identifies Marlin as the man who made him take the pinto horse. Larry renders the proof of Marlin's guilt conclusive when he matches the torn bit of note paper with a small note book found in Marlin's pocket.

Trapped, Marlin is forced to admit his alliance with the bandits of Rim Rock Corral, who, at his instigation, had robbed the postoffice the previous evening, and murdered old Tibbitts when he unexpectedly arrived upon the scene. Marlin had tried to throw suspicion upon the Swede by forcing him to take the pinto horse which would be recognized as belonging to Tibbitts. Marlin is placed under arrest, and Lieburg thanks Madge and Larry for their efforts in his behalf.

THE POT OF GOLD (An Episode of "The American Girl"—Two Parts)—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King, her father (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin (Edward Hearn); Henry Dawson (R. E. Bradbury); "Hopeful Dave" (Edward Clisbee).

The one unprofitable investment of Roger King is The Herald, the only daily paper in the little western city of San Remo. He tells the superintendent of his industrial enterprises, Larry Kerwin, that he intends to sell the paper. Madge, his daughter, insists that she has a plan to double the circulation of the paper in two weeks.

She proposes to bury an iron pot containing $1,000 in gold coin within a mile of San Remo, and then to run in The Herald a continued story which will give a clue to the whereabouts of the treasure. With her father and Larry she is burying the pot of gold in the cellar of an abandoned shack near San Remo when she finds buried there a skull and a locket containing the picture of a child. Madge prints the picture of the locket as an illustration of one of the chapters of her story, hoping to lure the criminal to the abandoned shack.

When the picture is printed Madge is surprised to learn that it is a photograph of Marcia Fuller, the only stenographer of The Herald, when she was six years old. Marcia's guardian, Mrs. Gammidge, when questioned concerning the mystery, relates that fifteen years ago Marcia was living alone with her father when he mysteriously disappeared. Henry Dawson, the present mayor of San Remo, was their friend, and brought the child to her and supported her ever since. Madge accompanies Marcia and her guardian to question Dawson, while King and Larry ride to the shack to watch for any one who might return to remove the evidence.

Mayor Dawson tells Madge that he knows nothing more than Mrs. Gammidge has told them, but Madge's suspicions are aroused when she sees Dawson ride in the direction of the abandoned shack. There he is confronted by Madge and her father. With the evidence of his guilt before him, Dawson confesses that fifteen years ago he and Marcia's father owned a rich mining claim. In a quarrel over the proceeds Dawson killed the man, and then he buried him in the cellar. He tried to make amends by supporting the child of his victim ever since.

Dawson is placed in charge of the sheriff, and the pot of gold is found by the most enthusiastic treasure-hunter of San Remo, "Hopeful Dave," the village pest.

THE JACKAROO (An Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Maud Norman (Edythe Sterling); Paul Glover (Hal Clements); Jack Tabourdin (Tom Walsh). Directed by Paul C. Hurst.

Maud Norman, the owner of the G Block Station, an Australian sheep run, points out to her manager, Glover, that her flocks have been seriously ravaged by the continued droughts of the past year. But her financial difficulties are somewhat lessened by the arrival of Jack Tabourdin, whose father sends Maud a check for one hundred pounds payment for taking his son on as a "jackaroo" or apprentice on the sheep run. The following April when a payment of 500 pounds is due on the purchase of the sheep station, and Maud, foreseeing that she will be unable to meet the payment, advertises for sale her favorite horse, Polly.

Stingaree, the gentleman bushranger, and his partner, Howie, read this advertisement, and Stingaree decides that he must have Polly. Tabourdin, the jackaroo, overhears Maud and Glover discussing the sale of Polly. He remembers a handbill advertising 500 pounds reward for the capture of the bushranger, Stingaree. He wonders if he could spare Maud the loss of her favorite horse by capturing the outlaw. He receives an opportunity to do so, when, during the absence of Maud and Glover, Stingaree and Howie arrive at the station to get the horse. He fires at them as they are entering the stable. They run away, but by a subterfuge they make the jackaroo a prisoner. They take him to their camp, and are overjoyed to find that the jackaroo pursued them on the horse they had sought.

In camp the jackaroo tells Stingaree the reason for his attempt to capture the bushranger. Stingaree, always too chivalrous to see a woman in trouble, proposes a plan to Howie and sends him away to the Kangaroo Hotel at Topanga. Then, feigning carelessness, he allows the jackaroo to make him a prisoner and take him to the troopers' quarters at Topanga, where Stingaree is locked up, and the jackaroo departs with his 500 pounds reward.

Howie bursts into the Kangaroo Hotel at Topanga and holds up the bar. There is a trooper present, and Howie allows him to sneak away to give the alarm to the other troopers. The troopers rush away from the barracks, leaving only one man to guard Stingaree. Arriving at the hotel, they see what is apparently Howie riding away. They give pursuit and overtake the horse, only to find it is carrying only a dummy of straw, which Howie has rigged up for the occasion.

Howie hurries to the barracks, where he overpowers the one trooper left in charge of Stingaree, and helps his partner to escape. Stingaree and Howie ride back to their old haunts, while the jackaroo returns to the G Block Station and persuades Maud to accept the 500 pounds as a loan to pay off the note on the sheep run.

THE FUGITIVE PASSENGER (An Episode of "The Further Adwventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts).—The cast: Irving Randolph, later "Stingaree" (True Boardman); Howie, his partner (Hal Clements); Ethel Porter, his fiancee (Marin Sais); Captain Winslow (G. A. Williams).

Irving Randolph, the respected master of Randolph Towers, London, whom the world once knew as "Stingaree, the Australian bushranger," receives notice from his attorneys that an appraisal of his family estate shows that his entire fortune was squandered by his deceased brother while he (Irving) was absent in Australia. He realizes that he cannot, as a penniless man, marry his fiancee, Ethel Porter.

He is surprised by a visit from his old partner of the bushranger days in Australia, Howie, who has crossed the seas to warn "Stingaree" that government officers are upon his trail with a warrant for his arrest. He persuades Stingaree to return to Australia with him.

Stingaree leaves Howie in his home while he goes to say good-bye to Ethel. While Stingaree is gone, the officers arrive at his home, where they find Howie. But the old bushranger tricks them, and forces them into a closet, where Stingaree finds them locked upon his return. Stingaree and Howie are soon at sea. Howie, while chumming with the wireless operator, sees a message from the police authorities warning the captain that Stingaree is on board. Howie informs Stingaree, and when the captain recognizes the famous Australian bushranger in the polished gentleman with the monocle, Stingaree pretends that he does not suspect.

Nearing Melbourne harbor, Stingaree rigs up in his cabin a contrivance which will create sufficient delay to allow him to escape. When, in the harbor, he sees a police boat speeding toward them, he goes to his cabin and lights a candle which is so placed that it will eventually burn a string which will release a weight which will pull the trigger of a revolver fastened to a chair.

The officers arrive on board and are brought to the door of Stingaree's cabin, where they shout for him to surrender. But Stingaree and his partner have slipped out of the cabin and are now sliding down a rope to a motorboat. Meanwhile the candle has burned the string, and the revolver in Stingaree's cabin is discharged. The officers, thinking that Stingaree must be in the cabin, delay there long enough for the bushrangers to make a getaway.

Later, in Australia, Stingaree and Howie read an article in The Australasian how the police officers were cleverly fooled by the daring bushrangers.

That night he celebrates with the boys, and in the morning he finds a letter from his father, telling him that from now on he must be on his own resources. Matt is almost penniless, but he reads of a Professor Kairo who is making large sums of money, and determined to go into the business of Swami-ing.

He dresses himself and his man servant in Oriental robes and hangs out a sign. His first client asks him to give a seance at her house that night. When he swims in, he is astonished to recognize Jane, who is entertaining Lord Fauntleroy, whom her mother fancies for her husband. Jane tells the Swami that she has lost Bruno, and Matt's servant finds him. This is a success. The professor places a crystal in the middle of the room and, telling them all to watch as it will reveal a secret, he goes out into the veranda to talk to Jane, who has recognized him. Her mother comes out and Jane runs off.

The weeks pass by and Matt finds that love and swami-ing don't mix. He shoots a note into Jane's room with a bow and arrow. It reads: "Dearest—Have arranged marriage. Am waiting nearby with an auto to elope. Your own Matt."

Jane tears the message from the arrow point, stuck in the wall, but mother finds the last part of it. She is horrified, and after the wedding she tears Jane from Matt by enlisting the aid of the chauffeur. Matt is deprived of his bride and goes back to swami-ing. The marriage is publicly annulled. Matt reads this in the paper and also that the De Puysters are at Tuxedo for the winter. In his despair he is cheered by a message from Mrs. Van Emery asking him to give a seance in her home in Tuxedo. He is not to ring as he will find the window open, and it is to be a surprise.

Matt has the misfortune to enter the wrong house. It is the De Puysters. Mother holds him up at the point of a revolver, thinking he has come to kidnap Jane. She tells him that she is going to keep him under her eye till Jane is married to Lord Fauntleroy. He is to act as butler, and will be arrested if he betrays himself. Baron von Limburg and the Count de Fromage arrive for the house party. They can neither of them skate well, and Jane skates to the admiration of all with an unknown young man, who is really Matt.

There is to be a masquerade ball that night, and Jane lays her plans for it. She asks the chauffeur to take the place of her sweetheart at the ball that night, so that they can elope. She tells him to wear a policeman's uniform which she gives him. They are overheard by the baron, the count and her mother. The two noblemen try their best to get policemen's uniforms so as to impersonate Jane's sweetheart. The result of the mix-up is that they are left with no clothes at all. At last they succeed in getting some and returning to the ball. Mother has watched the wedding of Jane and the policeman, thinking that he is one of the titles. To her horror, when the bridegroom unmasks she sees that it is Matt. But she is reconciled when she finds that he is not a Hindu Swami.

THE FLAME OF YOUTH (Five Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 18).—The cast: Jimmy Gordon (Jack Mulhall); Lucy Andrews (Ann Kronan); Nadine (Donna Moon); Sir Beverly Wyndam (Hayward Mack); Jasper Sneedham (Alfred Allen); McCool (Ed. Brady); James Gordon, Sr. (Fred Montague); Beppo (Burton Law); Fred Haimer, foreman (Percy Challenger); Bennie Zussbaum (Harry Mann); Juan (Harry Morris). Scenario by Karl Coolidge. Produced by Elmer Clifton.

Jimmy Gordon is the son of the head of the Gordon Syndicate, which owns an island off the coast of Lower California with an opal mine. Gordon Senior is worried about the mine, as the shipments have fallen off, and he is looking for a responsible two-fisted man to send on an investigation. The last person in the world who answers this description is his son Jimmy. However, the old man receives a shock when one of his employees, Bennie Zussbaum, tells how Jimmy rescued him from a gang of toughs in a roadside cafe. Old Gordon begins to think well of his son, for the first time.

Jimmy is engaged to Lucy Andrews, but it would be quite possible for one to live without the other. Lucy's mother is far more interested in Sir Beverly Wyndham. When Jimmy breaks an engagement with Lucy and she then sees him fighting at the roadhouse, as she drives by in her car, she determines to break with him. His father sends him to Calabas Island. Jimmy says goodbye so hurriedly to Lucy that she has no time to break with him.

At the island, Jasper Sneedham, with the assistance of McCool and his native servant, Juan, has been cheating the company. The only honest person is the foreman, Haimer. Jasper has a step-daughter, Nadine. When Jimmy arrives on the mainland, he is met by Juan, and taken by launch to the island. On the way, Juan hits him over the head with a belaying pin. Jimmy manages to swim to the island, and crawls onto the shore. Nadine is playing on the beach. She sees him and calls the foreman to go with her to his assistance. They take the half-drowned youth to Haimer's hut. Jasper comes in haste but is reassured when he finds only a boy, though he recognizes him as Gordon's only son. He offers to show Jimmie over the mine as soon as he is well enough. But Jimmy is far more interested in Nadine than in opals.

Jasper makes up his mind that as he has stolen a comfortable fortune, he may as well leave the island before Gordon sends a boat for his son. With McCool and Juan he lays his plans, which Nadine overhears. Jasper has told the girl that she is to marry McCool as soon as they reach the mainland. Nadine goes with her information to Haimer, and they resolve to tell Jimmy of the flight. The launch is ready and Jimmy says that they will beat the other to it. Before he goes, he has just time to give Juan the licking of his life. Jasper has locked Nadine in the closet in her room, and Jimmy hears her call and takes the door off its hinges. Jasper and McCool return and Jimmy holds them up with an unloaded revolver. Armed with an axe, he rushes for the launch with Haimer and Nadine. The others follow, and he fights them with the axe. One of Jasper's men engages Haimer, while McCool, who has sneaked off, catches up Natine, and attacks her on the cliff. He has no time to run down, so he makes a terrific dive into the sea, and swims rapidly to the beach, rescues Nadine, and knocks McCool out. Then he jumps for the launch, and makes off.

Reaching the mainland, they call for the police, who return with Haimer to the island to arrest the gang. Jimmy buys new clothes for himself and Nadine and takes her to his father's office. She waits outside while he makes his report to his father. The old man is delighted, but says that he has bad news for Jimmy. Lucy has eloped with Wyndham. Jimmy is tickled to death with the news and brings in his "real girl" Nadine, whom Old Gordon receives with affection.

LONE LARRY (Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 18).—The cast: Jim Cressy (Charles Dorian); Jack Homer (Percy Pembrook); "Lone" Larry (Kingsley Benedict); Sime Gilbert (William Dyer); Jesse Hale (Leonard Clapham). Scenario by Helen Starr. Produced by Henry McRae.

In polo practice, Jim Cressy injures his friend, Jack Homer, accidentally. "Lone" Larry, a professional hold-up man, succeeds in stealing some express sacks of gold. He is shot in the arm by the pursuing guards. Larry takes to the hills, binds up his wounds and hides the gold. Kitty Gilbert, the daughter of Sime Gilbert, the foreman of Jim Cressy's western ranch, is bored by ranch life and by the attentions of Jesse Hale, the sheriff. Jim Cressy induces Jack to visit his ranch in the west.

In a city editorial office, the editor sends a boy to get photos to go with two stories. The items read—"Jack Homer injured at polo" and "Lone Larry holds up another train." The boy brings the photos, and is told to take them to the art room. When the first papers appear, the sporting editor sees that the pictures of the bandit, Lone Larry and Jack Homer have been switched. As the mail edition has already gone out, there is nothing to do but to correct the mistake in the city issues.

Sime Gilbert receives a wire from Jim, telling of the coming of Jack Homer. Kitty is delighted. Jack arrives. He and Kitty are mutually attracted. Jesse is enraged, because Kitty refuses to go for a ride with him.

In the meantime, Lone Larry starts West and the next morning walks into the depot at Cressy where the agent is pulling a handsome trunk over from the track. The station agent calls Larry's attention to the trunk and tells him of the immense roll of bills the owner had. He had seen Jack tipping the porter. Larry, seeing an opportunity for a possible hold-up of the rich guy from the East, asks the Mexican from the ranch, who comes for the trunk, to give him a lift to the Cressy ranch. As soon as he has had a chance to get a good look at Jack, Larry slips away, without being noticed.

The sheriff gets his mail edition paper and, seeing the pictures over the bandit story, suspects that Jack is masquerading as Cressy's friend. He tells Kitty of his suspicions, but she laughs at him. Jesse, however, wires Jim to come West if possible. He is determined to get rid of Jack, and follows them when they go riding.

The next day Jack is riding alone, followed by the sheriff at a distance, Larry, wearing a mask, holds up Jack, who quickly shoots at the bandit and then tears the mask from his face. The sheriff arrests Jack. Several cowboys hear the shooting and upon approaching, are instructed by Jesse to take the injured man to the ranch house. Jack is taken to jail, while the doctor, after examining Larry, says he cannot possibly live. The cowboys are angry over the shooting and talk of lynching Jack. Kitty helps Jack to escape, but the men pursue him and bring him back. They plan to lynch him that night.

Larry is also worried about Jack's fate and, hearing Kitty's crying, calls her and tells her that Jack is innocent. Kitty dashes off on a horse to catch up with the lynchers. Cressy arrives at the depot; hears the news and rushes toward the fatal spot. He is in time to corroborate Kitty's story.

WHERE IS MY CHE-ILD (Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 20).—The cast: Mr. Weazelbiffer (Dan Russell); Mrs. Weazelbiffer (Mrs. Moore); Mrs. Gilsprev (Gladys Varden).

Mr. Weazelbiffer is henpecked at home, but at his office he is boss. He has an arrangement for getting rid of people he doesn't want around. They sit in a certain chair and are shot through the wall into a pool of water. The Gilsprev household is just the opposite. Hubby does all the work and wife flirts. Mr. Weazelbiffer has a disagreement with his bookkeeper, when Gladys comes to the office looking for a job. By mistake she is shot into the pool. Weazelbiffer rescues her and stands her over the register to dry. Then he shoots the bookkeeper in after her. The bookkeeper sends Weazelbiffer word that she will seek revenge.

An elderly office boy applies for work, which is given to him. Weazelbiffer now needs a new bookkeeper, and Gladys phones to the agency. The wires get crossed and she gets her husband on the wire instead. He ties the baby cradle to the pendulum so that it will rock while he goes to secure the job. He is engaged, but Weazelbiffer is mad when he sees Gladys flirting, as he thinks with the new man.

The boss' wife arrives, and the new office boy says she is a book agent. So she is shot into the pool. There is a general melee after this, and Weazelbiffer's wife insists upon Gladys being discharged. He obeys, but writes a note on the back of the check he gives Gladys asking her to come to his house that night. Weazelbiffer then sends a faked message to his wife, telling her that her sister's estate is being settled and that she is wanted by the lawyer. He gives the letter to the boy, who reads it, but takes it to Mrs. Weazelbiffer. She "falls" for it, and Gladys and Weazelbiffer are soon enjoying a little supper at his house. The boy, however, tells Mrs. Weazelbiffer of the fake, and she returns hotfoot. Weazelbiffer has just time to hide Gladys.

A man arrives with a vacuum cleaner to clean the apartment. It draws all the furniture into a heap. In the meantime, Glady's husband has returned and found Weazelbiffer's note to his wife. He takes the baby and goes to Weazelbiffer's. He says, "You took my wife, now take my child." Weazelbiffer hides the baby in the stove. The dog finds the baby and takes it out to his kennel. Hubby has a change of heart, and returns for his child. Weazelbiffer can't find it. The cleaner sees through the window that the baby is with the dog. He goes out secretly. Gladys is hiding, disguised as a chair. But Mrs. Weazelbiffer finds her. The cleaner tells about the baby and the dog, who drags the kennel after him by its chain. After a chase they find the kennel empty. They return with a policeman, who finds the baby hanging on the hatrack in the hall. He puts it, covered, on the bed. The cleaner hides it again. They can't find it and are crazy. At last the dog finds the baby for them. Then they all turn on the cleaner. "Who are you?" they ask. He puts on the bookkeeper's whiskers, and declares himself revenged.

GOLD SEAL.

THE BRAND OF HATE (Three Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 18).—The cast: Leonore Van Pelt (Tina Marshall); Emilie Van Pelt (Dixie Compton); Rosa Castilli (Sonia Marcelle); Richard Travers (George Marlo); John Worthington (James Levering); Leonore's Aunt (Lucia Moore); Vulkutz (Otto Van Loan).

Van Pelt, millionaire owner of tenements on the East Side, neglects the necessary rebuilding of them, while he makes handsome presents to his wife. A fire occurs on the day when he has been finally induced to visit the buildings. He loses his life in the flames. Rosa Castilli, a former servant of the Van Pelt's, loses her husband and child in the fire and rushes half maddened with grief to the Van Pelt home. She forces her way to Mrs. Van Pelt's room and curses her, catching her by the throat. She is dragged away by the servants, leaving Mrs. Van Peit in a faint. When the baby is born, the mother (Mrs. Van Pelt) is not allowed to see it. One morning, early, she makes her way to the room where the child is asleep, and sees on its cheek the mark of the fingers of a hand. The shock kills her. The child, little Leonore, grows up under the care and influence of her aunt. The mark fades from her cheek, but returns at long intervals under the stress of anger.

Leonore meets Richard Travers, an architect, who has specialized in model tenements. She consents to his making plans for rebuilding hers. Worthington, his friend, warns him that the fads of rich girls may mean very little. But Richard loves Leonore and believes in her. A society fop, Lawrence Algernon, is a suitor for her hand, and is favored by her aunt, who does not approve of Richard on account of his poverty. At last, her aunt persuades Leonore that Richard is after her money, and prevails upon her to accept Algernon. When Richard calls with the contemplated plans which have taken him months to finish, the aunt sends him away with the curt message that she has changed her mind. He telephones to Leonore, railing at her for her neglect of her tenements, for her selfishness, and calling her worthless. She is seized with a terrible anger, and the mark returns. The maid who sees it, runs with the story to Algernon, who sends word that he has been called away.

This brings Leonore to her senses, especially when she receives a letter from Worthington, telling her that Travers has gone out of her life forever. She takes this to mean that he is dead and resolves to devote her life to the work he would have done. She veils her face, and visits the poor in the tenements. She forms a brotherhood club for the men workers. One of them, Volkutz, who suspects her identity, and hates her on account of the loss of his father and mother in the fire in which her father had lost his life, plans to be revenged on her. He waits for her when she goes to consult Worthington on the rebuilding of the tenements, and calling her by name, tells her that the Brotherhood would like to see her at their meeting that night. She says that it is imperative that she should not be recognized until her work is accomplished, and that she will appear at the meeting. Volkutz then meets some of his fellows and raves against the Veiled Lady as she is called. One of them goes to Worthington's office, and tells him that the Veiled Lady is in danger. Richard Travers is there, and the two go to the meeting.

Leonore is welcomed by the men, and led to the platform by Volkutz. He then denounces her and says that the reason that she never shows her face is that she is the owner of the miserable kennels in which they live. They demand that she take off her veil. They are threatening her, when Travers and Worthington break in. Volkutz shoots at Travers, but the police come and the agitators are taken into custody, while Travers carries Leonore out of danger. The next day, he goes to see her. She tells him that she can never marry him and takes off her veil to show him the mark. It has disappeared. Richard tells her that it is her soul that he has always loved and they are happy.

Polly (Neva Gerber); "Red" Warren (Francis McDonald); Dr. Renolds (Jos. Girard); Prof. Duval (De Brulier); Cronin (Howard Crampton). Scenario by Stuart Paton. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Shirley watches over Polly as she lies asleep on the couch in Duval's home. "Red" Warren is seen approaching the Duval house and is followed by Cronin and a detective. Duval, fancying he hears a noise, awakens and goes toward the library, while Renolds sleeps on restlessly. Red starts to climp up to the library window, Cronin watching him. Shirley sees Red's figure silhouetted on the shade and at the same time feels the draft caused by the door being opened. Red gets ready to aim his revolver. Shirley sees the door open and close, but no one appears. Duval also notices the door close without any one entering. In the library, the "Hand" points a revolver at Shirley. The "Hand" fires simultaneously as Shirley fires, and Red, just starting to open the window, is hit by the bullet from the "Hand" and falls backward from the window to the feet of Cronin and the detective. Leaving Polly under the care of Duval, Shirley dashes down to Red.

In Renolds' bedroom no one is in the bed; the door opens and closes, but no one is seen. Red is carried into the house, where Duval examines him and sees that he has not long to live. Renolds hears these words as he stands at the door, and slowly enters and kneels beside the dying man, asking permission to speak with him alone.

Renolds listens to Warren's whispered words and bows his head in sorrow. Renolds dazedly walks from the room and Shirley and others go to the library. "Red" refuses to say anything and dies. Renolds has gone to his bedroom, completely overcome. Shirley answers the phone to hear the "Voice" say that he, Shirley, has waited long, but at twilight he shall know the truth. At twilight the Hand appears in the next room, and the "Voice" tells Shirley and Polly to come into the room alone. They do so and see the Hand hovering over a pile of paper. The Voice says, "On this paper will be written the truth."

THE VOICE ON THE WIRE (Episode No. 15, "The Living Death"—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 18).—The cast: Shirley (Ben Wilson); Polly (Neva Gerber); Renolds (Jos. Girard); Cronin (Howard Crampton); Prof. Duval (De Brulier); Renolds' wife (Irene Hunt); Laroux (William Quinn).

Shirley and Polly, fascinated, watch the disembodied hand writing. Cronin and Prof. Duval wait in an adjoining room; the latter preventing the former from entering. The hand writes that he was a member of the "Black Seven," a psychical and scientific research body of Paris and, because the scientists considered them crazy owing to their advanced theories, their meetings were necessarily secret. Five of these men were the five victims of the "Voice," the sixth was Renolds and the seventh was Emil Laroux, who, not content with proving that astral bodies could be projected, was positive that he could recall a soul at will, providing that the body in which the soul lived on this earth was preserved before death by a certain ancient process. The person had to be an easy subject to his will before the experiment. The men didn't believe him, knowing that no one would consent to being mummified alive. That night Renolds tried to convince Laroux of the absurdity of his new theory, but the latter seemed to be obsessed by the experiment he called "The Living Death."

At Renolds' home, Laroux soon discovered that he could easily dominate the will of Irene, Renolds' wife. He told the five men. When Renolds, or Chantarel, as he was known—went on his African expedition, Laroux went with him and willed that Irene should go too.

A year later they were in the heart of the African jungle. One day Renolds went to get some specimens. Irene was soon under the influence of Laroux's will. Then, with the help of two negro boys, they carried her into another room and soon carried her mummified body from the house. Laroux took her baby with him.

Renolds returned. With his men he followed Laroux all night until a sandstorm stopped them. Dawn found them on the desert. Then they found Laroux face downward in the sand, dead. In his right hand was clenched a confession of his insanity and of his mummifying Renolds' wife's living body and sending her to the "Black Seven" to prove his theory of "The Living Death." He had intended to use the baby as a medium of communication with her chained soul. The child was rescued.

That night Renolds was bitten by a poisonous snake and his servant cut off his hand to save his life. Later a human arm was grafted to Renolds' body and he found that when his astral body was projected, the hand was the only thing visible. He had means of revenge, and waiting seventeen years for his son's aid, killed all the "Black Seven," one by one. Renolds never found the mummy of his wife's "Living Death." He had killed his own son, "Red" Warren.

Renolds now appears before Shirley and Polly. He tells them that his duty being performed, he is now free to join his wife's soul. Shirley, overcome, silently hands him his revolver. Renolds fires into his own body and falls. Cronin dashes into the room and Shirley tells him that the "Voice" is dead; to bury the confession with his son—"Red" Warren.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 33 (June 19).—Having shown Brest—supposed to be America's naval base in the near future—and Bordeaux, ports on the west coast of France, Gaumont in this issue of "Tours Around the World" will show Nantes, on the same coast. The city of over 160,000 inhabitants is situated near the mouth of the Loire. It has a rich trade with South America. There is a beautiful panoramic view, showing the many islands, the fashionable sections of the city and the many steeples of the churches. A trip along the river rewards the spectator with sights of the houses built in the eighteenth century, and the several transporter bridges. Then are shown the museum, the cathedral and the castle of the Duchess Anne of Brittainy, built in the fifteenth century.

Pozzuoli, a small town near Naples, is notable for its ruins of the classic Italian period. In this section of the reel Gaumont shows the temple of Venus and Diana, the amphitheater—nearly as spacious as that at Rome, the temple of Serapis, and the massive rocks of Virgil. In ancient times the town was a Roman summer resort. It was destroyed by the Turks in 1550.

A Russian village in winter is pictured also on this reel. The views are notable for the wonderful photography of snow scenes. Comparison of the hovel and the palace is inevitable, even in this out-of-the-way corner of the world. How frozen meat and fish are stacked up in the square is interesting to us residents of a more temperate clime.

REEL LIFE NO. 60 (June 21).—Perhaps the most interesting section of this release one may be said to surpass the others is "Knitting Hosiery." This takes spectators on a visit to a modern knitting mill. These pictures show skein winders, back winders, ribbers and footing machines; in fact, everything to the final labeling and boxing. It is interesting to see how the tops are cut to the proper length and then transferred to the footing machines.

"Reclaiming the Everglades" pictures the draining of the rich swamp land of Florida. Five million acres are being reclaimed. Boom towns are springing up, towns that will endure because they are supported by a farming country that is regarded as absolutely the richest in the world. The pictures show the prodigal wealth of nature, unparalleled yields having been secured for all crops.

"The Most Perfect Child" is the little girl who won the prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, Marjorie Brown. She is now four years old. Every mother and father will be glad to see daily routine of play which has developed her so symmetrically. After her morning exercise she plays in her garden, makes mud pies, has her dancing lesson and runs wild on the beach. The section pictures the ideal life for a child.

"A Tilting Match on the Water" is a lovely aquatic knightly diversion of the French. "An Auto-Drawn Train" completes the reel.

CUB.

JERRY'S RED HOT TRAIL (June 21).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Sheriff (Louis FitzRoy); Hank, an outlaw (George George); Shorty (C. E. Fyehan); father (Harry De Roy); daughter (Claire Alexander). Directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry is "in bad" with a sheriff of a western town and is ordered out of the place. Jerry puts an outlaw to flight who is holding up a wealthy man, his wife and daughter, and is invited to ride with them. Later the bandit captures them, takes Jerry and the girl prisoners, and orders the chauffeur to drive on with the parents.

That night Jerry has a dream in which Indians are torturing him when the girl comes to the rescue and throwing herself before him is shot and killed. He is glad when he wakes up to find it all a dream.

The next day Jerry and the girl are rescued by the sheriff. Jerry is hailed as a hero, is congratulated by the sheriff, and wins a wealthy father-in-law.

LA SALLE.

TILLIE OF THE NINE LIVES (June 19).—The villain, greedy for more wealth, consults a noted seeress who in a vision shows him a treasure chest guarded only by a single country maiden. Together they go to search for this treasure, and find the country girl in Tillie.

The seeress hypnotizes Tillie who, with her pet pig in her arms, is carried away to an old barn loft. They torture Tillie in an attempt to make her tell where the treasure is hidden. Tillie manages to dispatch the pig with a message to her sweetheart tied to its tail, saying, "I am in the hands of a hypnotist—save me."

The pig delivers the message to Tillie's sweetheart, and then guides him to her prison where he arrives just in time to save her life.

MONMOUTH.

JIMMIE DALE, ALIAS THE GREY SEAL (Episode No. 14—"A Sheep Among Wolves"—Two Parts—June 22).—The story opens showing the underworld maddened with the thoughts of the Grey Seal. Travers, Marie La Salle's lawyer, and for the time being her chauffeur, receives papers from Australia that will convict the Pretender and the Woman in Black. The Pretender is informed of the arrival of the documents, and plans to trail Travers and secure the papers. The Tocsin instructs Jimmie Dale to meet and return by her chauffeur the ring which she dropped in his car. Jimmie obeys.

The taxi which meets him and takes him in is in a collision. The driver whispers just before the accident a few words which are meaningless to Jimmie Dale. On regaining consciousness Jimmie Dale finds himself in a library. When he bids the host adieu and starts to leave, he is detained. They show him the ring found on Travers and demand the paper and other information regarding the owner of the ring. Jimmie claims to know nothing about it. The Pretender uses desperate measures to obtain this information, shows Travers dead in the adjoining room, and threatens Jimmie with a similar fate unless he gives the desired information. Jimmie says it is impossible, and the Pretender, believing this, allows him to depart.

SIGNAL PRODUCING CO.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS (Chapter 11—"A Desperate Deed"—Two Parts—June 18).—When Helen regains consciousness after the blow dealt her by the raiders she finds herself in a box car which is rapidly filling with water. She has tried every means of getting out and has about given up the quest when a tug smashes into the car and cuts it in two. Climbing to the roof of the car she signals the crew of the tug and they take her on board.

Still pursuing the raiders Helen urges the owner of the tug to beat the local freight to the bridge where she can board. They make the bridge just as it is opened. Helen jumping from the top of the pilot house grasps the lower beams of the structure and works her way up. When the bridge closes down for the local Helen jumps to the top of the train.

Assisted by the crew she goes after the raiders, but they uncouple the last car and escape. Helen jumps the gap between the two cars, but they scramble off and board a passing passenger train. Uncoupling the engine of the freight, the engineer and Helen race to the nearest switch and turn it just in time to send the passenger on which the raiders are hidden into a siding and stop it.

Meanwhile "Boss" Hogan visits Desmond and negotiates to open a branch line to Copper City. Desmond plots to throw the construction to the Eastern Railroad instead of the K. & W., and so make a bigger haul for himself. He confides in Burke, who promises to help him in his trickery.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

A BIT OF KINDLING (Horkheimer Studios Five Parts—June 18).—The cast: Alice (nicknamed "Sticks") (Jackie Saunders); James Morgan (Arthur Shirley); Chief Engineer (J. P. Wade); Jim Clauncy, Alice's father (Chas. Ridley); Ruth Borden (James' fiancee) (Ethel Hutchey); Cyrus Van Hook (Edward Jooson); Constable (H. C. Russell). Directed by Sherwood MacDonald.

She leaves and Morgan returns to his people. Sleeping on a hay stack that night, she is discovered by a wealthy man who adopts her.

Morgan loses all sight of his little pal until a number of years later he chances to visit her adopted father's house on business and there finds her. A wedding follows.

THE DAZZLING MISS DAVISON (Powell Producing Co.—Five Parts—June 18).—The cast: Rachel, the Dazzling Miss Davison (Marjorie Rambeau); Miss Davison's Guiding Light (Fred Williams); Miss Davison's Shadow (Aubrey Beatie); Jillian, Miss Davison's sister (Agnes Eyre); Gerard Buckland (Robert Elliott); Mrs. Jennings (Winfred Harris); Arthur Jennings (Frank Ford); Mrs. Van Santen (Lillian Paige); Cora (Ruth Byron); Delia (Dore Flowden); Harry (Bert Starkey); Denver (T. Jerome Lawlor); Her Husband (George Paige). Directed by Frank Powell.

Gerard Buckland, a young society man, sees a pretty girl on the street one day, who, while shabbily dressed, has an air of gentility. While speculating as to her family connections he sees a shady-looking man hand the girl a glittering diamond necklace, which she conceals and then vanishes in the crowd.

Later at the home of a friend he is amazed to meet the girl. She is as charming in conversation as in appearance and manner. To entertain her friends she picks their pockets with professional skill, later returning the property with laughter.

Miss Davison appears to be making a good salary and she says she is a designer, but Buckland's suspicions are aroused and he determines to solve the mystery of her employment. He becomes convinced that she is either a kleptomaniac, an accomplice of professional thieves, hypnotized by an elderly man often seen to meet her, or preying on society through her beauty and wit.

Miss Davison is none of these. She is the best woman detective in New York, and the mysterious old man is her chief. The truth comes out when she gives the signal at a so called society bridge party, and in a flash one-third of the supposed society men and women are wearing handcuffs. The Dazzling Miss Davison has succeeded in breaking up one of the most notorious band of card sharks in America.

THE UPPER CRUST (American—Five Parts—June 25).—Molly O'Toole, a young woman of good family with a very small income, can find no employment in her town so comes to the city. She fails to find work, and becomes destitute. She applies to the Y. W. C. A. for a position. Mrs. Todd is leaving for Honolulu and she wishes her country home to be in condition for occupancy when she returns.

Molly is glad to get the job and starts for Mrs. Todd's home. Mrs. Todd's son, Algernon, is lazy but has a sense of humor. Algernon meets Joe Holmes, itinerant peddler, who enjoys life behind a pair of donkeys. Algernon buys the whole outfit. Holmes humorously suggests that Algernon take his name also, presenting him with printed cards. Algernon drives his purchase to the Todd stables. Entering the grounds, he sees Molly coming out after a satisfactory interview with Mrs. Todd. His mother explains she is their new housekeeper and a fine young woman.

Mrs. Todd goes to Honolulu, and Algernon, now Joe Holmes, starts out to "See America First." Molly goes to Crags Corners, the Todd home, empowered to "hire and fire" and with a checking account at the bank. At the Corners she is taken for Mrs. Todd, and as a joke she allows the natives to believe so. Captain Hancock, possessor of twenty millions, is captivated at first glance. He calls, but Molly does not tell who she really is; it is such a lark to play the lady of this estate. Molly feels that she must dress her part and draws heavily upon her allowance. She determines to marry Captain Hancock and be freed from poverty.

Algernon returns to Craigs Corners, which he has never seen. He is surprised to learn of Mrs. Todd's presence. He determines to unmask the intruder, but when he has met Molly his stern resolve fades and he finds himself seeking and receiving the post of chauffeur to "Mrs. Todd," driving his own car for the interloper and continuing to hide his real identity under the name of Holmes. Molly and Algernon become friends, but Molly determines to win Hancock for his money. Algernon as Joe Holmes, the chauffeur, is deeply in love with Molly before long, and she reciprocates the feeling. Her love makes her incapable of deceiving "Joe," and one day she confesses to him. He is secretly overjoyed at her honesty, and proposes to her, retaining himself as Holmes. Molly confesses that she loves him, but sadly admits that she is going to marry for Hancock's money. Algernon is grieved, but does not feel that it is as yet time to disclose his identity.

When Hancock proposes Molly finds it difficult to accept him. She is made miserable. She confesses to Hancock. He says he loves her and wants to marry her. She asks for a couple of days to think it over. Meanwhile the real Joe Holmes stops off at Crags Corners to elude justice which is dogging his footsteps as a forger. He recognizes Algernon, and sees that Molly is not Algernon's mother and that she does not know who Algernon is. He decides that he can make Molly think he is Algernon Todd, and so give him shelter until the search for "Joe Holmes" is past.

Algernon asks him to say nothing to Molly about his (Algernon's) real identity. Holmes goes to Molly, says he is the real Algernon Todd, and denounces her as an imposter. She is frightened and accedes to his request that nothing be said of his presence until his "mother" returns. Molly gladly promises him the run of the house. Hancock calls for his answer, and Molly has almost made up her mind that it is to be "yes." Their interview is interrupted by Holmes, who goes to the library and does not want to be disturbed. He has learned that the police are on his track and getting nearer. Molly returns to Hancock in the drawing room, but his pleading is again interrupted by the arrival of the constable, who have received orders from the New York police to arrest one "Joe Holmes."

Molly is frantic with fear for Joe's safety and says she will go get him. She runs to him at the garage and begs him to make his escape. Algernon has to be told the whole story before he understands. Her love for him makes her tell him the truth, that she has not been able to forget him long enough to accept Hancock. She declares her allegiance in spite of anything that he may have done. Overjoyed, Argernon takes her in his arms and then to her great alarm he refuses to flee.

He goes with Molly to the house. The constable tries to arrest Algernon as Holmes, but the boy asserts his identity as young Todd. The constable is not convinced. Molly is bewildered and begs "Joe" to insist that he is Mr. Todd, as Mr. Todd is even at that moment in the library. Holmes comes out then and tries to brazen it out. Algernon denounces him. Mrs. J. Van Rensselaer Todd sails in. She asks Algernon "What on earth is the matter?" and matters start to straighten themselves out. The constable takes a firm grip upon Mr. Holmes and exits with him. Hancock makes his exit unobtrusively when he sees Molly in the pseudo-chauffeur's arms, and to Mrs. Todd Algernon's only explanation is that Molly is the future Mrs. Algernon Todd. Mrs. Todd is pleased at Algernon's choice as a wife, and everything ends pleasantly for Molly.

The Come Back.—(Copyrighted Life Pub. Co.).

Triangle Film Corp.

LOVE OR JUSTICE (Ince-Kay-Bee—Five Parts—June 10).—The cast: Nan Bishop (Louise Glaum); Paul Kennedy (Jack Richardson); Jack Dunn (Charles Gunn); Winthrop E. Haines (J. Barney Sherry); Phyllis Geary (Dorcas Matthews); Judge Geary (Charles K. French).

Jack Dunn was a lawyer, and a brilliant one. At one time life held promise of great things, and yet on the eve of achievement he threw away everything, sinking to the lowest depths, a victim to the drug habit. In one of the most wretched resorts of the slums he meets Nan, and they form a loose kind of partnership.

Nan, who is a woman of brains, exercises a strong influence on the derelict, getting him away from the influence of the drug. In doing this she awakens Dunn's ambitions, and through her efforts he gradually regains his footing in the legal world. Dunn, in gratitude, would make Nan his wife, but the woman knows that he is gradually drifting away from her and that she can have no place in his world.

Making the supreme sacrifice, she breaks abruptly with Dunn, letting him believe that she is unfaithful to him. After many years they are brought together face to face in a courtroom, and there their destinies are settled forever.

THE GIRL, GLORY (Ince-Kay-Bee—Five Parts—June 10).—The cast: Glory Wharton (Enid Bennett); Jed Wharton (Walt Whitman); Bruce Crawford (William Warters); Sally Barton (Margery Bennett); "Sport" Morgan (Darrell Foss); Jake Morgan (J. P. Lockney).

Glory Wharton lives with her old grandfather, Jed Wharton, a civil war veteran, who worships only two things in his old age—his granddaughter and the memory of General Grant. The old gentleman had one failing that marred Glory's happiness, and that was his fine taste for old bourbon. She often puzzles over the attraction that liquor possesses for her granddad, and one day, tasting the stuff, decides that it is not good for him.

In this dilemma Bruce Crawford, the young minister of the village, whom she has sought, gives her his advice and aid. Her idea is that if her grandfather cannot get whisky in the village he will do without it. Bruce explains that so long as Morgan, the one saloon keeper of the place, lives up to the conditions of his license it is impossible to stop the sale of it.

How Glory and Bruce accomplish their plans provide the most dramatic incidents of the play.

HER EXCELLENCY, THE GOVERNOR (Triangle Production—Five Parts—June 17).—The cast: James Barclay, the Governor (Wilfred Lucas); Sylvia Marlow, Lieutenant Governor (Elda Millar); Joe Keller, political boss (Joseph Kilgour); Governor's secretary (Regan Houghston); capitalist (Walter Walker); Lieutenant Governor's secretary (Edith Speare); reform Senator (Albert Perry).

James Barclay, the governor, is much in love with Sylvia Marlow, an attractive young lawyer, and he asks her to marry him. He is refused, not because she does not care for him, but because she senses that his political aspirations and life are changing his character and destroying his ideals. Keller, a crooked politician, to whose influence Barclay owes his success, wants him to veto a child labor law. Against Sylvia's wishes he yields to Keller and vetoes the bill.

Sylvia breaks with Barclay and is elected lieutenant governor on the suffrage ticket. After a short time in the office war becomes imminent and the President asks for men and funds from each state. A big appropriation bill is drawn up, and Keller is instructed to see that Barclay vetoes the measure. The play comes to a surprising climax when Sylvia plays her trump card and brings the man she loves to his senses.

PAWS OF THE BEAR (Ince-Kay-Bee—Five Parts—June 17).—The cast: Ray Bourke (William Desmond); Olga Raminoff (Clara Williams); Boris Drakoff (Robert McKim); Curt Schreiber (Wallace Worsley); General von Mittendorf (Charles French).

Ray Bourke, a young American traveler, is stopping at an inn in Belgium, at the beginning of the war, when the German army is sweeping on towards Paris. Here he meets Countess Olga Raminoff, who is in the Russian secret service. As the German army marches through the town she fires a revolver from a balcony and shoots and wounds the general in command. Instantly the house is surrounded and the soldiers rush in to find the assassin.

Bourke endeavors to save her, and in doing so is held by the military as an accessory and both are condemned to instant death. While the two are being led out by a file of soldiers a Belgian aeroplane sweeps down on the village, and by dropping bombs puts the Germans to flight, as they know that the French are coming in force.

Ray and Olga escape. On reaching Paris they part on their different ways. They later meet in New York City, where the final scenes of the exciting romance transpire.

FIRES OF YOUTH (Thanhouser—Five Parts—June 17).—The cast: Iron-Hearted Pemberton (Frederick Warde); Billy (Helen Badgley); Billy's Father (Ernest Howard); Billy's sister (Jeanne Eagels); Jim (Robert Vaughn).

Peter Pemberton, a steel king, commonly called Iron-Hearted by his employees, spent the greater part of his life toiling to amass millions. He had given his boyhood and youth in exchange for his massive fortune, and now he discovered that his capacity for pleasure was gone. He wanted to play as he should have done long ago. Having forgotten how, he returned to the little factory town where he had spent his youth.

Little Billy was told by his father that Pemberton was a human impersonation of the devil. Anxious to see him, Billy went to his home. Pemberton was trying to amuse himself by playing with a toy engine but came to the conclusion that he was too old, but Billy taught him how. Billy never dreamed that he was talking to Pemberton, as he took his valet for him. Billy won the heart of Pemberton.

It was through Billy that Pemberton went down to the mills as the inexperienced Peter Brown. There he met Rose, and she seemed the incarnation of youth. The companionship of Rose and Billy, and the love of the factory people made Pemberton happy. Peter, thinking that Rose cared for him, and that she did not consider him old, fostered the thought that some day he might bring her home as a wife. Returning one evening he discovered he was mistaken; it was Jim who Rose loved.

Little Billy, fearing that Peter would be fired because he failed to go to work the next day, went to the factory to work his molds. A furnace exploded, letting forth a seething blaze of molten metal. He was not expected to live. This was the last straw; the men determined to have revenge. Pemberton must die. The men drew, and the one who drew the marked slip was to kill Pemberton. Rose drew for Jim. Pemberton was watching her. She drew back pale and trembling.

IN SURABAYA, THE "BUSY BURG" OF JAVA (Burton Holmes Travelogue No. 69—June 4).—Surabaya, Java, is the busiest headquarters of the Dutch in the Far East. Here the white-clothed white man from Holland has established the commercial metropolis of the Dutch East Indies. Here one sees evidence of "big business" and also finds satisfaction in traveling around other parts of the town where evidence of "small business," done in a large way, may be seen. Among the inhabitants of this busy little town are many Chinese, who are considered to be the thrifty men of the Far East. Many other wonderful sights in this quaint and picturesque little town await your patrons.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY-PICTOGRAPHS No. 70 (June 4).

Otto Luck at the Movies.—With this release of the Paramount-Bray-Pictographs two new individualities are introduced to your patrons. The first of these is Wallace Carlson, a young cartoonist who has just joined the art staff of the Bray Studios, Inc., and the second is "Otto Luck," a character Mr. Carlson has conceived and which, if the initial cartoon in which he appears is a fair sample of his ability as a laugh provoker, is going to take his place with Col. Heeza Liar, Bobby Bumbs and the Quacky Doodle family, as prime favorites with the movie fans.

The Desert Harvest.—Any authentic description of the Far West is sure to contain at least a paragraph dilating upon the vast desert wastes whereupon the thorny cactus, that useless product of a useless land, holds lonesome vigil. In this section of the Pictographs your patrons are to be shown a new kind of cactus, the perfected results of experiments undertaken years ago by the plant wizard, Luther Burbank. The picture is particularly interesting in that it was taken in the country but little known to most people, and depicts strange scenery and a brand new industry.

School for White Wings.—Here your patrons are shown an interesting and certainly unique picture in the form of a school for white wings, maintained by the City of New York. They will see the "rookies" being instructed in the various duties that are a part of their daily program. They must learn to harness a horse, to handle a horse; the broom and scraper are taken up for a space and the intricacies of handling an ash can without spilling its contents while holding a conversation with the cook through the kitchen window. In fact there are no end of tasks that seem easy at first but really require some skill that are made comprehensible to the scholar at the strangest of class rooms.

HER FRACTURED VOICE (Black Diamond—June 11).—Everyone in this world thinks that she can sing, but Sue knows she can, and as applause is the stimulant by which great singers are made, Sue looks about for the incentive. There being a scarcity of listening material, Sue seeks out her old friends of the farm, the chickens and the cows, who, rather than hurt her feelings, in turn politely walk away.

Unlike her voice, Sue is quite attractive; and one day there comes to her home to seek board a gentleman of the city. He falls in love with Sue and asks her to go with him, but Sue will not give up her operatic career. Knowing her weakness he promises to make a star of her, and wins her consent to flitter with him at the expense of a broken-hearted country lover.

Sue's dad discovers her flight and acquaints the country lover, who desists in a hanging operation to go to his sweetheart's rescue. Arriving in the city he knows not which way to turn, until he hears that unmistakable noise which he loves so well. Following it for several blocks he arrives at a cabaret just in time to prevent the proprietor from throttling that fog-horn which has started a riot. Throwing the piano at the retreating diners, he makes himself comfortable with a glass of champagne and becomes the best "audience" that Sue ever, or will ever, have.

THE INNER SHRINE (Lasky—Five Parts—June 14). The cast: Diane Winthrop (Margaret Illington); Derek Pruyn (Hobart Bosworth); The Marquis de Bienville (Elliott Dexter); Viscount D'Arcourt (Jack Holt); Mme. D'Arcourt (Mme. D'Juria).

Diane Winthrop, a wealthy young American girl, is the ward of Derek Pruyn, an explorer and a student. Derek is in love with Diane, but believes that he is too old to ask her to marry him.

The Viscount D'Arcourt is visiting at a Maine summer resort where Diane is spending the summer at the home of Derek and his sister. The Viscount proposes and is accepted just as Derek has nerved himself to propose to Diane. A hasty marriage ceremony is performed and the Viscount and Diane go to live in Paris, where the Viscount proceeds to take up his former life of debauchery, and his wife, to get even with him, begins a flirtation with the Marquis de Bienville.

The latter takes the flirtation seriously and when he finds out that Diane means nothing by it, he seriously compromises her. He and the Viscount have a duel, and the Viscount, at the end of his resources, instead of shooting at the Marquis, commits suicide. The Marquis flees to South America and aids in the rescue of Derek, who after Diane's wedding has gone to explore the upper Amazon.

Diane returns to America and Derek brings the Marquis, his rescuer, home with him. The three meet, explanations are demanded, and Diane finally appreciates Derek's wonderful love for her and they are happy together.

A ROADSIDE IMPRESARIO (Pallas—Five Parts—June 18).—The cast: Guiseppe Franchini (George Beban); Francesca Franchini (Jose Melville); Adelaide Vandegrift (Julia Faye); J. Stewart Vandegrift (Harry de Vere); Craig Winton (Harrison Ford); John Slade (Fred Huntley); Gibbs, the butler (W. A. Carroll); Lizzie Cosgrove (Adele Farrington).

Guiseppe Franchini is a fisherman on the coast of Italy where he lives with his wife, the bambino and a little pet bear. While attempting to rescue a man from an overturned boat he is picked up by a fishing schooner and is unable to return home until six months later, when he learns that his wife and baby have left for America, leaving Bruno, the bear. Guiseppe and Bruno start to go to America to search for them, and for sixteen years they wander around the country, Guiseppe playing on a flute and the bear performing a few simple tricks for the pennies of the children. Finally they reach the little town of Monterey. Here Slade, the proprietor of a roadhouse, and the editor of one of the newspapers, in attempting to ruin Craig Winton, the reform candidate for mayor, induces his butler, Gibbs, to have Lizzie, his girl, photographed in a compromising position with the young candidate. Guiseppe saves a little girl from being run over by a horse and meets Adelaide Vandegrift, the adopted daughter of a wealthy resident.

Bruno escapes, wrecks Vandegrift's pet apiary, and is promptly put in jail, and Guiseppe is informed that he must earn a hundred dollars or he will lose his pet. Guiseppe gets a job in a restaurant and after the frame-up on the candidate for mayor, finds a paper that implicates Slade in the plot. As Adelaide has befriended him, he shows it to her, and she, being engaged to Craig Winton, brings it before the young candidate.

Slade is driven out of town. In talking to Vandegrift Guiseppe recognizes in him the man whom he pulled from the water years before and Vandegrift then informs him that Adelaide is really Guiseppe's own daughter. Guiseppe is eager to take her into his arms, but when he realizes that she has had all the refinements of life, and he is only a wandering musician, he turns away and leaves her to her love. The last that is seen of them, Guiseppe and Bruno, are outlined against the sky, bound for the next town, there to amuse the little children.

COMMUTING (Klever Komedy—June 18).—Vic is at last settled with his family in his "dollar down and dollar when they catch you" bungalow "at Bentwood." Things are so cramped that he has to go outside and through the kitchen door in order to get his place at the dinner table.

Vic figures that commuting is the "real life," and on his first trip to town his wife gives him a list of shopping to do. Vic starts for the depot which the agent told him was a stone's throw from the bungalow. After he has walked a couple of miles, he wonders what kind of a fellow threw the stone. He eventually reaches the depot, but just in time to miss the train. He is told the next train leaves the same time the next day. He decides to "hoof" it to the office in town. Five hours later he arrives, only to find the office closed, it being Saturday and a half day. He decides then and there to do his shopping and get back to the bungalow.

Vic goes from store to store and managed to get everything his wife has on the list, and at the finish he looks like a young "moving van." On his arrival at the station he is informed that the only train for Bentwood is at 7.15 that evening. He walks to the railroad yards trying to decide what to do when he comes upon two train hands with a hand car. They are going toward Bentwood, and he begs them to take him with them. They agree, and Vic gets on with his bundles.

He does not go very far on the car before things begin to happen. First, Vic loses his hat, and then he loses one of the train men. A little further on the other train man is knocked off, and then the bundles. A couple of tramps are seated by the railroad track, and are wishing they had some good "eats" when suddenly Vic passes on his hand car and a chicken that he bought is knocked off the car into the hands of the tramps.

Vic reaches Bentwood and the car becomes derailed, and up the hill it goes into the bungalow with an awful smash, for Vic cannot stop it. It hits the bungalow so hard that it knocks the cooking stove over and sets things afire. Vic manages to get off the car and rushes into the house. He gets all the family out and rushes back to save what he can. He manages to save a carpet sweeper and the coal scuttle, for the bungalow is soon in flames. It is only a short while when it is in ruins, and Vic, turning to his wife, says, "It's an awful joke on the agent—I've only made him two one dollar payments."

THE LITTLE ORPHAN (Five Parts—June 18).—The cast: Rene Lescere (Ella Hall); Emmeline Warren (Gertrude Aster); Mrs. Billy Hardwick (Gretchen Lederer); David Clark (Jack Conway); Dick Porter (Richard La Reno); Jerry Mathers (George Webb); Henri Pelour (George Hupp). Scenario by Bess Meredyth and J. Clawson. Directed by Jack Conway.

Three bachelor friends—David Clark, Dick Porter and Jerry Mathers—decide to each adopt a Belgian orphan. They are prompted to act by an advertisement soliciting homes for a ship load of orphans soon to arrive from the war zone.

Going to the headquarters of the "committee of distribution," the three men selected from a list of names the children they promised to adopt and rear as their own personal charge. Their unfamiliarity with the Belgian system of naming children gave one of them a surprise.

Two of the bachelors each claimed a boy when they appeared at the emigrant station—but a girl answered to the third name that was called out by the guard. David Clark had chosen Rene Lescere. In consultation with his two pals, David was on the point of returning his charge for a boy, when the woe-begone expression Rene assumed at the prospect of leaving him touched Clark's heart, and he decided to keep her. In course of time David became a commuter, and Rene the head of his suburban household.

Mrs. Billy Hardwick, divorced wife of one of David's acquaintances, has set her heart upon winning Clark as her second husband. Rene's keen intuition makes the little Belgian penetrate Mrs. Hardwick's scheme, and to protect her foster-parent the little girl goes forth to find a wife whom she deems suitable to become Mrs. Clark.

Upon the street Rene meets Emmeline Warren, and entices her into Clark's house. She introduces Miss Warren to her foster-father. The unconventional and unexpected acquaintance thus formed ripens into what Rene had designed—a proposal of marriage and Miss Warren's acceptance.

It so happened that Miss Warren and Jerry Mathers, one of the original three old cronies, had previously been in love. When they meet again at Clark's home the old flame is rekindled and when David unexpectedly comes upon them in loving embrace, Clark realizes the circumstances and insists that Mathers and Miss Warren shall marry.

Heartbroken but resigned, to his fate, Clark closes his house, sends Rene to boarding school and repairs to his shooting lodge in the mountains, taking with him the third member of the original trio of chums—Dick Porter. Here the two men let the years glide by.

Comes the time that Mr. and Mrs. Mathers are to take a trip abroad. Rene and Mrs. Mathers have maintained a close companionship, and Rene has been invited to accompany the Mathers to Europe. By arrangement Mr. and Mrs. Mathers visit Clark and Porter in the woods, Rene coming along to say farewell to her foster-father before leaving for across the water.

The visit ended, Mr. and Mrs. Mathers start for the station; Rene stays behind for a last good-bye—and David finds that should Rene leave for Europe his heart would go with her. So he asks Rene to stay and become, instead of his little orphan, his wife.

DO CHILDREN COUNT? ("The Wonderful Event"—Two Parts—Essanay—June 20).—The cast: Jane Wilson (Mary McAllister); James Wilson (John Cossar); his wife (Mabel Bardine).

Jane Wilson, aged seven, is anxious to have a baby brother. For days she wonders where the baby supply is located, and finally asks her mother where she, herself, came from. Mrs. Wilson informs Jane she found her on a park bench.

Strolling with her nurse in the park later, Jane finds a baby on a bench and carries it home. The frantic parents of the baby engage the police, who track the baby to Jane's home. They pacify Jane by informing her that the baby is not a boy, anyway, but a girl baby. Jane is heartbroken, but her wish soon is granted for the Stork brings another baby to the Wilson home, and this time it is a boy.

WRATH OF LOVE (Five Parts—June 17).—Roma Winet is the author of a novel entitled "Jealousy." Although suffering from that very passion she lives happily with Bob Lawson, whom she has just married. When war comes she grows most jealous of Ethel Clark, once her dearest friend. Ethel has been left in Bob's care by Dave Blake, his chum, who leaves to enter his country's service.

Dave returns on a furlough from the front. He goes immediately to the home of Bob's mother, where Ethel is staying. While Dave is there Bob joins them. He warns Dave that spies are following him. They hear an outer door open. Dave leaves the house by a back passageway. The new arrival is Roma, and her finding Bob and Ethel together drives her frantic.

Jealousy at subsequent events makes life almost unbearable for her. She sees Bob go on mysterious missions to the rear of his estate where Dave is hiding; then she sees Ethel go there; she discovers Ethel in conference with Bob in his office, to whom she has brought papers from Dave. Again Roma misunderstands and upbraids Bob.

Her husband pleads with her to wait a short time for an explanation, but Roma is too indignant to be reasonable. That evening a note is thrown through the open window to Bob, telling him to bring the papers to the houseboat at once. Roma watches him go, and notices Ethel accompanies him. Dave denies sending the note and says it was the work of spies. He determines to make a dash for it. There is a hard battle with the pursuers, but Dave is successful in his fight. Misunderstandings between Bob and Roma are brushed away, and the woman is at last freed from her one besetting fault.

TYPHOONS COOL & VENTILATE
TYPHOON FAN COMPANY 1544 B'WAY NEW YORK CITY

"Patsy" Smith is a little drudge in Mrs. Duff's boarding house for sea-fearing men, called "The Fishermen's Rest." Captain Barnaby brought her there when she was a tiny girl. Her father, who had quarreled with her mother, had kidnapped little Patricia, and taken her away on Captain Barnabay's boat. He died before reaching his destination, so the old "sea salt" had taken the little girl in charge.

Having retired from active work, the captain is no longer able to pay for her lodging, so she is obliged to work for Mrs. Duff. Harry Hardy, the grocer's boy, is her friend. He is studying to be a lawyer, and is sure that some day he will occupy the White House, and that little Patsy will be with him as the "first lady of the land."

Captain Barnaby tells Patsy the story of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp and leads her to believe that the lamp is in the village. Patsy's one thought is to find it and wish for her mother. An old trunk belonging to Patsy has been sold by Mrs. Duff to a junk-peddler, to pay for the visits of the doctor when the girl was sick. The trunk contained some relics, of which Mrs. Duff did not realize the value. Among them was an Oriental lamp of peculiar design. In her wanderings around the village Patsy finds this lamp, which the junk-peddler tells her once belonged to Aladdin. It takes all the money she has in her savings bank to buy back the lamp.

She takes it home, and rubs it and wishes. The Genie Jehaunarar appears. Patsy cannot pronounce his name, so she calls him "Jennie." He transforms the room into a thing of beauty, gives Captain Barnaby a good leg instead of his wooden one and changes Mrs. Duff into a rag doll. But he cannot give Patsy her mother, because love, the greatest thing in the world, is beyond his magic power. Patsy wants to consult Harry Hardy about it, and they follow him to a masquerade ball. All three of them have beautiful costumes, the gift of the Genie, but it is the Genie who wins the prize for the best costume. He is much disgusted because the prize is a wrist-watch. Everyone applauds, and Patsy forgets to clap four times, the signal which makes the Genie disappear forever. Patsy finds herself in the midst of the gorgeous assembly clad in her little night drawers. She runs out into the garden to cry and a beautiful lady comes to comfort her—her mother. Patsy reaches out her arms—and wakes up!

She takes the "wonderful lamp" and throws it out of the window. It nearly hits Harry Hardy, who is passing by. Some papers and trinkets fall out and while he is picking them up Patsy runs downstairs to join him. Together they read the letters contained in the old lamp, and find her mother's address. They send a telegram, from which Harry has to pay, as Patsy has spent all her money for the lamp. Patsy's mother, with her brother, Judge Lawrence, arrive on the next train.

They take the girl to the home that is rightfully hers, and Harry goes too, to study with the Judge and become a lawyer. He sees his vision of the White House, with Patsy by his side, as the first lady of the land, becoming a possibility. Happiness has at last been brought about by the lamp.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—"Transporting Wild Animals" —June 4).—This release shows the methods of handling wild animals for shipment and throughout guarding against the creatures' escape or injury to themselves. There are lively scenes of capturing hoofed animals for shipment, uncrating a big crocodile, liberating newly-arrived bears, trapping suspicious and nervous types, and the ingenuous methods necessary in handling dangerous beasts.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE QUESTION (Five Parts—June 11).—The cast: John Stedman (Harry Morey); Martha Wainwright (Alice Joyce); Dr. Rundel (Charles Kent); Allen Cosgrove (Gladden James); Helen Wainwright (Amy Remley); Rev. Nathaniel Wainwright (Ed. Davis); Rundel's servant (Mr. Wangaman). Directed by Perry N. Vekroff.

Dr. Rundel, a scientist, is devoting his life to the search for a new serum; he is aided by John Stedman, a young chemist. Realizing that his pursuit might not be concluded in his own lifetime, he decides to train Stedman so that he can carry on the work. To this end, he has made his will, leaving to Stedman all his money and the key to the formula, without which the younger man could not hope to find the much-desired serum.

Dr. Rundel's only condition is that John devote all his time and energy to the work in hand, which means, automatically, that he shall not marry. John is in love with Martha Wainwright, daughter of a clergyman, and when he attends a social function at the Wainwright home against the doctor's wishes, the latter is incensed. He adds a codicil to his will specifying that John shall not inherit the money and the formula until he signs an agreement not to marry until the work is finished. After Dr. Rundel's death John works hard, secretly hoping that he will succeed in the work and be able to marry Martha.

He breaks under the strain, and Martha's father, certain in his own mind, that John never will succeed, urges Martha to marry a wealthy suitor named Cosgrove. She refuses. John collapses and she hurries to him. She realizes that he needs her, and, torn by the question of love vs. convention, she decides to remain with John. She and John suffer from the scandal her act inspires, and the end comes when she realizes that she is dragging John downward by remaining with him.

She then offers to marry Cosgrove, but he offers her only a substitute. John intervenes during a struggle between the girl and Cosgrove. The two men engage in combat. At this stage the picture turns back and shows that all of this action has occurred in a dream of old Dr. Rundel. He is shown dreaming at his table when the telephone awakes him. John, at the other end of the line, announces his engagement to Martha, and the old scientist, the fearful dream still vivid in his mind, readily extends congratulations to his young assistant.

EXPORT & IMPORT FILMS.

ROBESPIERRE (Seven Parts—June).—The cast: Tallien (Novelli); Therese (Lydia Borelli); Robespierre (A. Tobiani); Guery (R. Barni).

The first episode shows the contrast between the luxury-loving nobility and the restless populace which hungers and riots while the nobles feast. Exteriors show the idlers romping on a superb estate.

The events in France which led to the fall of the Bastille are reproduced, after which the story takes up Robespierre the dictator's relentless pursuit of royalists. The conflict between the people's Committee of Public Safety and rebellious royalists rages on between Paris and Bordeaux. Robespierre is the storm center and his might as a political strategian is shown.

The central part of the plot has to do with the love affair of Therese, Marchioness de Fontenay and Jean Guery. He, by his daring deeds in defiance of the government, and close calls from capture, has become known as the "Unseizable." Both go to Bordeaux, to which city Robespierre assigns Tallien to stamp out plots. Tallien encounters Therese. He courts her, not knowing that she loves Guery or that Guery is this mysterious "unseizable." Therese sees this opportunity to help the cause. She prevails upon him so that his leniency toward offenders becomes notorious. Finally an order from Robespierre recalls Tallien to Paris to defend his actions. Therese, in her make-believe love for him, goes to Paris also, and while appearing to aid him, attends the secret royalist conferences. One of these is uncovered in advance by a Robespierre spy and Tallien is detailed to capture the participants. After all are subdued and the lights are turned on, Tallien finds Therese among the prisoners. He orders her release by assuming the responsibility for her, but one of Robespierre's more confidential agents tells Tallien that it is impossible because Robespierre ordered her arrest specifically.

This opens the breach between Tallien and Robespierre. With Therese in prison and her journey to death on the guillotine only a matter of hours, Tallien is frantic. He contrives to see her and when she impresses on him that the only way he can save her is to eliminate Robespierre, she precipitates the conspiracy that results in Robespierre's downfall. The dictator is shorn of his power, and in seeking to escape the fury of the mob, is shot. But while his wound is dressed, death is only delayed, for the fallen tyrant is carried out to an ignominious end on the guillotine.

In Answering Advertisements, Please Mention THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

I'm the Original War Baby

and I'd just as soon scrap for your theatre as any other

I don't need Conscription to raise an army. As soon as folks see my cards they volunteer. And say, with me and my army fightin' for your theatre, you can lay back and laugh out loud at the Dull Summer Months. Just enlist me on your side and watch the "Summer Drop" fade over the skyline.

When I call the roll, every kid that has ever seen or heard of me, answers "Here." And the kids bring their ma's and pa's and the rest of the family with them. There isn't a slacker in the bunch. And then when I give the word, on they march to battle for big Summer Returns for you, with General Prosperity at their head, right behind me. And they'll fight their heads off for thirty weeks, no matter how hot the weather is.

Start giving out Cico Toodles Cards and watch the army grow. Don't let someone else send in a call for me first. Just as quick as you can get in touch with your local exchange, and tell them that you want Cico Toodles for your theatre, or else write in to

I'll bring with me some slides for your screen and a display for your lobby FREE OF CHARGE

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Success of the Marlux
Projection Lens

is due to the uniformly satisfactory results that it is giving all over the country.

Optically the Marlux embodies the very latest advances in the science of projection.

Mechanically it is correctly designed and constructed so as to focus easily and accurately, and as it does not rotate in focusing all possibility of a displacement of the image on the screen is avoided.

The quality of the workmanship is consistent with the high character of the lens.

Simplex

We Sell Only ONE GRADE

ONLY ONE MODEL

—the latest development in the art of projection. We sell no back numbers that are artificially kept alive.

ONLY ONE QUALITY

—the very finest it is possible to produce from truly high-class materials by men who are masters in their line.

THIS POLICY

has multiplied Simplex Users and Simplex Output until now we sell more high-grade Projectors than any other manufacturer in the world.

REMEMBER

This was accomplished under competitive prices. Furthermore, projecting pictures is not like patent medicine—there's no imagination about it. If the quality is not there, you see it on the screen, you feel it in the Box Office and in repair bills.

NOW!

Aren't these excellent reasons for calling on a Simplex Distributor? Do that, or write us for Catalog A, which tells things it will profit you to know.

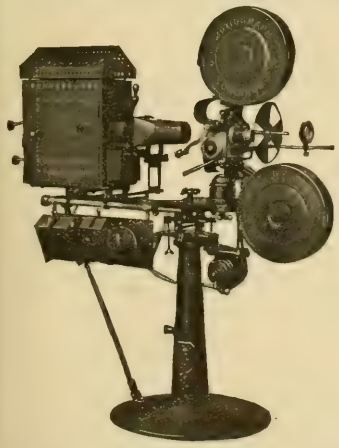
The Motiograph for Dependability



EVERY MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNER and MANAGER should read the following letter from Kansas City, Mo.:

Dear Sirs:
Many times I have been considered as a radical man in my views regarding the equipment that I use in the Sapphire Theatre, but the fact that I am compelled to run at such a high rate of speed and run so continuously from early morning until midnight, I feel that I must use only the equipment that gives the best results and costs me the least money to maintain.
In my experience in the show business (which started seven years ago), I have used every make of machine with the exception of one, and until such time as you persuaded me to install the Motiograph equipment I had been buying new machine heads every six months and in many instances I had to have my machine heads overhauled thoroughly at an expense of from ten to thirty dollars. I have had the two Motiographs in service running at the rate of from five to eight minutes per reel for more than seven months; the expense so far has been eighteen cents, and from what my operators advise me they are good for another six months' steady running without any more expense.
If any of your customers desire any further confirmation of this letter (that is, if you show this letter to anyone), have them write or see me, for I know good equipment when I see it and will be only too glad to assist any manager towards locating the most practical moving picture machine that to my knowledge has been manufactured.
Yours very truly,
A. E. Elliott, Prop.,

"Wars cannot be conducted without money. It is the first thing to be provided. In this war it is the most immediate help—the most effective help—that we can give. We must not be content with a subscription of two billion dollars; we must oversubscribe this loan as an indication that America is stirred to the depths and aroused to the summit of her greatness in the cause of freedom. Let us not endanger success by complacent optimism. Let us not satisfy ourselves with the reflection that some one else will subscribe the required amount. Let every man and woman in the land make it his or her business to subscribe to the Liberty Loan immediately, and if they cannot subscribe themselves, let them induce somebody else to subscribe. Provide the Government with the funds indispensably needed for the conduct of the war and give notice to the enemies of the United States that we have billions to sacrifice in the cause of Liberty.

"Buy a Liberty Bond today; do not put it off until tomorrow. Every dollar provided quickly and expended wisely will shorten the war and save human life."

WHY? FIFTEEN CONVINCING REASONS WHY YOUR PROJECTION WILL BE VASTLY IMPROVED BY USING WHY?

SPEER CARBONS

Speer Carbons produce:

Because: All sizes of carbons are manufactured and the desires of operators can easily be gratified. The styles include the Soft Cored and Solid carbons and the famous "Hold-Arks."

Because: A Speer Cored upper and a Hold-Ark lower afford an ideal combination for your working conditions.

Because: In the use of Speer Carbons a maximum amount of light is produced, with a minimum consumption of the carbons.

Because: Every carbon is uniform and can be depended upon for efficient results.

Because: In the use of a "Hold-Ark" the metal coating permits the use of a smaller carbon in the lower holder.

Because: The ghosts and aggravating shadows are eliminated by the brilliancy of the light.

Because: Where the "Hold-Ark" negative carbon is employed the wandering of the arc is prevented and positive steadiness of the light is assured.

Because: The hard core of the "Hold-Ark" greatly relieves the operator and eliminates the necessity of frequently adjusting the arc.

Because: Patrons will not frequent your theatre unless your pictures are projected with a bright, "rock-steady" light, such as Speer Carbons produce.

Because: In order to produce the best photoplays, high amperages are necessary. The metal coating of the "Hold-Ark" provides the additional carrying capacity and still permits the use of a small carbon in the lower holder.

Because: A mere trial of Speer Carbons will cause you to use them unhesitatingly thereafter.

Because: Quality alone is first consideration in the manufacture of these carbons, and the high standard already set will never be lowered.

Because: Speer Carbons will ultimately revolutionize the motion picture industry, and progressive exhibitors and operators should not permit prejudice or practice to interfere with their adoption.

Because: The carbons are backed by a modern factory erected wholly for their manufacture. An elaborate research and experimental laboratory is also devoted to the improvement and betterment of the carbons, and fully developed experiments which show beneficial results are readily adopted.

Because: Samples will gladly be supplied and expert information furnished to operators who are not obtaining the improved projection they desire.

PICTURING HISTORY

Happenings that Will Be Recorded in History Shown in CURRENT EVENTS.

Ten years from now the children will be asking questions about what America did in the World War. How America prepared; what she did to meet the issue. All is shown in Current Events. No important historical event can escape its all-seeing eye. No matter what difficulties must be faced—no matter how dangerous it may be to get the picture, the 200 trained camera news gatherers get the story. Current Events is printed the day preceding release date. Its news is as fresh and interesting as any morning paper. Exhibitors who have booked it see new faces among their patrons who are attracted solely through Current Events.

Firing Mortars at Fort Totten—Universal Current Events

A POPULAR WEEKLY

Screen Magazine Gains More "Subscribers" than Any Other Weekly.

Someone has said that a picture tells in a glance what would require five thousand words to describe. If this is true, then it would require millions of words to describe the interesting subjects covered in Screen Magazine at every release. This fascinating weekly contains interesting instruction on the manufacture of products of general interest; it contains cooking lessons; beauty hints; science and art; travel; and animated sculpture by the gifted sculptor, Willie Hopkins. It is not a "fill in" but a feature in itself. If you show it once your patrons will demand that you show it every week. It is popular with the masses of every age and sex. If you don't show it and your competitor does he will get the crowds on the night that Screen Magazine appears. That's straight! Book it through your nearest Universal Exchange or address UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, 1600 Broadway.

FIRST ON THE SCREEN

Animated Weekly Gets the Jump on its Rivals.

Over and again the Animated Weekly has flashed an occurrence of national interest on the screen several days before its nearest competitor appeared with the same event. Its immense staff of correspondents never miss the dramatic punch of any event. They get it. No matter what the difficulties may be or how many barriers may be put up, they never quit until they get what they were sent for. It is this hanging on with a bulldog grip that has placed the U. A. W. in the lead—and first in the hearts of the fans. They know they are going to see live news—things that they never saw before when U. A. W. appears on the screen. It will pay any Exhibitor to book this feature and advertise it to his patrons. He will make a hit with his crowd and "cash in" as big as he does when showing a popular star.

SOMETHING DIFFERENT

"Seven Cutey Pups" Make Thousands Laugh Till the Tears Come.

Versatility is the true secret of the Universal Company's success. Something different all of the time. One of the latest features is breathing the breath of life into Vincent Colby's pups. Every person in America has seen these pups on post cards and both sent and received such cards through the mails. They have smiled at their antics; now they actually scream with laughter as they witness the tricks of the pups on the screen. This clever one-reel feature can be booked through any one of the 73 Universal Exchanges.

PULLING POWER OF UNIVERSAL SERIALS

Assure a Steady Weekly Attendance of Patrons.

The serial idea makes big profits for Exhibitors because it keeps the fans coming back each week to see the next episode. They become absorbed in the plot and want to see how the story will end. One of the greatest serial money-makers is the "Voice on the Wire." But "The Gray Ghost" with its intensely gripping plot will catch the fancy of the fans and play capacity. The indications are that it is going to run away ahead of the big profits made through "The Voice on the Wire." Don't overlook the business-building abilities of the serials. Anything that sustains interest in your house week after week is sure money for you to bank. This is what Universal Film serials do.

Universal Program Draws Big Crowds With Its Snappy Variety

Many times people will move from one neighborhood to another just because they have grown deadly tired of traveling the same street and into the same house year in and out. Every progressive human wants change It is this desire for variety that the Universal Program completely fills. Instead of long drawn features—novels in picture form—the Program shows short stories of drama, melodrama, comedy, and love. It gets under the skin of the crowd every time. It fills their longing for human interest stories yet, unlike the feature, they can slide into the theatre any time most convenient to them and know that they are not going to break into the middle of a feature and see a story backward. You will get your patrons out more frequently each week through the Program than any other show you can put out.

SPECIALS

On the Universal Program Week of July 9th

BUTTERFLY—"THE REED CASE" (Five-Reel Drama)—Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely.
NESTOR—"MINDING THE BABY" (One-Reel Comedy)—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.
L-KO—"HEARTS AND FLOUR" (Two-Reel Comedy)—Bob MacKenzie, Eva Novak and Charles Ryckman.
UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY—No. 80.
REX—"THREE WOMEN OF FRANCE" (Two-Reel Drama)—Jack Mulhall and Irene Hunt.
VICTOR—"MEET MY WIFE" (One-Reel Comedy)—Neal Hart and Mignon Anderson.
UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE—No. 27.

JOKER—"KITCHENELLA" (One-Reel Comedy)—Gale Henry and Milton Sims.
POWERS—"MONKEY LOVE" (Comedy Cartoon) and "IN THE ROCKS OF INDIA" (Dorsey Educational)—Split Reel.

The SPECIALS are all bulls-eye hitters. They cost a little more than their pro rated rental at the complete Program price, but they certainly are worth every extra cent they cost. They make a good advertisement for your house, too, because they make your patrons tell your friends what a good show you put out. That's the kind of talk that means increased patronage for you.

REGULARS

On the Universal Program Week of July 9th

GOLD SEAL—"A LIMB OF SATAN" (Three-Reel Drama)—Ruth Stonehouse.
VICTOR—"THE PAPER HANGER'S REVENGE" (One-Reel Comedy)—Eileen Sedgwick.
VICTOR—"KICKED OUT" (Two-Reel Comedy-Drama)—Carter De Haven.
IMP—"HATTON OF HEADQUARTERS" (One-Reel Drama)—Lee Hill and Chas. Mailes.

The REGULARS are fine, wholesome and powerfully dramatic subjects—brilliant and popular stars—masterly direction—complete and lavish productions. They can be booked separately, if desired. But no matter how you book, be sure to get at least a part of them for your house. Get in touch with the nearest Universal Exchange and ask for full particulars.

DULL CARE DISAPPEARS

Roars of Laughter Burst From Fans at Showing of Universal Comedies.

The clean, wholesome fun in Universal Comedies pulls screams of laughter from the fans. No matter how hardened or grouchy the patron may feel he is bound to chuckle, chortle, and snort with pleasure as he sees the funny antics and humorous situations which each comedy presents.

There are three kinds of Universal comedies: Nestor is a very polite brand of humor; it might almost be called subtle. But the big way it gets over and the huge enjoyment the audience gets out of a Nestor leaves no doubt of the fun that is in it. L-KO'S are screams. Folks are so busy laughing that they don't have time to notice just how daring the stunts are that are put over in the L-KO brand. Yet some of the stunts rival in daring the best efforts that are tried in feature plays. Jokers are well named; they are jokers in truth. No one can look at a Joker and keep a straight face. No matter what control he may have over his features he is sure to laugh with uncontrolled mirth over the laff-getters that are packed and pressed down in a Joker. Book the three for a Comedy Night through any Universal Exchange.

Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures

"To travel is to possess the World"

THE wonderful popularity of Burton Holmes is due to the fact that he has presented his pictures to the public in a different and original way. A lecture, to most people, has the terrors of an arithmetic lesson. Mr. Holmes has revolutionized "the great outdoor" films. Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures are "easy chair" journeys.

Mr. Holmes' costume in the illustration is that of the Bohemian peasant, worn only on gala occasions

That Mr. Holmes' method of presentation is successful is evidenced by the fact that people have been paying —and gladly, too—$1.00 and $2.00 to see his pictures.

THE FINEST PICTURE HOUSE IN THE SOUTH

New Orleans La | May 24, 1917.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.,
25 W. 45th St., New York

Dear Sirs:

Enclosed please find our check for four days run of the "Vicar of Wakefield."

We might incidentally state that we are mailing this check with more than our usual amount of cheerfulness, as this picture broke all records in this house, and we are now making arrangements with your representative, Mr. R. Junet, for another four days run, in fact, we have not screened any picture on which the press comments and the approval of the public was so unanimous.

The picture is indeed a masterpiece and a classic, and while bigger productions may have been made and screened, we are willing to stake our reputation that no production will show any finer, if as fine a characterization of any character, as Frederick Warde does, in the impersonation of the Vicar. If Mr. Warde never appears in any other picture, this bit of character acting and impersonation of the old Vicar will go down in the history of the motion picture industry as a master creation of the age.

We opened our house with your pictures, and we practically have the largest house in the South, and your pictures have given us and our patrons universal satisfaction. Send regards.

Yours truly,

An Open Letter to Exhibitors

June 15th, 1917

I will greatly appreciate your views with reference to the policy of release and contract for Feature pictures beginning Sunday, September 2nd.

To recite a little history of the motion picture business I believe is always a good thing, for the whole industrial world is built on precedent.

When I legally, financially and personally fought the motion picture Monopoly or Trust a few years ago, I did so believing that it was for the best interest of the exhibitor. You will remember with me that the Motion Picture Patents Combine had for its policy the strangulation of competition and to continue producing inferior one and two-reel pictures, instead of progressing with the times, and permitting great brains to be drafted into the industry and great pictures to be made.

I fought in the United States Courts and won.

The motion picture is a free industry today and competition exists. Greater productions are staged that are drawing additional money to the box office.

When I engaged actively in opposing the proposed ten per cent War tax on admissions to the motion picture theatres, I felt that it was the proper move in the best interests of the exhibitors. I wish to thank the various Exhibitors' Leagues of the United States for their telegrams and letters of thanks for my efforts.

Now we are on the threshold of a new era. Still further progress must be made in the motion picture field.

We, in New York, cannot judge what is best for your theatre and your box office. We want to get a consensus of expression. We know that whatever may be our new policy that it cannot satisfy every exhibitor. Nor will we receive a unanimous opinion. However, we aim to fix a policy that will satisfy the great majority.

In inviting your views, I have in mind foremost the question of what policy of release and contract will be most acceptable to you. What policy will permit you to make the greatest profit during the next year, and give a fair return to the Fox Film Corporation as producers?

Are you in favor of a booking system by stars? Or, do you prefer a program policy?

Fox Film Corporation will release a number of Special De Luxe pictures, from seven to ten reels, after September 2nd. It is our belief that these Special pictures are of exceptional merit and box office drawing power, and will prove exceedingly profitable to exhibitors who book them. Under what policy should these special pictures be released?

What policy of release and contract best fits your theatre and circumstances relative to two-reel comedy pictures?

Fox Film Corporation is built on a solid financial foundation, and we know that on the success of the exhibitor depends our success.

I would be pleased to have your letter reach me before July 1st, so that when our policy is announced (to take effect September 2nd), that we will be absolutely certain that we are dealing fairly and squarely and in the best interest of the trade. Our new policy will be announced July 15th.

Please think this matter over NOW, then sit down, dictate your comment, place it in an envelope, and address it to me marked PERSONAL. I thank you in advance for the courtesy of your expression.

Lewis J. Selznick

WHY I CHOSE THE RIALTO!
The Rialto has a managing director who is conscientious and particular.
So-called "runs" in legitimate theatres in New York have lost their significance. The excessive overhead expense, the small seating capacity, and only two shows a day have made "runs" for feature films on Broadway a certain financial loss except in the case of one or two spectacles which were worth the $2.00 admission charged.
However, this method of exploiting a feature impressed the buyer and the exhibitor, until in the past years many mediocre and even poor films were given forced "runs" at heavy financial loss. The result has been that buyers and exhibitors do not today consider a "run" a mark of quality. At least the intelligent ones do not. I expect to do business with the intelligent ones.
The public has never been fooled by these runs. The millions of fans judge a film on its merits, as has been proved in scores of instances.
"PARENTAGE" is not a $2.00 film. New York City folk should not be asked to pay $2.00 to see it, when it is to be afterward shown all over the United States at from 10 to 50 cents. At those prices "PARENTAGE" is in a class by itself.
I consider the Rialto the finest theatre in New York City. I believe the hall-mark of a Rialto showing is better than any "run," because of the recent abuse of that method of presenting special productions. Many of the films which have been exploited for "runs" were offered to Mr. Rothapfel of the Rialto rent free, and refused.
FRANK J. SENG
TIMES BLDG.
NEW YORK

Immediately after seeing "PARENTAGE," the first time, in preparing music for the private showing, Manager Rothapfel asked for a rental booking, and after seeing the production several times he made the request urgent.

I decided to avoid having "PARENTAGE" confused with the "forced run" features, and so booked it in New York's finest theatre for the week of July 8th.

Manager Rothapfel will place his personal guarantee in enthusiastic terms upon "PARENTAGE," in his advertising presenting it to his patrons.

"PARENTAGE" makes a direct appeal to the millions who pay from 10 to 50 cents every day to see films. It will be appreciated by the masses and the classes, in the biggest of cities and the smallest of towns.

I know the intelligent theatre owners of New York City prefer to have a film booked direct to them, instead of having it placed in a theatre not fitted for films.

They will be particularly pleased when they learn that an extensive advertising campaign is to be conducted in New York City when "PARENTAGE" is playing in their houses, instead of when it is being "given a run" in some small seating capacity legitimate house at inflated prices.

Yours for better business,

Frank J. Seng

FRANK J. SENG
TIMES BLDG.
NEW YORK

WHY I CHOSE SELZNICK FOR N.Y. CITY and CHICAGO

I have faith in "PARENTAGE."

A careful investigation convinced me that Lewis J. Selznick has the most efficient organization for handling a truly big film in New York City.

Within three hours after the private showing of "PARENTAGE," at the Rialto Theatre, on June 6th, fourteen different buyers had asked to buy the New York territory. I appreciated very much the enthusiastic manner in which they confirmed my opinion of "PARENTAGE," but I did not want to sell the New York City territory.

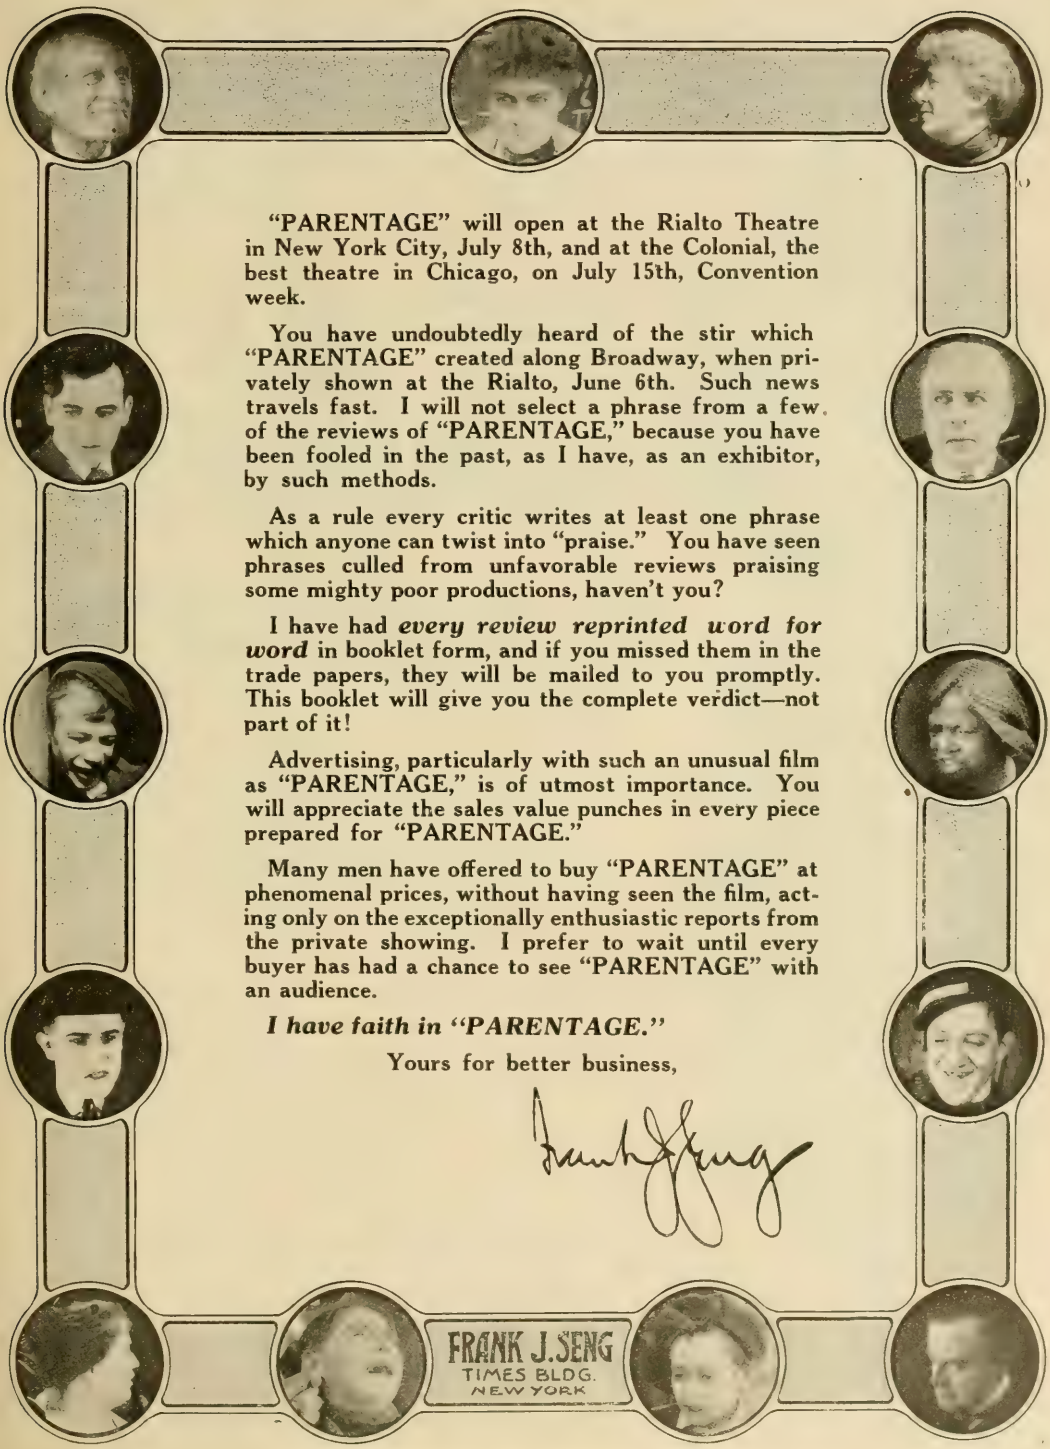
Lewis J. Selznick is a distributor. He frankly admits that he does not consider himself an expert judge of films. He is always guided by his staff, his associates and exhibitors, whose business it is to know film values.

Mr. Selznick became very anxious to secure "PARENTAGE," after getting a report from his partner, Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, of Chicago, who is recognized as one of the most able film men in the United States, and after hearing the enthusiastic praise of "PARENTAGE" from Manager Rothapfel of the Rialto Theatre.

Mr. Jones stated that, excepting one or two massive spectacles, he considered "PARENTAGE" the best combination of entertainment value and advertising possibilities he had ever seen. He classed it as the best box-office value of the year, and a sure-fire "long run" or repeat attraction.

I have made a special contract with Mr. Selznick to distribute "PARENTAGE" in New York City only, and with Mr. Jones, his associate, for Chicago, Illinois, and Southern Wisconsin.

FRANK J. SENG
TIMES BLDG.
NEW YORK



"PARENTAGE" will open at the Rialto Theatre in New York City, July 8th, and at the Colonial, the best theatre in Chicago, on July 15th, Convention week.

You have undoubtedly heard of the stir which "PARENTAGE" created along Broadway, when privately shown at the Rialto, June 6th. Such news travels fast. I will not select a phrase from a few of the reviews of "PARENTAGE," because you have been fooled in the past, as I have, as an exhibitor, by such methods.

As a rule every critic writes at least one phrase which anyone can twist into "praise." You have seen phrases culled from unfavorable reviews praising some mighty poor productions, haven't you?

I have had every review reprinted word for word in booklet form, and if you missed them in the trade papers, they will be mailed to you promptly. This booklet will give you the complete verdict—not part of it!

Advertising, particularly with such an unusual film as "PARENTAGE," is of utmost importance. You will appreciate the sales value punches in every piece prepared for "PARENTAGE."

Many men have offered to buy "PARENTAGE" at phenomenal prices, without having seen the film, acting only on the exceptionally enthusiastic reports from the private showing. I prefer to wait until every buyer has had a chance to see "PARENTAGE" with an audience.

I have faith in "PARENTAGE."

Yours for better business,

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS EXCHANGES

JUNE 30, 1917

"RAILROAD RAIDERS" PROCLAIMED A BIG BOX OFFICE ASSET

EXHIBITORS everywhere are loud in their praise of the newest Helen Holmes chapterplay — "The Railroad Raiders." It is generally conceded to be the last word in the way of thrillers.

Exhibitors Unite in Praise.

From all over the country come reports of its tremendous drawing power. "Seventeen hundred seats — the full capacity of the Whitehouse Theatre—and we held them out—that's what 'The Railroad Raiders' is doing for us," writes O. L. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. "I showed the first chapter of 'The Railroad Raiders' and did an excellent business on it—one of the best Mondays I have had in a long time. The picture starts out fine, and no doubt will hold up well to the end, as Helen Holmes never falls down," says R. W. Davis, manager of the Palace Theater, Trinidad, Col. "'The Railroad Raiders' is going big and is certainly a knockout. I packed them in at the matinee and had my house crammed full at starting time in the evening," writes George Laenhardt, manager of the Varsity Theatre at Campaign, Ill. "We feel qualified to testify that 'The Railroad Raiders' comes up to expectations from the box-office angle as well as every other angle. The story is great and the photography far above the average," reports C. W. Brill, manager of the Norka Theatre, Akron, Ohio. "I will say without fear of contradiction that 'The Railroad Raiders' is Helen Holmes best production to date. The business she draws in this city is wonderful," declares Ollie A. Savin, manager Piedmont Amusement Co., Winston-Salem, N. C. A host of similar testimony could be offered if space permitted.

Two Other Holmes Serials.

At any Mutual Exchange you can now obtain bookings on not only "The Railroad Raiders," but also on two other big Helen Holmes successes—"A Lass of the Lumberlands" and "The Girl and the Game."

"Betty Be Good" is the title of the next Jackie Saunders Mutual Picture, the release date of which has been set for July 16th. It is the fourth five reeler of the series. "Sunny Jane," "The Wildcat" and "The Checkmate" have been already released and are playing to capacity business all over the country. You can book them all at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

ALL EXHIBITORS HAVE UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITIES WITH "HEROIC FRANCE

Unusual indeed is the opportunity offered exhibitors of the country now to pack their theatres with patriotic film attractions. Of all the subjects that could be selected probably none has a more vital appeal right at the present time that "Heroic France," the big eight-reel feature attraction now available at all Mutual Exchanges. This remarkable feature was photographed at the actual front in France. It is real warfare depicted in all its grim reality. Every man, woman and child will find it interesting because it shows them the kind of fighting our own troops will soon be experiencing. Merl La Voy, the intrepid cameraman who took "Heroic France," was able to secure scenes that have never before been possible. The city of Verdun was actually under bombardment by the Germans when it was photographed. Shells were exploding all about his camera as he exposed hundreds of feet of negative. Close-up views of generals, kings, and other notables are frequent. There are some wonderful views of the famous American aviator—Raoul Lufberry, whose name appears in the dispatches every few days. You can actually show your patrons this man, of whom they have read so much, in action on your screen. Parts of the film were taken from an airplane and you can thrill your patrons as never before by giving them bird's-eye views of the struggling hosts. "Heroic France" is a box-office attraction second to none. Some idea of its drawing power can be obtained when it is recalled that it ran for weeks and weeks at the Strand and Bandbox Theatres in Chicago at advanced admission prices. Bookings may be made now at Mutual Exchanges.

"THE UPPER CRUST" IS THIRD OFFERING OF GAIL KANE SERIES

GAIL KANE, graceful and accomplished actress, is the featured star in the Mutual Picture released the week of June 25th "The Upper Crust" is its title. It is in five acts. Rollin Sturgeon directed it. It was produced at the American studios in Santa Barbara, California.

Adapted From Novel.

"The Upper Crust" is an adaptation of Charles Sherman's novel, "The Indiscretions of Molly," which has been read by hundreds of thousands. Miss Kane is cast in the role of Molly O'Toole, a bewitchingly pretty village girl, who meets with reverses and seeks employment in the city. She obtains a situation as caretaker of a wealthy home, the mistress of which has gone to Honolulu for a long sojourn. Molly becomes so infatuated with the surroundings of wealth that she feels certain she can never be satisfied to resume her normal station in life. She is mistaken for the mistress of the splendid mansion and just to see how it feels to be wealthy, honored and respected, she allows the mistaken impression to last and poses as the real mistress of the house. In due time she sees an opportunity to perpetuate her position by marrying a wealthy neighbor, though her heart tells her that she does not love him. In the meanwhile the son of the real mistress, disguised as a chauffeur, seeks employment from Molly, and the latter, never suspecting his real identity, condescends to put him to work. As the weeks pass Molly finds her "ideal man" in the chauffeur, but cannot believe happiness lies there for her, since he is but an humble mechanic. The battle between love and riches goes on—and then one day Molly chooses love and happiness instead of wealth, only to discover that she has after all chosen riches as well, for the chauffeur reveals himself in his true identity.

Released the Week of June 25th.

The week of June 25th is set as the release date for "The Upper Crust." Exhibitors can make reservations now at any Mutual Exchange for both this feature and the two other Kane releases—"Whose Wife?" and "The Serpent's Tooth," both of which are now playing to capacity business everywhere.

Marie Van Vorst Story For Marjorie Rambeau

TRIANGLE

An Army of Triangle Players

There's an army of Triangle Players. Every man and woman—and child in it is recruited because of definite, pronounced ability. To suit the wide range of characters required, there is not one, but the pick of a hundred for each. All types are represented—big manly heroes, beautiful dainty heroines, old men and women, dancers, comedians, villains.

That is why Triangle plays are so true to life. That's why they hold and thrill an audience. The players fit their parts and the parts fit the players. There is always the man or the woman who can actually become the character assumed, and live it for the time. It takes earnest study, conscientious effort and a keen knowledge of human nature to pick players for

Apply the "Egg Test" To Goldwyn

ANY housekeeper has a hard time detecting doubtful eggs merely by looking at them. But when she holds them up against candle or gas-light, she knows in an instant whether they are good or bad.

Goldwyn's application of this method to the film business is that exhibitors can see our pictures in advance of booking.

We invite you to test the power of the Goldwyn productions under an honest system of open bookings.

We have spent a fortune and taken ten months' time in which to produce a powerful and artistic new type of motion picture and we are ready to sell them honestly.

Again we say to exhibitors: You will not have to book a series of pictures of any one Goldwyn star to obtain the one particular picture of that star you desire for your audiences.

"BOOK IT," ADVISE THE CRITICS

"Essanay said to see 'The Night Workers' was to book it, and so would we say to the exhibitors. We liked it and are assured the public will also like it, for its exposition has been carefully handled and threaded with themes of love, temptation, sorrow and a final triumph. A balanced and appreciable offering."—Motion Picture News.

"A realistic presentation of newspaper life, where night is turned into day." —Moving Picture World.

" 'The Night Workers' naturally attracts much attention. With proper publicity it should draw big crowds to any house."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"Has as one of its merits the introduction of REAL newspaper atmosphere. Will rate high from exhibitors' and fans' standpoint."—New York Telegraph.

"The idea is a good one and the picture should be a box office attraction. It offers excellent opportunities for special advertising."—Motography.

"It will immediately attract audiences and arouse their interest. . . . Will appeal to all classes. It is unusual and different from the average film." —Exhibitors' Herald.

WHAT THEY SAY!

The Dramatic Mirror: "J. Storer Clouston is an author with a keen sense of humor and a facility for developing intricate plots. This screen version of 'The Mystery of No. 47' is entertainingly ludicrous, affording Ralph Herz opportunity for good comedy work. He is supported by a strong cast. This is a feature that exhibitors can promise will entertain by reason of its speedy action and amusing complications. The running down of clues, mistaken identities, and examples of the fine art of prevarication make up a picture that will keep an audience entertained and interested from the first reel to the last."

The Motion Picture News: " 'The Mystery of No. 47' is a series of surprises from opening to finish, sustaining a thread of hilarious and constantly changing comedy that is quite funny. A good story has been given an excellent presentation in pictures and we welcome it as a relief from the usual triangle of domestic unhappiness."

The Exhibitor's Herald: " 'The Mystery of No. 47' is a good picture. The support is sufficient and the settings in keeping. The photography is clear. Patrons will find much mirth in some of the peculiar predicaments in which Mr. Molyneux finds himself."

ATTENTION, EXHIBITORS!

"The Mystery of No. 47" is a comedy-drama, praised by the reviewers and coming as a relief to movie patrons who are tired of "gripping drama."

Facts and Comments

SPEAKING of grave subjects, it is worth recalling that one of the wittiest of Shakespeare's clowns was a grave digger. He it was who delivered himself of the wise remark, "Your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating." When accused of a careless handling of the truth he defended himself with the retort: "'Tis a quick lie, sir, 'twill away again, from me to you." This all indicates that grave diggers once were witty, even if moving picture reviewers are cautioned in a certain publication not to cultivate so undesirable a gift. It is no easy matter to set aside certain natural laws, however, and who can say how many screen scribes are descended from some facetious grave digger, the spirit of their jolly old ancestor being strong within them?

By the way, is it possible that this "grave and reverend" giver of brotherly advice never heard the story of the reviewer who was born without a sense of humor? It seems that the gentleman, who, too, was "grave and reverend," was wont to find relaxation from his duties by attending the matinee performances at a downtown burlesque theater. One day a friend observed him entering the building. "Ah," said he, "deserting the moving pictures for the living, eh?" "Not at all!" replied the reviewer, trying to maintain his dignity, "My object is purely scientific!" "Quite so!" laughed his friend, "you are going in to study the third dimension!"

LET GEORGE DO IT! Whether it is from natural inertia, sheer laziness, lack of proper appreciation or any other of a hundred and one excuses we do not know, but the tendency on the part of everyone of us to let the other fellow do the necessary thing amounts to a national calamity. We say calamity advisedly because it really amounts to that. Perhaps a Zeppelin over New York, Chicago, Boston or San Francisco and the killing and maiming of a few hundred women and children would have wakened us more promptly to the necessity of supporting the issue of Liberty Bonds. Perhaps a Federal Censorship bill or a Federal Tax bill that would put fifty or seventy-five per cent. of our picture theaters out of business might wake up the individual exhibitors to the necessity for organization. Perhaps a pernicious state bill, nearly killed but brought back to life in a day or two by persistent work on the part of its advocates, will convince the moving picture interests that we have an ever present antagonistic influence to fight. Perhaps some day we will individually jump in to do the necessary things ahead of the other fellow—perhaps.

'TIS a farce, a comedy, a joke, a tragedy and several kinds of an insult to see the Exhibitors' League organization made the tail to any one man's kite. There may have been some excuse last year for the action of those exhibitors who were active in electing the present incumbent to the league presidency. Some of them may have expected that they had found the best man at the time, even if none of them knew that they were playing into the hands of those that had other fish to fry than looking out for the interests of the exhibitor. It certainly will be up to all exhibitors and those who claim to be friends of the exhibitors of the country to explain their attitude if the same mistake is made this year. Will it be a case of he wins who has the greatest number of pawns on the chessboard? Are you only a pawn?

WE are slow to learn this lesson of the community of interests, this necessity for standing together. We may realize something of the idea as a nation, but individually we have been developing the self-reliant attitude to such a degree that it is hard for us to co-operate or work together. That is why we fail to realize that a vile and vicious film is a menace and positively harmful to the whole industry and fail to take concerted action against such films. That is why we have so many separate camps in the same industry all pulling against each other. Did you ever sit down and figure out this side of the question? It's interesting.

THEATER managers should look out for the fellow who tries to convince them that a film dealing with questionable morality will pack their theater, because it has a "Punch." Think about tomorrow, after you have disgusted a large number in your audience. You are the ones that will suffer, not the film salesman. Think it over and say NO ev[illegible] time.

Humanity's Story by Humanity

By Louis Reeves Harrison

NOW let us sit down and think it over—
At least those of us still able to reason
Outside of "How much and when do I get it?"
What is the idea of moving pictures?
Why have they come? What are they here for?
We know that they scattered a golden shower
On fortunate heads of the unsuspecting,
Wise and unwise who were first to use them.
They were simply exhibited as a novelty,
No one grasping their true significance.
In the course of time they became classified
As a cheap and vulgar entertainment.
Mildly amusing when not ridiculous,
They first saw light in tomb-like structures,
Dark, uncomfortable and ill-ventilated,
With wretched music and wobbly projection.
Except as a new phase of photography,
Art was scant in their production.
Still, common people went by millions
Just to read the pictured story,
Fascinated by the presentation
Because it was personal and so intelligible,
The story of humanity by itself,
Without recourse to print or utterance.
Now was it not a stupid conception
That there could be no art in this medium
Because of early crude examples
Poorly exhibited and for a nickel?
Yet such was the idea entertained
By those noble exponents of the art
Of printing, the daily newspapers,
Those leaders of in human advancement
When it does not interfere with advertising.
They were ably seconded by periodicals
Which utilize the human story
To lead from glowing introduction
In the illustrated first columns
Back to a bewildering maze of pages
Setting forth the wondrous virtures
Of collars, tires and floor enamel,
Candies, clothes and kitchen ranges,
Where creative genius becomes the adjunct
Of premium-ham and tooth-paste publicity.
From these pure exemplary sources
Of modern literary achievement
Came the "Ha-Hah" that resounded
Throughout the realms of authorship.
Every fault and every little failing
Of an art in its early stage of struggle
Became the object of scoffing travesty.
This new-born art of scant vocabulary
Contemptuously designated as "the movies"
Has been almost as much discredited
As Darwin's theory of evolution.
Both the butt of dull-brained malice
Of boob burlesque and wit vaudvillian
And still they grow in recognition
Wherever there is thought unfettered,
Wherever governments have grown liberal
Through the intelligence of their people.
It is wholesome for us to remember
That light must ultimately penetrate
All classes when we find a popular
Medium and make good use of it.
The "movie" appeals to common people.
So much the better. They most need it.
They do not have to strain their cerebrums
Deciphering a mass of printed verbiage,
In order to satisfy their longings
For the human story in all its diversity.
Nature's grandeur cannot be pictured
In the most ornate of printed characters,
Nor can the loveliness of woman
Be more than faintly indicated
By any skilled use of the vernacular.
Oh, what a difference in visualization.
There she is found in all her sweetness,
Our sourness, as the case may be,
And it may be both on the same occasion,
As variable as her sex is adorable.
Then there is man in all his majesty
Of cowboy fringes or evening swallowtail
Almost anything but what he should be,
And glad of it, the half monkey
And half tiger Voltaire said he was.
Here is expressed in human medium
An observation of the human creature,
Together with all the complications
Of character as revealed by conduct.
That it was poorly done must be admitted.
Chisels have been unskillfully handled
A thousand times in the art of sculpture.
How few paintings attain greatness!
That Sahara of intellectual aridity
Known to book publishers as friction—
Where is the great American novel?
Not one per cent. of all that's printed
Survives a bawling, mewling infancy.
Yet authors have the lore of centuries
To guide them and give that flavor
Literary which is deemed desirable
In providing a pleasurable entertainment.
From Mark Twain back to Ars Poetica
There is literary counsel of great value.
Here the author, skilled as few are
In human analysis and observation,
Must depend upon his native equipment.
But he will find a most expressive medium
For the clear transfer of his material
And no longer by the current formula
His mind abhors. It is a new one,
More illuminating and more implicit,
An entirely new art unconventional
For the bright new worlds of his imagining,
For the old ones which he may focalize.
No longer need he spend his forces
Searching for some unusual dictum—
Visualization has its own clarity.
He who runs may read the pictures.
One may address the highest learning,
Critical judgment and taste cultivated
By going far beyond the scenario
Into counsel on the treatment,
At this stage all-too-arbitrary
And all-too-often mutilation.
There is to be a harmony of relation
Among all the factors of production,
Aiming at superior achievement.
Out of this unity of effort
Are bound to rise some monumental
Works of imaginative beauty
For our delight and stimulation,
Humanity's story by humanity.

The Cause—the Picture—the Hour

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson

NOT now sufficient that it is the fifth industry of the nation, the moving picture is also part of another fivefold combination, the full nature of which is of the most supreme and worldwide importance. For the first time in history the mind of the whole world is concentrated upon one theme and purpose, in the consideration of which there are not many ideas or factions to contend with, but simply two extremes, between which swings the pendulum of fate. Shall the world be free and governed by right or shall the world be bound by an authority and ruled by might? In the solving of that problem the moving picture may have its fifth share of a part to fill. As is the whole so must be the part, whatever molds the world must have its effect upon the nation, and no nation will be more affected or seek to affect other nations than the United States of America.

Knowledge is power according to those who speak from the ages of experience. Therefore the dissemination of knowledge is the greatest thing before the world today and the greatest cause in which all peoples can be engaged is that of spreading by the best, quickest and most thorough means that most widespread and useful knowledge which shall react in the enlightenment of all. Ignorance is the blight of humanity, the curse of mankind, the cause of war. Overeducation in one theme produces a monstrosity, a monster of egotism, ultimately a tyrant, a provoker of war; therefore either extreme is dangerous.

The Cause—Liberty and Freedom With the Rules of Right.

The majority of the peoples of the earth are today fighting for this cause. No person, party or instrumentality can be dedicated to a nobler purpose, no ambition can be higher, no service greater. This is the opportunity for the best powers of the moving pictures, now they can show their greatness, their efficiency, their capabilities and their thoroughness. The whole of the United States will become one vast lecture platform, a great school, a vast workshop. Thus there will be need for the greatest illustrator of the ages, who can tell but that the pictures have "come to the kingdom for such a time as this." This is the hour which strikes for the pictures in all the country.

Three great agencies are springing forth which must of necessity occupy the universal mind of the entire States, the production of food, the raising of money, the work of the Red Cross. These three powers are those which are used to fight the battles by those who do not enter into the actual conflict now called "in the trenches," but they are of equal importance. Indeed, often are they of first importance. The education of the population in all the numerous countries is by means of a widespread propaganda. In days gone by this meant speech spoken and written. Today it means speech illustrated, and illustrated to make speech a thousandfold more powerful. This thousandfold increase is the work of the moving picture.

The greatest work to be done in the countries where the conflict is not raging is to "wake up" the people. One of the astonishing things about the present disturbance lies in the fact that away from the actual conditions people have failed to realize the true situation. This was conspicuously so in England until among other things the moving pictures did their part to arouse the people to the state of things. In the United States the same conditions prevail, yet to perhaps a larger extent. Here the people refused to be drawn into the turmoil, but they are in it in spite of themselves; still many are willfully blind and deaf to the truth which surrounds them. This is the hour for the moving pictures. The writer, who is in the center of this work, has proved that where the pictures have taken the lead a great awakening has resulted.

The Hour to Use Patriotic Pictures.

Every exhibitor likes to know that his pictures are reaching the people. Applause is the best music to his ears. Under some circumstances he must prefer it to a surplus of dollars and cents. Now is the time for him to be of some service to his country, to be a source of opportunity to his people, and to exalt the powers of the pictures as the greatest agency of its kind. One of the most important works now engaging all classes of the American people is that of the Red Cross. A membership of several millions is sought for immediately, and the Red Cross authorities are themselves using and depending upon others to use the pictures for this noble work—the noblest work in which civilians have ever yet been engaged. Every town large enough to have a moving picture place will very shortly become affiliated with the Red Cross work and they will need the moving pictures—first to present the work, and second to enable them to spread it and to make it a source of bringing in funds. A little timely advice drawn from experience if given here will help many exhibitors to escape making mistakes into which many have fallen.

Do not be sensational. Patriotism is in itself an all consuming enthusiasm. Do not therefore exhibit horrible war scenes, a morbid taste becomes repugnant, and the door is open to criticism and the very opposite to the purpose sought is the result. It is confidently hoped that properly used the pictures will take the place of hundreds of speakers and so liberate these men for other work. Pictures of American history will now be a constant success, pictures of a martial nature are in demand, the Topical pictures recording the progress of events bring crowds without advertising. As a sample the pictures showing the English and French commissions—especially with the immortal Joffre—have filled houses everywhere.

These are mentioned as samples of the scores of possibilities and have been proved successful in the neighborhood of New York beyond measure. In times gone by exhibitors have met the complaint against certain pictures that "they were what people wanted." If the same spirit is abroad among the exhibitors at the observance of "what people want" they will instantly fill their houses and do a lot of good. Never before did people want a certain class of picture, never before was there such a demand for a certain class of picture, and that picture is one which will arouse all the slumbering enthusiasm waiting to be called into activity by a process of which only the moving picture is especially capable. America is willing and waiting to be "woke up," she loves to be "up and doing," Americans love their country, they love their country's songs of which in the world there are no finer; she loves her history and will never tire of seeing representations thereof; she loves to see the stars and stripes, she loves to "hear the eagle call," she loves to see her soldiers past and present, she worships patriotism, and in patriotism's name do noble deeds; she is proud at being called upon to feed Europe and aid distressed nations. Wake up, exhibitor, give America all these things and she will praise you, and you will have given her the opportunity of her glorious existence. The world, this nation and freedom's cause will bless the moving picture's part in history.

Souls Repaired While You Wait

By Edward Weitzel.

ONE of the curious phases of human perversity is its objection to having its soul repaired or fortified by gazing upon a number of fictitious persons busily and offensively engaged in fracturing certain moral laws that are seldom discussed in polite society. Despite the solemn assurance of those philanthropic beings whose business it is to manufacture this class of picture that an object lesson alone brings results, there still exists benighted but intelligent, refined, educated and liberal-minded patrons of the screen who refuse to strengthen their soul against possible contamination by witnessing scenes of total depravity in a theater devoted to the art of the silent drama.

In the little theaters of Paris which specialize in this brand of drama and offer it solely as entertainment no claim is made for its ethical qualities and the patrons are of an age and a familiarity with the experiences shown that preclude any severe mental or moral shock. So, also, when the Princess Theater in New York sheltered that fetid bit of realism "Any Night" the known policy of the theater and the prices of admission restricted the spectators to a mature class in every sense of the world. The moving picture has no such special retreats for its morbid and unwholesome products. And the family theater is not the proper place to exhibit such subjects, even after granting the maker's contention that the contemplation of his works is good for the soul, be it innocent or guilty As a consequence, the Moving Picture World is still adhering to its policy of not admitting to its advertising columns the announcements of photoplays of a deleterious nature, although it is difficult to determine just where to draw the line in some cases. The moral lesson may be so timely and so clearly emphasized that, if shown to a restricted body of spectators, it more than offsets the strong odor of the subject matter.

A picture is now being widely advertised in several trade journals for general distribution that offers in extenuation of the preponderance of grossness in its plot the plea that it will serve as a warning to those misguided reformers who are against the segregation of immoral women. The title of the photoplay is one that would not suggest to the average clean or immature mind the character of the story. Among other choice bits of incident is the attempt of a young man to win the favor of the woman who is his father's mistress and who is carrying on a secret liaison with the young man's prospective brother-in-law. Not wishing to have either of her admirers embarrassed by the presence of the other, the woman sends for an innocent young girl who supposes her to be a respectable woman. The son objects at first to leaving his father's mistress, but finally consents to console himself with the new arrival. He goes into the next room and finds the girl he had hoped to debauch is his own sister. His father reaches the house at this moment, discovers that his mistress is not above suspicion, and tries to kill her. The bullet lodges in the breast of his daughter.

Having conjured up this miasma of immorality and proved, to his own satisfaction, the potency of his propaganda and the purity of his intent, the author refrains from piling a new horror upon his already imposing but malodorous accumulation and condescends to effect the moral regeneration of his three cavaliers of the loose life. Surely, no well-wisher of the screen will claim that patrons of the family moving picture theater, regardless of sex, youth, innocence of mind or refinement of feeling, should be given the opportunity of beholding this picture—of receiving the influence of this class of moral uplift?

It Is to Laugh

LOOKING forward and backward is a great stunt at times, that is if one does not go too far back. Digging up what has been buried for six or eight years might indicate either a delight in an ill-smelling, gruesome occupation or it might indicate a paucity of ideas on the part of a self styled editor. In planning for the future it is safest not to dig too deeply into the past. Let the dead past bury its dead.

Then again we all have to come to it sooner or later, sometimes sooner, so it would seem wise not to sneer too heartily at graveyards, sepulchres, morgues, dead ones and things of the near future, that is unless one is really hard up for editorial themes or even more hard up for an excuse to write something around a pet aversion or something of that sort.

Again a good trick of the trade is to claim all future developments by a sort of advance blanket mortgage or a sort of follow-my-lead I-know-it-all attitude. That's an especially good stunt in boosting one's own stock among those who don't know, and the "wise ones" are greatly in the minority, you know.

It is a questionable plan, however, to drop only a few inside secrets because that sets folks to figuring out those that are left untold. For instance, when we are told that both undertakers and sycophants have been rigidly excluded from a certain reviewing staff and recall that one was made a subscription solicitor, we are naturally curious to learn what disposition was made of the others. We, too, are planning changes and improvements along every line, but have a few suggestions for editorial subjects that we can spare and submit the following:

"Saucy Synonyms," by A Subscription Solicitor.

"My Pet Aversion," by O. H. I. Hatehoff.

"Bull & Bunkum," by Doubleyoo Sum Bunk.

"Looping the Copyright Loopholes or, Within the Law," by One Who Knows.

"Stone Throwing," by A. Glasshouse.

"Dollar Subscriptions," by Come Across.

"Exhibitor Exhibits," by A. Hasbeen.

Association Adds to Membership

New Record of Increase Established for June—Thirty-five Producing Concerns Now on Books.

THE month of June will establish new membership records for the National Association of the motion picture industry, if applications continue to be received at the headquarters in the Times building, at the rate they were filed up to Friday the 15th inst.

The companies which have joined the National Association since June 1 are as follows: Triangle Distributing Company, to be represented by S. A. Lynch; Metro Pictures Corporation, as a producer member, to be represented by Joseph W. Engel, Metro having been one of the founders of the National Association as a distributor member; Louis J. Selznick Enterprises, represented by Louis J. Selznick; Astra Film Corporation, represented by L. J. Gasnier, and Balboa Amusement Producing Company, represented by H. M. Horkheimer.

Two lithographing companies were added to the supply and equipment class through the receipt of applications from the Otis Lithographing Company of Cleveland, which will be represented by George L. Cooke. These companies, together with the H. C. Miner Lithographing Company, and the Acme Lithographing Company, will form the nucleus of a poster and lithographers' division of which Walter J. Moore, vice president of the former, is chairman, with L. P. Weber of the Acme as secretary.

Upon the closing of the books, June 15, there were thirty-five producing concerns in the National Association, representing 75 per cent. of the big companies.

Ince Definitely Out of Triangle

S. A. Lynch Heads Distributing Corporation—H. O. Davis Supervises Production

FROM the bewildering maze of conflicting rumors regarding the Triangle Film Corporation and the Triangle Distributing Corporation there stand out several facts officially verified. Chief of these is that Thomas H. Ince, one of the founders of the Triangle corporation, has definitely severed connection with that organization. This information is contained both in an official statement from H. O. Davis, general managers of Triangle Film Corporation, and in a statement from Mr. Ince, which says, in part:

"Thomas H. Ince closed a deal with the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Triangle Film Corporation whereby he sold them all of his holdings in both companies, and has severed his connection with both companies. The sum involved was $750,000."

Mr. Ince's letter further states that he will soon begin the production of motion picture productions of great magnitude, featuring several of the biggest stars in the industry. An unconfirmed telegram from Los Angeles infers that two of Mr. Ince's stars will be William S. Hart and Charles Ray. This is flatly denied by Mr. Davis, who says that both Mr. Hart and Mr. Ray are under contract to the Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. Davis said that Bill Hart was tied up with Triangle on a contract that called for a yearly salary of $500,000.

It is known that Mack Sennett has been negotiating for his withdrawal from Triangle for some time, but his contract has not yet expired and it is stated that he will produce comedies under his present banner for some time to come.

With the passing of Mr. Ince, H. O. Davis assumes full control of production in both West and East. Mr. Davis will remain in the East for about a week yet, when he will go West for about two months. In outlining Triangle's future plans Mr. Davis said that prpoduction plans are so systematized at present that but little effort will be required to keep them going at even a better pace. He added that most of his time will be devoted to building up an efficient organization.

The former general manager of Universal City plans for Triangle exhibitors a service department, with the object of giving better service to the exhibitor and better pictures to the public. As explained by him, Mr. Davis in future will sell amusement service. Triangle's interest in the exhibitor will not cease when the picture reaches the exhibitor. Triangle efficiency will be at the command of every exhibitor showing its pictures, for Mr. Davis believes after an exhibitor becomes a Triangle customer he must be made to always want to be a Triangle customer. Mr. Davis hopes to handle his product much as other nationally known and nationally advertised products are handled.

S. A. Lynch, recently elected president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., has acquired 50 per cent. of the common stock of Triangle Distributing Corporation and $950,000 preferred stock and other interests hitherto owned by Superpictures, Inc., and other interests. Y. F. Freeman has been elected secretary of the corporation to succeed Frederick L. Collins, resigned, and R. W. Lynch has been elected vice-president. Fred Kent has been elected treasurer. Mr. Freeman and Mr. Lynch succeed Mr. Collins and R. W. France on the board of directors.

Mr. Collins, who is president of the McClure publications and Superpictures, issues the following statement: "We are withdrawing from Triangle with every good wish for its success. Mr. Lynch has paid us every cent of money that was coming to us and a substantial profit besides. I have great confidence in Mr. Lynch's ability to handle the Triangle Distributing Corporation's business, also in the manufacturing and general business policies of the Triangle Film Corporation under the new general manager, H. O. Davis. The best evidence of our attitude on this point is a contract we have just entered into for the manufacture by Triangle Film of six big Superpictures productions to be sold on state right basis and the distribution of twelve additional pictures per year through Triangle Distributing Corporation. Full details in regards to these forthcoming Superpictures will shortly be announced."

Alfred S. Barnard has been selected as general counsel for the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

The officers of Superpictures, Inc., are Frederick L. Collins, president; Conrad Milliken, vice president; R. W. France, secretary and treasurer.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 17 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Big Timber" at the Strand.

FOR the week of June 17 the Strand theater presented "Big Timber," in which Kathlyn Williams and Wallace Reid appeared as the stars. The film adaptation was made by Gardner Hunting from Bertrand Sinclair's story of the California lumber camp district. How big trees are felled and cut and handled is graphically shown during the action of the play. The supporting cast includes John Burton, Alfred Paget, Joe King and Helen Bray. A feature of unusual interest was some thrilling motion pictures of mountain lion roping in Montana. "No Story," O. Henry's charming tale of newspaper life, was shown in film form, with Thomas R. Mills, Stanley Walpole, Alice Rodier and Mrs. Williard interpreting the principal roles. Victor Moore is in a new farce entitled "Commuting," and the Strand Topical Review was also on the program.

Grace Homan, Max Rossowsky, Arthur Depew, and Ralph H. Brigham were the soloists.

George Beban and Charlie Chaplin at the Rialto.

George Beban in "A Roadside Impresario" and Charles Chaplin in "The Immigrant" were the two star names on the Rialto program. Mr. Beban was seen as an Italian mountebank, with a well trained bear for his companion. The plot is extremely ingenious and the star is ably supported by Harrison Ford, Fred Huntley, Julia Faye and Adele Farrington.

The new Chaplin picture shows the inimitable pantomimist in a series of ludicrous adventures in the steerage of an immigrant ship, at the detention station, and on shore.

The final installment of "The Land of the Rising Sun" another series of views taken during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and The Animated Magazine completed the picture program. Marion Rodolph, Roberto Viglioni, and Helen Jeffrey were the soloists.

"Come Through" at the Broadway

A new feature picture, "Come Through," written by George Bronson Howard and produced by the Universal, opened an engagement at the Broadway Theater last Sunday night, Herbert Rawlinson heads the cast.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-First Street Theater, the following pictures were shown Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday: Bessie Barriscale in "Bawbs o' Blue Ridge," and a one-act comedy "His Speedy Finish," were the picture features.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Enid Bennett in "The Girl Glory," and Ora Carew and Baldly Belmont in a Keystone comedy, "Oriental Love," were on the program.

SAM TRIGGER LEASES ANOTHER THEATER.

Sam H. Trigger, president of Manhattan Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has just taken a long lease on the Park Theater at Corona. This beautiful six-hundred seat house will open July 1, with Harold W. Rosenthal as manager. This makes the fourth local theater in which Mr. Trigger is interested. It is Mr. Trigger's intention to establish a chain of motion picture theaters in Greater New York, New Jersey and Long Island.

SUPERLATIVE SEEKING SCRIPTS.

Superlative pictures are in the market for six and seven-reel scenarios featuring Miss Lois Meredith and Irving Cummings. All material should be addressed "Scenario Department, Superlative Pictures Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, New York."

Crandall Denounces Daylight "Saving"

Washington Exhibitors Declared Calder Bill Seriously Threatens Income of All Motion Picture Showmen

Washington, D. C., June 14.

THERE is another great financial rock looming ahead upon which the motion picture business may be wrecked, if the members of the industry do not take heed "while the going is good," according to Harry M. Crandall, the man who is on the job twenty-four hours a day in the interest of the trade. This new calamity-producer, which follows so closely upon the heels of the war tax on theaters, is the "daylight saving" scheme that is going to work so well for its advocates, but is going to leave the "movie" men way in the rear of the business procession.

"I do not believe that one in ten among the motion picture people of the country really understand," said Mr. Crandall, "just what this daylight saving proposition is and what it is going to mean to them. I would like to have the trade papers place the whole thing before the exhibitors, educate them to what they are facing, and use their influence in defeating that which will prove so disastrous to us."

At Mr. Crandall's suggestion the Moving Picture World prints below the text of the bill introduced into the Senate by Senator Calder, of New York, and which has been reported by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce with the recommendation that it be enacted into law:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of establishing the standard time of the United States, the territory of continental United States shall be divided into five zones in the manner hereinafter provided. The Standard time of the first zone shall be based on the mean astronomical time of the seventy-fifth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; that of the second zone on the ninetieth degree; that of the third zone on the one hundred and fifth degree; that of the fourth zone on the one hundred and twentieth degree; and that of the fifth zone, which shall include only Alaska, on the one hundred and fiftieth degree. That the limits of each zone shall be defined by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, having regard for the convenience of commerce and the existing junction points and division points of common carriers engaged in commerce between the several States and with foreign nations, and such order may be modified from time to time.

Sec. 2. That within the respective zones created under the authority hereof the standard time of the zone shall govern the movement of all common carriers engaged in commerce between the several States or between a State and any of the Territories of the United States, or between a State or the Territory of Alaska and any of the insular possessions of the United States or any foreign country. In all statutes, orders, rules and regulations relating to the time of performance of any act by any officer or department of the United States, whether in the legislative, executive, or judicial branches of the Government, or relating to the time within which any rights shall accrue or determine, or within which any act shall or shall not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, it shall be understood and intended that the time shall be the United States standard time of the zone within which the act is to be performed.

Sec. 3. That at two o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in April of each year the standard time of each zone shall be advanced one hour, and at two o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in September in each year the standard time of each zone shall, by the retarding of one hour, be returned to the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing said zone, so that between the last Sunday in April at two o'clock antemeridian and the last Sunday in September at two o'clock antemeridian in each year the standard time in each zone shall be one hour in advance of the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone, respectively.

Sec. 4. That the standard time of the first zone shall be known and designated as United States standard eastern time; that of the second zone shall be known and designated as United States standard central time; that of the third zone shall be known and designated as United States standard mountain time; that of the fourth zone shall be known and designated as United States standard Pacific time; and that of the fifth zone shall be known and designated as United States standard Alaska time.

Sec. 5. That this Act take effect and be in force from and after January first, nineteen hundred and eighteen.

Sec. 6. That all Acts and parts of Acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

What It Means to the Industry.

"First off," continued Mr. Crandall, "this scheme would most seriously affect the business of our airdomes, or open-air theaters. The exhibitors out-of-doors would hardly be able to get in one show a night, especially at this time of the year when it is hardly dark enough for a show until 8:20. Start your exhibition at that time, it would be 9:20 under the new order of things, and, allowing an hour and a half to run off the reels, it would be, as we now figure time, 10:50 before the first show would be over.

"Now, it is going to hit the closed houses just the same—this has been proved in Australia and other countries where this daylight saving scheme has been put into operation. Every exhibitor knows that his first show of the evening could be pretty well dispensed with; that it is difficult to get the crowd in before the second and third exhibitions. It makes no difference at what time of day or night the people finish they will not go to the theater until it is good and dark. True, this may be a habit, but pushing the clocks backward and forward is going to be a habit changing every six months.

"Now, if we start our shows under the present method of keeping time, at 6 o'clock and run for ninety minutes, doing a very small business until the second show, starting at 7:30, we would have to start our first show at what is now 7 o'clock and run until 8:30. The last show will come out too late to be run at all and it will resolve itself into a condition whereby the exhibitor will have but one show a night in either his park or his theater.

"To my way of thinking the only people who will be benefited are the storekeepers; they will do business no matter how the clock is set. The farmer does not work according to clock time, so it cannot be put down that this is a necessary thing incident to the war that we may produce more vegetables and other edibles. We can claim that the plan is economically wrong in that it will materially hurt, possibly wreck, a big industry.

"This problem which is now confronting us—tampering with the clocks of the nation—is just as serious a matter to the moving picture business, if not more so, as the tax proposal we have had to combat at the Capitol. If the Calder bill is enacted into law we will lose 50 per cent. of our business. That is plain on the face of it. Put it up to any far-seeing exhibitor; he will tell you, after he thinks the matter over a bit, that he is going to have his business injured beyond an idea.

"I think that every exhibitor in the United States who has a friend in Congress should advise that friend how badly he is going to be hurt by this unwise piece of legislation. Show the members of the House of Representatives and the Senate that they will work an injustice upon them if they change the time. The country is in need of revenue. The Congress is going to tax our incomes, there is an excess profits tax, and many smaller taxes. How are we going to pay our share into the treasury of the United States if our business is retarded? Cut our earning capacity in half and there will be no income or excess profits upon which to levy.

"The Calder bill is now in the Senate, ready to be acted upon. Whatever is done will have to be accomplished quickly. It is very probable that Senator Calder does not realize the damage he will have done by sponsoring such a law as the one proposed. Remember when it comes 10:30 or 11 o'clock the people are going to retire just as they do now; they are not going to stay up until midnight in order to enjoy the third show which we are accustomed to have at our theaters. It is all right now when we start at, say 9 o'clock and quit at 10:30; but start it at 10 and quit at 11:30 and it is a different matter entirely."

Mr. Crandall has stated the proposition very clearly. There is need for immediate action—don't delay as the case with the war tax problem and leave the whole thing until the last minute for a few hard working men to do—Do your share now.

MISS MERSEREAU TOURING THE SOUTH.

When Violet Mersereau personally appeared at Marcus Loew's New York theaters her tour of the local circuit created so much interest and resulted in such benefit both to Manager Loew and to the Bluebird program, that she was prevailed upon to undertake a visit to the Loew theaters in the South. Wednesday, June 7, Miss Mersereau started from New York, routed for a "flying week" through territory where she is extremely popular as a screen queen.

Miss Mersereau went first to Atlanta, where she was heralded by an extensive advertising campaign in the newspapers and on the billboards. Birmingham, Ala., and other cities in the South where Mr. Loew has theaters, are billed for Miss Mersereau's appearance in conjunction with features she has created for the Bluebird program.

Very likely the Bluebird star later will tour the New England circuit of Loew theaters, in conjunction with "The Little Terror."

Richardson Among the Ranchers

He Rounds Up the Projection Possibilities of Great Falls, Butte, Missoula, Spokane, Walla Walla, Pendleton, Pocatello, Ogden and Salt Lake City

Great Falls, Montana.

TRAVELING from Calgary, Alberta, to Great Falls, Mont., isn't anything even faintly resembling a snap. You do the first 126 miles stunt in the sleeper, dead to the world and all its troubles. Then you climb out of the hay, find yourself in Lethbridge, go over and get breakfast, walk around and rubber at the fronts of its two or three theatres, and at 9:45 a. m., climb aboard the day coach of a jerkwater train, which ambles amicably southward, stopping at every road crossing along the way, until finally, at long and last, we reach the U. S. border. At Coutts, Alberta, they locked the car doors and proceeded to examine the passengers to see whether or not they were eligible to conscription, the examining officers having at their back a fearsome looking object consisting of the following: one pair of black, or very dark trousers, up the side of which ran a bright yellow stripe about 1½ inches wide; one coat the color of a very bright exit light and one I'm-a-tough-citizen hat.

Inside of this assortment was a member of the Northwest Mounted Police of Canada, a thoroughly competent body of men, notwithstanding the handicap of its uniform. Oh yes, I nearly forgot the boots and spurs, which form an integral part of the tout ensemble. Three or four men in my car decided to remain in Canada—at the request of the officer. After inspection, the train pulls over to Sweetgrass, Montana, about three hundred yards away, crossing the line half way between the two stations. I didn't hear the car wheels bump over the line, but anyway we were again in the U. S. A., in position to make faces at and softly wriggle our fingers in the direction of the aforesaid described uniform and its contents. Arriving at Sweetgrass the U. S. custom officer gives you the once over, pokes his fingers down into the bowels of your luggage, affixes a chalk mark thereto, and you board another deepseagoing day coach, prepared to endure a further 100 miles of tank line traveling. That is to say, you do this if the train on which comes up from Great Falls, looks around, evidently doesn't like the scenery, and goes right back again—is on time. But on that particular day it was one hour late, to which inspection added almost another hour, which gave one almost three mortal hours in the village of Sweetgrass, which same would have more or less trouble in winning first prize in a beauty contest of cities. So that a good-natured custom officer snaps me while holding up the boundary line post, with one foot in Canada and the other in the U. S. A., using my own camera, of course, after which I adjourned to the Sweetgrass Delmonico, poked my face full of food and then climbed up the main street, discovered a moving picture show, snapped it and they slid back down to the station.

Operators who kick about the size, or lack of it, in their operating rooms, will do well to examine the Sweetgrass Variety. It is in plain view, immediately over the foyer hall, which we see. We peered in through an open place in the window screen and glimpsed a muslin sheet hanging limply down, ragged at its edges, lonesome and alone near the rear end of the room. With just a little labor, and even less expense, this uninviting outfit could be transformed into a really passable little theatre of the storeroom type. The "operating room" appeared to be about four feet square.

Just what they had in the way of a projector I don't know, but it probably was a rather small coffee mill, or maybe a good-sized pencil sharpener. I believe this outfit, as a whole, is just about the very worst I ever saw. Admission to this Temple of Pleasure, according to the legend scrawled on cardboard over the "box office" window, is 25 cents per adult. Well, at last the train grunted into town, wheezed through the necessary preliminaries and squeaked out again and at last, some hours later, we rolled across the Missouri River into Great Falls, Montana, to find Brother L. W. Dunbar, secretary of Local Union 231; L. V. Johnson, manager Alcazar Theater, and A. V. Johnson waiting with their choo-choo buggy and six hands of welcome.

It was too late to inspect any theatres, but at 11:30 we were escorted to the Gem Theatre, and proceeded to inoculate the 100 per cent attendance of Great Falls managers and operators with the bug of "better projection." After which the audience adjourned to the Gerald Cafe, gathered around a really beautiful banquet table, and proceeded to add to the high cost of living. Don't gather the idea that Great Falls operators subsist off flowers and ferns. The photograph was taken after the assembled multitude had massacred the goodies. It was not my privilege to visit and examine any Great Falls Theatres, therefore I cannot say just what the conditions are. I am very much inclined, however, to believe that Great Falls operators are just a little too much self-satisfied.

The men are getting really good money, the scale being $35 a week, with 75 cents an hour overtime. This being the fact, gentlemen, it strikes me it is up to you very thoroughly to post yourself on the technical end of your profession. Remember, my brothers, that man does not live who cannot learn, and, as I pointed out to you that night, the projection of a photoplay costing an immense sum of money, containing the art of high class artists, is in itself grave responsibility. I may be entirely mistaken, however, in believing that the Great Falls men do not realize this quite as well as they might. That being merely the impression I gathered in conversation. The fact should be carefully borne in mind that good pay calls for high class work, and that no man can by any possibility handle either intelligently or efficiently anything he does not thoroughly understand.

Butte, Montana.

Butte, Mont., is a mining metropolis of the west. Its mines and smelters have long been famous; its copper properties are still yielding untold millions to their owners. I had decided to eliminate Helena, which had been given one day in the itinerary, because I found that, while it was the capital city of Montana, it was quite small and had only three or four shows; also I had had no reply to letters sent the Helena union, and I needed the day, and needed it sadly for the purpose of rest.

The Great Northern train was, as is the habit of Great Northern trains on that particular jerk-water branch line, two hours late, so that I rolled into the city of Butte at 12 o'clock midnight, unheralded and unannounced. The union was expecting me at 4:40 the next afternoon, and was fully prepared, with a reception committee and rubber tired conveyance, to usher us into the city with due ceremony. When ararnging for the trip I had failed to get into communication with the Butte Union, due, I afterward learned, to the fact that my letters did not reach its secretary. I then wrote Mr. Levy, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, Butte, who replied promptly, saying that he and his associates would be glad to have me stop in Butte and deliver a lecture on practical projection.

Just how Mr. Levy is able to square his conscience with his invitation and his subsequent action is a matter for him to determine. A few days before my arrival, however, I sent a special delivery letter to the Butte Union, which was properly delivered, whereupon the Union, finding it had not been ignored in the matter, got busy and made the necessary arrangements for the lecture, which was duly delivered in the T. M. A. rooms, at 12 o'clock midnight, before a practically 100 per cent gathering of operators, plus a thin sprinkling of the really enterprising managers of the city; also one exhibitor, H. H. Holder, manager Pastime Theater, Joliet, Montana, who traveled 250 miles in order to be present.

Mr. Holder may be and is a small town exhibitor, but I would commend his energy and enterprise to some Butte managers who are handling large properties. One Butte manager, I am told, expressed doubt as to the possibility of a lecture on practical projection being of any benefit to the city. "We are satisfied," said this exhibitor, "with projection in Butte. Why then listen to Richardson?" Let us for a moment examine the conditions with which friend manager is so well satisfied. Methinks it will be interesting; also it may prove to be decidedly instructive.

In the American theater, a large, modern house, I found operating room conditions which were little short of outrageous. This room, which is none too large in size, had, through what was, I am told, a rank blunder on the part of the architect, been placed directly behind a big steel girder running crosswise of the building. It has been necessary to cut the operating room ports, through the webb of this girder, and it would not, of course, be advisable to weaken the girder any more than was absolutely necessary. That was the excuse I was given for the wretched condition I found. It is no excuse at all, however, because it would have been quite possible, either by acetylene welding, or by means of a sub-trus, to reinforce the girder to compensate for any reasonable amount of webb weakening. In all human probability the reason this was done would be found in the fact that to do it would cost money.

The present condition is as follows: The observation port is very small—totally inadequate, in size—to serve the purpose for which it is intended. Nor is that all, for it is located so low that the operator must almost get on his hands and knees to see his picture at all. When I entered the room the operator was stooped over, with his face jammed up against the observation port (?) in an attempt to see what was taking place on the screen. And this was not all the sin in connection with this particular I-am-satisfied-with-it installation. In addition to the utterly inadequate observation port, the room was of none too generous proportions (though not objectionably small); also its walls were very light in color, and over each projector blazed a big incandescent light. Imagine trying to project a seventy-five thousand dollar photoplay under such utterly wretched conditions as this? Do you think it is fair to the motion picture industry? Do you think it is fair to the artist, who all are entirely at the mercy of this absurd projection installation? Well if you do, I don't. And there is no earthly excuse for it, because it would be entirely possible and practical to place the operating room of the American Theater on the ground floor, where it ought to be, or in other far more advantageous location. But, shrieks the manager, "to do that we would be compelled to sacrifice seats." Yes, kind sir, you certainly would; also you would secure a sufficiently improved result on the screen to fill a lot of those seats at times when they now remain vacant.

The money you would lose when the house is full would be far more compensated for by the added revenue at times when the house is not full. And yet in the face of such condition as this the manager in question was "satisfied with projection conditions in Butte." The rights of the film exchange too, are entirely ignored by this type of manager, who doesn't care two whoops how much damage he does to the films, so long as it be not sufficiently evident that the exchange inspector will find it and make him pay for it. To this type of manager the rights of the audience is in the nature of a joke. He is only and mainly interested in getting them into his theater, and literally kicking them out again. Methinks I can hear the gasp at that last sentence, but isn't it absolutely true? Isn't that precisely what the manager does, or tries to do when he, for instance, overspeeds the films when the house is full, and people are waiting outside to get in? In addition to all this the auditorium lighting of the American is very bad indeed from the projection point of view.

In the Liberty theater, I also found a bad condition, and one which is utterly inexcusable. The operating room is large enough; also the ports of ample dimension, but they are located too low, so that the operator must, in order to see his picture, stoop away over. Great Heavens, Mr. Manager, cannot you understand the childishly simple proposition that if you make it inconvenient for your operator to watch his picture he isn't going to watch it as he ought, under which conditions it naturally follows that the result on your screen is going to suffer. The walls of this room were very light in color, which further hampers the work of the operator, and causes him unnecessary eyestrain. Many operators claim that working in a dark room hurts their eyes. This is true if they work unintelligently. If you are going to work in a dark room, as it is absolutely essential to the best work on the screen, it is up to you to so protect the spot that glare will never reach your eyes. If you don't do that, certainly a dark room is harder on the eyes than a light room. If you do do it, then the opposite is true.

The Rialto theater has its operating room on the ground floor, where it ought to be. I only glanecd into this room, but, as I remembered, its walls were black and it apparently had a very complete, up-to-date equipment. Apparently this was one theater with which Mr. Manager was justified in being satisfied, at least in so far as the operating room equipment and conditions be concerned. But this does not prove that the projection is being accomplished efficiently. It is entirely possible that the result on the screen of the Rialto is costing twice what it ought to cost. Mind you, I don't know that that is true, but the chances are ten to one that the Rialto projection is not as efficient in money cost as it ought to be, though I believe the chief operator of this theater is one of the best in the city.

Butte operators have a scale of six dollars a day, or $42 a week, which calls for real efficiency in service. When managers are paying $42 a week, plus overtime, they have an absolute right to expect, and to demand real efficiency in their operating room. It is their right to expect, and to receive high class work, yet I found Butte operators to be decidedly lacking in the matter of technical knowledge in projection. I am sorry indeed to have to say this, but the truth is the truth, and Butte operators have no one to blame but themselves. They are well paid men, and, as such, owe a distinct duty, not only to their managers, but to the moving picture industry. We may tolerate and even condone a considerable deficiency in technical knowledge on the part of the low paid operators but we do expect it off forty-two-dollar-a-week men.

Now please don't get me wrong in this matter. The Butte men will compare favorably, I believe, with any other body of operators, but that is not the point. Receiving, as they do, a very much higher remuneration than the average, they ought to be very much above the average in knowledge and efficiency. Cost of living is high in Butte, but only slightly higher, all things considered, than in New York City. The Butte scale is equal to about $35 dollars in New York City, or maybe $37.

Missoula, Montana.

At Missoula Brother Louis Jacky met me at the station. Brother Jacky is operator at the Empress Theater, and it was largely to his enterprise in wiring me at Great Falls that I addressed the men of Missoula. Missoula is a beautiful little city, lying at the base of giant mountains, by the side of the Missouri River, where, I am told, in ordinary times is less than 100 yards wide, though at the time of my visit it was in flood, and very considerably more than that. There are only five theaters in Missoula, four of which are owned by the Missoula Amusement Company, Gilbert J. Heyfron, general manager. During the afternoon I rested, and visited the Isis and Empress Theaters, performing the latter function in a downpour of rain.

Louis Jacky.

The Isis Theater has an absurdly small operating room, made of steel. It might have got by, after a fashion, in the days when we used the old style projector, but with two modern machines it is utterly and entirely inadequate; moreover, its ports are too small. The only redeeming feature is that its walls are black. The Empress Theater has a fair operating room, but the ports thereof are very, very poor. Due to a beam in the ceiling it is impossible for the operator to see his entire picture. I would heartily recommend to the Missoula Amusement Company that it immediately enlarge the operating room of the Isis and change the location of the one in the Empress.

Such Missoula equipment as I saw was very good, and I am told that that is the prevailing condition. One operator, Joe Allen, of the Alcazar, when approached and requested to be present at the lecture, said: "Richardson? Who is he?" And when it had been carefully explained to this enterprising individual he decided that it wouldn't be worth his while to listen to a lecture on projection, and anyhow he didn't believe he would be in the business very long, as it contained no chance for advancement. For his benefit I might remark that the operator who studies his business and perfects himself in the art of projection has all kinds of chance for advancement up to $50 a week at the present time, and probably as much as $75 in the future.

Be that as it may, however, I would call friend Allen's pointed attention to the fact that, while he is handling a projection machine the productions he is projecting are at his mercy; also about $1,000 worth of equipment, together with from $600 to $1,000 worth of films, are at his mercy. And that ought to be some reason why he should either study his business or quit right now. I don't know it to be the fact, but would like to wager a few dollars on the proposition that I could run his machine at 125, if not 150, and maybe even 175 revolutions of the crank per minute without a sign of overshoot.

In closing the account of Missoula I wish to pay a tribute to the enterprise and progressiveness of Louis Jacky, operator at Empress theater, by whose action the lecture was secured for Missoula. I also want to compliment Gilbert Heyfron, general manager. He attended the lecture, got all his managers there, as well as his operators, and afterward said: "I have had my eyes opened to many things to-night." I openly criticised the two installations named, which are owned by the Missoula Amusement Company, and he was broadminded enough to accept the criticism, admit its justness, and will, I think, so far as possible, make that which is wrong right.

In the gloom of a raw, windy day, Brother Jacky accompanied me to the station and remained until the train pulled out. Friend Jacky is one of those operators to whom "asleep at the switch" most emphatically does not apply.

Spokane, Washington.

And right here we received a disappointment. One may travel by the Northern Pacific Railway to Spokane, my next stop, either via the main line or by way of Coeur d'Alene. Now the Coeur d'Alene country was something I had long desired to see. The Coeur d'Alene gold fields were discovered in the winter of 1883, when I was firing an engine on the Oregon Short Line Railway, and the wild excitement and attendant insane rush was a thing which still lingers in memory. Moreover, my old friend, Dave Coates, was, the last I knew of him, in Wallace, and I wanted for old time's sake, to meet him. Therefore, although it would take one day longer, I had planned to go to Spokane by the Coeur d'Alene route. But alas for prearranged plans (this is the first time I have got knocked out at any point of my schedule since I left New York—put that in your pipe and smoke it, Mr. Wise Guys in the M. P. W. office, who said I couldn't do it), heavy rains had fallen for many days previous, and the gosh hanged old Coeur d'Alene line was washed out. So I had to go via the main line, and this put me in Spokane one day ahead of schedule.

Of course no one was expecting me until the day following, and I took opportunity to make a sneak on the boys. Gumshoeing over to the Rex theater, I paid my little nickel, to find upon the screen a corking good picture being projected by Brother Forest Peterson; Chief Operator Joe A. Maddore was off duty. The picture was brilliant, of correct size for the house, and the speed was right. The auditorium lighting was good, except for the clock, and even that wasn't bad. The operating room walls were light, there was a good vent flue, but no exhaust fan; two Simplex projectors.

Being foiled in my nefarious attempt to nail Brother Peterson to the cross, I hiked over to the Empire. Aha! Got you, Mister Operator. Your picture was out of frame at the start, and that is not considered good form. The projection, however, was fair. But the auditorium lighting was by no manner of means good. The clock and the piano lights were bad, and even when Miss (or was it Mrs.) Piano Player turned on the automatic and departed from her throne, presumably temporarily, she didn't bother to turn off the light. Dear me, no! Such trivial details were nothing in her young life. Let the sheet music glare into the eyes of the audience. Their eyes were nothing. There were six of the objectionable sidelights.

At the Lyric, J. W. Allender manager, the picture light was good and the speed correct. But the auditorium lighting was very bad indeed; also it could very easily be made ideal. Projection is in charge of Harold W. Sanders and J. Allender. The operating room is of ample size, but is flooded with daylight at matinees. Better paint the window-glass black, keep the windows closed at matinees, put glass in the ports, provide intake ducts for fresh air at or near the floor line, and install an exhaust fan. In this room is a very complete set of tools, a very odd and clever arrangement for giving the alarm when the film on the upper reel is almost exhausted, and a house-made arc control, depending for its action upon speed variation of driving motor, caused by increased voltage and decreased amperage as the arc length varies.

I tried to photograph these devices and, if successful, they will be described later in the Projection Department.

At the Liberty, Ralph Ruffner, manager; R. B. Hayes and C. C. Windson, operators, I found a fairly good operating room, badly located. By the addition of glass in the ports and an exhaust fan not less than 16 and probably 18 inches in diameter, the ventilation could be made excellent, whereas now it is very poor. There is an intake air register in the floor. The projectors are Simplex. In his office Manager Ruffner has a Powers 6B, used to examine all films run in the theater.

In the morning of the second day I got in touch with Lee Courtesy, secretary local Union 185, got my mail and held a two hours' executive session with the best stenographer I've struck yet. In the afternoon J. W. Allender, manager Lyric theater, came with his bubble cart and, together with Harold W. Sanders, chairman of entertainment committee; W. C. Sloan, president L. U. 185, and R. B. Hayes, operator, Liberty theater, bubbled in around to see the city and perfectly wonderful waterfalls of the Spokane River, then in flood. Some sight.

Rewinding was done at excessive speed in all Spokane rooms I visited. We also visited the studios of the Western Union Film Company, capitalized at $200,000, of which B. H. Harding is president. The company has a substantial looking plant, and is at present engaged in industrial and advertising work. It expects to take up the making of dramatic films later. We all had dinner at the Spokane Athletic Club, and at midnight came the banquet and lecture, in the Masonic Temple, attended by practically 100 per cent of those in any way identified with the industry in Spokane, plus several who traveled considerable distance to be present. It was an appreciative audience, to whom I really enjoyed talking, and thus endeth the chapter called Spokane.

Walla Walla, Washington.

Manager R. W. Oram, of the Arcade theater; Carl Crews, secretary local Union 234, and one or two of the other men whose names I did not, unfortunately, set down in my notes, waved the glad-you're-here sign as I climbed off the train after a 205-mile run from Spokane.

Walla Walla is a pretty little city, very quiet and a bit old-fashioned, perhaps, but solid and substantial nevertheless. It has five theaters with a large new one now building. I was especially favored by being invited to dinner at the home of Brother Blaine Geer, past president local Union 234, operator Liberty theater, where (don't let friend wife find it out) I promptly fell in love with his daughter, Fay—aged nine.

The Liberty theater has an excellent operating room. Its walls and ceiling are black, its cement floor oiled to keep down the dust; Simplex projectors are used. Brother Geer has one mighty clever thing which he will describe in the Projection Department in due time. He has a nitrogen bulb at the ceiling near the front wall. It is in a chain-pull socket. He has attached a small, very flexible wire to the pull, brought it down and across the front wall so that he can instantly light the lamp from any position along the front wall. He will sketch it out for us in the department.

The Arcade, Reo Oram, manager; Robert Mack, operator, is known as the House of the Four Bobs, there being four Roberts employed there. Its operating room is small, but its walls are black; also it is clean as a new pin, as was the Liberty room for that matter. The ventilation is subject to criticism—glass in those ports and an exhaust fan, Brother Cram; especially necessary in as small a room as that, Simplex projectors. And let me remark, in passing that Manager Cram is a sure enough hustler. 'Tis said he was born in the city of Hustle, county of Get-a-Wiggle, state of Whoop 'Em Up, and has lived there ever since. He also bears the reputation of being a thoroughly good fellow.

Manager J. H. McDonald, Strand theater, was laid up with rheumatism, and Mrs. McDonald was on the job in his stead, but much to her regret theater managing plus household duties, made it impossible for her to attend the lecture. Everyone had a good word for neighbor McDonald, and a word of sympathy and regret for his illness. At mignight a 100 per cent. attendance, except for friend McDonald, of Walla Walla managers and operators, as well as some out-of-town men, gathered around the flower-decked tables and proceeded to demonstrate their expertness as teeth operators. The only untoward incident to mar the occasion was when Brother James (Topsy) Dugger, operator Strand theater, arose, strode fearlessly across the room, his napkin waving gently in the breeze and bellowed down the dumb-waiter shaft these historic words: "Breast, breast, breast! Chicken breast! More!"

And then they listened to us for more than two hours and asked for more. But enough is plenty and to-morrow is another day, so we shook hands all around and said good-by.

Pendleton, Oregon.

Leaving Walla Walla I headed south via the Oregon, Washington and Navigation Railway, toward Shoshone and Pocatello, Idaho, whence I would wander on through Ogden to Salt Lake City and then take a dive 685 miles east to Pueblo.

At Pendleton, Oregon, it was necessary to lay over from 6 p. m. until 2.30 a. m., in order to catch a train which by daylight went over the Idaho division, where I fired the tracklaying engine in 1883. Having deposited my belongings in a hotel room I set forth intent upon giving Pendleton's five theaters the once over. The first work of call happened to be the office of the company owning all the theaters in the city. I met its general manager, whose name I am sorry to say does not appear among my notes, nor can it be dug up from among the jumble of names in memory. Arrangements were quickly made for the giving of a projection talk to his operators, himself and his house managers at midnight, and this program was pulled off, to the apparent satisfaction of everyone concerned. And thus I squeezed in what counted for an extra stop, in addition to the itinerary which everybody said I couldn't make.

Next day was consumed in travel, the time being divided between chasing a pencil over paper and looking at the scenes, now vastly changed, of bygone days. Places which in 1883 consisted only of a side track in the midst of an arid desert of sage brush, lava rock and alkali dust are now thriving communities, numbering in some instances many thousands of souls; also large stretches of country which was then devoted exclusively to sage hens, rattlesnakes and sagebrush, I now found to be covered with fertile fields; a rarely pleasant sight to look upon.

Pocatello, Idaho.

I had been requested by a theater man in Gooding, Idaho, to stop in Shoshone, where I was assured a gathering of managers and operators from surrounding towns would greet me. Just what happened I do not know, but there was no such gathering, and even the one theater manager did not seem to know I was due to stop in the city. So instead of remaining over a day, as I had intended, I merely stopped over night and then ambled on southward to Pocatello, arriving ahead of time, therefore unexpected and not greeted by the usual welcome, which came later, after I hunted up one of the boys and told him that sending a reception committee to the station would be merely love's labor lost.

Pocatello has five theaters, namely the Orpheum, Princess and Olympic, owned by the C. & A. Amusement Company, of which C. A. Archibald and R. D. Carrothers are the guiding spirits, and the Rex and Auditorium, owned by Jensen Brothers. The city is split in two in the middle by the railway yards. The C. & A. Amusement Company houses all lie on the west side of the tracks, whereas Jensen Brothers "own" the eastern territory. There are nine Power 6A and one Simplex in use. The current is 220 volt A. C., which is charged for at the rate of 3½ cts. per kilowatt. Current is rectified by means of motor generator sets and mercury arc rectifiers. Such operating rooms as I visited were fair; also the equipment was modern and in very good condition. Lamphouses were not piped to the vents, as they should be, nor were the ports covered with glass; also there was an absence of exhaust fans. Auditorium lighting was, while susceptible of improvement, not at all bad, as such things go.

The C. & A. Amusement Company employs a card-writer who is doing some of the neatest and finest work it has yet been my good fortune to view. He uses a combination of brushwork, colored paints and "cut-outs" from posters, which is extremely effective; also he has hit upon the scheme of kalsomining cardboard which, besides supplying a remarkably good surface, is susceptible of some very pretty blending effects. This particular thing may be old, I do not know, it being a little out of my jurisdiction and something I do not pay much attention to, but I do know friend Archibald showed me some of the prettiest examples of card work I have yet seen. He also has a scheme for using photographs in lobby display, in a cardboard cut-out frame, which is very effective.

I had the pleasure of taking dinner at neighbor Archibald's home, and you may take it from me Mrs. Archibald is fully entitled to apply for license as chef in the Astor hotel in New York City any time she wants to. She may use my name as reference.

Ogden, Utah.

I was in Pocatello on Sunday, and that day in that city is held sacred to loafing—at least by those who do not go to church, and in the interim between church, by most of the churchers as well. In other words, the theaters are closed. The lecture was therefore staged at 7 p. m., and finding at its end that I could get right into a sleeper and wake up at 7 a. m. in the city of Ogden, my next stop, that course was adopted. And thus I arrived in Ogden about eight hours ahead of time. After attending to some necessary affairs I hunted up William Worman, operator of the Alhambra theater, who promptly called off the reception committee which was preparing to usher me into Ogden with the usual ceremonies. Brother Worman has a most excellent operating room, with one single exception, namely, observation ports, which are ridiculously small, a blunder chargable directly to the architect. The room itself has black walls and most excellent ventillation. Powers 6A machines are used. Brother Worman is inventor of what seems to be a very excellent motor-driven inclosed rewinder, which he intends placing on the market in the near future, and which will be described in the Projection Department before very long. Worman is a live wire operator—a man of ability and brains.

Aside from the Alhambra, which, incidentally is a commodious and beautiful theater, and only found time to visit two others, viz.: the Utah and the Cozy.

At the Utah I had the pleasure of meeting Manager A. J. Fylir, a most courteous gentleman, who assures me that if there is anything Operator Ralph Fuller needs it is his own fault, because he has not asked for it. The operating room is of fair size, has black walls and is "not so bad," as Friend Canadian would say. An exhaust fan is needed.

At the Cozy Manager S. B. Sceck was out, but Alex. Wheelwright, operator, was strictly on the job in an operating room which is literally flooded with daylight at matinees through a window fully three feet wide; also there were incandescent lights burning, though I could not see just why. Power's machines were used.

The auditorium lighting of the Cozy left much to be desired. There are clocks in Ogden which stand in sad need of squelching. They have fully as much, if not more, prominence than the picture; also there are exit lights which would, I think, be perfectly visible two blocks away. Ogden theaters, or such of them as I saw, compare favorably with those of other cities, but their lighting stands in need of attention.

During the afternoon the reception committee, upon whom I had stolen a march, got on the job and bubbled us around the pretty little city of Ogden and out through Ogden canyon, a most charming drive. The canyon is impressive in its scenery, but lacked a waterfall of height and size in conformity with the noble walls of granite surroundings. So they got busy and made out Bridal Veil Falls, some 'steen hundred feet high. And it's quite some considerable doings, too, lemme inform you—is Ogden's man-made water drop.

At midnight all of Ogden's managers and operators gathered around the festal board, and what they did to the oats, hay and bran mash provided, it is disgraceful to tell. It is said some of the boys ate so much they had to keep their teeth shut to hold it in, hence were unable to indulge in the excellent cigars which came as a good night slide to the banquet. The only unpleasant incident was the presence of a self-confessed—well, Brother White, where are the other five schoolmarms? Echo answer, "Where?"

The Ogden men were an appreciative audience. It was easy to address them. When I had done, at 2.30 a. m., they all came up, shook hands and bade me godspeed and good luck.

Salt Lake City.

Salt Lake City has so many excellent examples of the photoplay theater that any attempt to adequately describe them would of necessity fail, from lack of space; also neither time nor energy would permit of a comprehensive examination of any considerable number of them.

In a mahogany furnished office, in one of Salt Lake's finest temples of the photoplay, the American, I found William H. Swanson, surrounded by piles of businesslike papers, his hands full of cancelled checks, and his mouth full of language. His greeting to the scribe was most cordial, for Billy (that is the title by which he is known to old-timers) and I had many reminiscences of the early days to talk over.

Billy Swanson is one of those men you just simply can't down. He is the man who erected what was, I believe, the first high-class theater, of considerable seating capacity, designed to be devoted entirely to the photoplay. I refer to the Swanson theater, now the Drexel, Cottage Grove avenue and Thirty-ninth street, Chicago. This theater had no stage, nor was any provision made for one. It was an experiment which called for nerve, and William H. Swanson had the courage of his conviction. It was in 1906 or 1907 this took place, and the writer was chief operator of that house for some months, until he was fired bodily because he and friend house manager could not agree.

Brother Swanson is a genuine old-timer, and probably knows the photoplay business, from the exchangeman and exhibitor's point of view, as well as any living man. He has known many vicissitudes, but no matter how high an explosion may hurl him, Billy twists around in the air and lands squarely on his feet, both fists up and ready for business.

He is now owner of the American, Liberty and Rex theaters. He manages the American and Rex and has the Liberty leased to other parties. But the American is his pet—the apple of his eye. It is a house which, four years ago, when first it opened, represented about the best there was in photoplay theaters. It still ranks high. In this theater Swanson has installed a magnificent pipe organ, costing (Billy is willing to swear to this with a Good Book in each hand) $35,000. It certainly is a wonderful instrument, and I am prepared to accept Swanson's statement that it is the best organ in any theater in the world. It is operated by the organist who plays the $150,000 organ in the Mormon tabernacle, unquestionably the finest organ in the world.

The American operating room is just fair, but is level with or very nearly level with the screen. Two Baird projectors are used. The observation ports are too narrow and the projection light is very yellow. Rewinding is done at objectionable speed. The light ray from condenser to gate is entirely enclosed, and this is excellent. I am, however, compelled to say that, considering the amperage used (76), the screen result is very far from what it should be, and only a cursory glance at the optical system is necessary to determine the cause. It is not only wrong, but very wrong. Put in two 6½ plano-convex lenses, and advance that condenser by, at a guess, five to six inches, leaving the lenses so that their convexes are within about one-sixteenth of an inch of each other. Don't get up on your hind legs and declare that I am full of prunes, but try it out—intelligently, remembering, however, that the figures I am giving you are for 60 amperes—not 75. The dope is: two 6½ lenses and about 13 inches center of condenser combination to film.

During my stay I dropped into the Broadway, Rand, Paramount-Empress and the Mehesy.

At the Broadway, the manager, M. H. Hanauer, was absent, but Operator C. M. Erickson was busy watching his Power's 6A shoot pictures at the screen, using thirty amperes of current. One of the mechanisms is very old, but in good repair. The ports are good, but ventilation is very bad. Screen result is fair, considering the current used. At the Rand, a five-cent house, Manager P. C. Peterson greeted us, pleaded guilty to being comparatively young in the show business, and expressed a determination to be present at the lecture. The determination was all it amounted to, however, for he was not there. In his auditorium (storeroom type) there was a double row of objectionable ceiling lights, ten in all, a brightly illuminated clock very close to the screen and two brilliant red lights, one near either lower corner of the screen. Yes, Manager Peterson would have done well to have attended the lecture. Then, too, the coop (that's the name) at the Rand has a glass front and a mercury arc rectifier. How in the name of the Great Eternal Green Fingered Prophet do you expect your operator to get satisfactory screen results with that combination, Neighbor Peterson, and yet you did not take sufficient interest to spend two hours in the endeavor to learn about these evils and how to avoid them.

At the Paramount-Empress, a large, high class photoplay theater, I met George E. Carpenter, its manager, and Carl Porter, his assistant. The operating room is opposite the screen, but its ports are very small—entirely too small for high class work. The room is small, but very clean and neat. Gordon Thomburg, operator, was projecting a really high class picture with 30 amperes of current. The picture was sharp, brilliant, and had excellent depth. Two Simplexes and a Minusa screen are used.

The Mehesy is owned and managed by E. Mehesy. It is of the storeroom type, has a good sized operating room, with high ceiling and a huge vent flue. It also has toilet and wash basin in an adjoining room. The auditorium lighting is, except for the clock, very good. Manager Mehesy has just purchased a new six-cylinder car, of which he is inordinately proud. Well, it certainly is quite some cart, all right.

I had been invited to stop in Salt Lake by Local Union 250, but found that to all intents and purposes no preparations at all had been made. At 8.30 p. m. Manager Peterson told me he had not been notified of the proposed meeting. Of course it was a bad day—registration day—but surely that need not have prevented the union from at least making some reasonable effort to get its own members out, to say nothing of the managers. The lack of energy on the part of Local 250 contrasts sharply with the action of more than seventy other locals, and is not exactly to their credit.

From midnight to 2 a. m. I pounded the good projection pulpit in Musicians' Hall, to a part of the membership of the union, plus Manager Mehesy and Assistant Manager Porter of the Paramount-Empress.

And the good Lord knows Salt Lake needed and needs exactly what I was there to give them, if what I saw was a fair sample.

Animated Drawings

J. F. Leventhal of the Bray Studios Makes 'Em Talk—Mechanical Processes Explained by Pictures.

EARLY in 1916, J. F. Leventhal, a young architectural draftsman of Chattanooga, Tenn., in the employ of The Bray Studios, Inc., decided that animated drawings could and should be used for purposes other than amusement. He laid his plans before Mr. Bray who immediately offered his assistance, and that of his studio, to aid in the production of this new type of film.

J. F. Leventhal.

Working in connection with The Bray Studios, Inc., and Waldemar Kaempffert, of Popular Science Monthly, an ardent believer in animated drawings, Mr. Leventhal began to produce the pictures which have opened a great new field. His first pictures were "The Construction of the Hell-Gate Bridge," "Why the Slides Occur at Panama," "Construction of the Harlem River Tubes" and others. These met with instant success, because they could show what the ordinary motion picture could not.

Time has no limitations. Operations that may have required years to carry on can be shown in a few seconds. Motions that occur in the fraction of a second can be lengthened so that they can be studied and understood. A recent picture in the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, for which Mr. Leventhal produces exclusively, illustrates how limitless the animated draftsman's field is. This subject was "The Submarine Mine-Layer" and showed not only the boat in action under water, but sectional view explaining the internal arrangement and operation.

Mr. Leventhal has undoubtedly made a valuable contribution to the usefulness of motion pictures, especially for films of an educational nature.

NOVEL AD STUNT BY EXCHANGE.

A unique advertising idea comes from Art Dramas Service, Chicago, distributor of the Art Dramas Program for several western states. R. O. Proctor, manager of this exchange, is the originator of the stunt.

When he was in New York a few weeks ago he ordered a million leadpencils, costing over $3,000, these to be adorned with the name and address of his exchange. The company which secured the order reported that it was the largest single commission it had ever received.

DAZEY WRITES SCRIPT FOR APOLLO.

C. T. Dazey, author of the play, "In Old Kentucky," and numerous other dramas which have enjoyed popularity, has just completed a special script in which Alma Hanlon will appear for the Apollo company. Mr. Dazey acquired motion picture fame largely through writing "Manhattan Madness."

British Notes

THE executive chief of the British Board of Film Censors, T. P. O'Connor, considers the situation regarding the censorship of moving pictures in this country still unsatisfactory. In evidence before a recent sitting of the Kinema Commission he deplored the lack of co-operation between the Board of Censors at the Home Office. The Home Office should, said Mr. O'Connor, have the right to vote upon the appointment of the president of the Board of Censors, and the president, if accepted by the Home Secretary, should have his co-operation in carrying out the board's decisions. An instance of the confidence reposed in the present voluntary system of film censorship by the Government is furnished in Mr. O'Connor's statement that every film to leave this country is now sent to them for examination and is not allowed to be exported without it bears the mark of approval of the British Board of Film Censors.

Some time ago he circularized film manufacturers, particularly American, asking for the production of as few films as possible bearing upon "crook" stories. The censor reported that there is already a steady diminution in that type of picture. The Kinema Commission, which has as its head the Bishop of Birmingham, has at its recent sittings been taking first hand evidence of the effect of the film upon the child mind. School children from different areas in the metropolis have given their impressions of widely varying subjects. Recently four Jewish children from the East End were cross-examined. The two boys were unanimous in their praise of vizualized villainy, murders and robberies, and liked pictures "different to what they saw in real life." "The Broken Coin" and Charlie Chaplin were mentioned as favorites.

Through the energies of the Exhibitors' Association the Corporation of Newcastle upon Tyne has deleted the clause in licenses issued to local moving picture theaters forbidding the admission of children after 9 p. m.

A national baby week is shortly to be held throughout the country. Last week J. D. Tippett of the Universal called a meeting of its promoters in the projection theater at Universal House, Oxford street, and exhibited the Universal eugenic subjects "Where Are My Children" and "Not a Lamb Shall Stray." The gathering was a distinguished one and the outcome was the adoption of these two films for a kinema campaign during the national baby week in July. Other films of a like character are in preparation by Mr. Tippett, notably a serial founded on the Boy Scout movement.

The Fox super-spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods," has been leased to C. B. Cochran, proprietor of the Ambassador's and St. Martin's theaters. This is his first venture in moving pictures, being previously a decided anti-moving picturite. Mr. Cochran will present the Fox feature at the London Opera House next week. The same week also sees the transfer of "Intolerance" from Drury Lane to the Philharmonic Hall in Great Portland street after a seven weeks' run.

The provision of funds to carry on its good work is just now occupying the most serious atentions of the committee of the Kinematograph Trade Council. The Trade Council represents the entire moving picture industry of Great Britain and is to our trade what the N. A. M. P. I. is to the American industry. The plan most favored for establishing the Trade Council upon a firm and charitably independent financial footing is the absorption of the British Board of Film Censors. Now this institution, the only form of censorship we have, is legally if not morally the property of the Kinematograph Manufacturers Association, a body represented on the Trade Council. This association of interests doubtless suggested to the Trade Council committee the practicability of the proposed fusion. The Trade Council would conduct the Board of Censorship exactly upon its present principles and policy, but instead of collecting the fees from the manufacturers alone would arrange some distribution of the cost of censorship upon the exhibitor. The matter is to be discussed at the next meeting.

Events of the past two weeks have given a new lease of life to the Vitagraph Company's "Battle Cry of Peace." Several new copies have had to be printed by N. W. Smith for the heavy bookings in and around London. It ran the whole of last week to capacity business at the West End Cinema.

Fred Bolton recently secured the British agency for the Mutual Company's productions other than the Chaplin subjects. He has now been joined in his enterprise by a well known Scottish exchange owner, A. Stewart, and Bolton-Stewart's International Pictures, Ltd., with offices in London and Glasgow, is the outcome. Among other important agencies already secured the new company has purchased for two years the entire output of the Frohman Amusement Corporation for Great Britain and Indian colonies. The British rights of the Thomas Dixon picture, "The Fall of a Nation," have also been negotiated. The London office of the company is at 46 Gerrard street, W. I.

Screen Industry of Russia

More Than a Million Feet of Pictures Made Yearly—Kaplan's Russian Art Films Will Show Nature of the Products.

RUSSIA must be considered a serious and highly important factor in the screen industry of the world, according to N. S. Kaplan of the Russian Art Films. Mr. Kaplan's special mission here is to market the above named pictures, consisting of filmed novels and dramas by the most famous authors and enacted by the most eminent Moscow and Petrograd stars; but he is in a position to impart much valuable trade information, and the following statement, obtained from him, affords the first comprehensive view of conditions over there:

"Though the most backward of nations politically until the other day, Russia is in the van of artistic progress. She has a master literature and a master dramatic art, and within the last five years has attained supereminence in film art, too. It will surprise the average American to learn that Russia, a country of 180,000,000 people, turns out more than one million feet of features per year. Her greatest progress has been made since the European war broke out.

"Instead of strangling the industry, the war imparted to it a wonderful forward impetus. Motion picture theaters gained enormously in popularity, as they always will under war conditions. The stoppage of film import through the usual trade channels of Central Europe led to largely increased home production. It was found possible to obtain the film services of the leading dramatic artists from the national theaters who in ordinary times would have been too busy. It was then I decided to enlist the co-operation of the two great studios of Chanjonkoff and Ermolieff in a series of picturizations of the Russian classics. After having been passed by the Imperial authorities, these art films were produced with enormous success in the principal picture theaters. Please note, however, that these pictures—unlike most of the predecessors—were not made solely, nor even chiefly, with a view to the Russian domestic market. In selecting the subjects, artists and treatment, we kept international and especially American requirements ever in mind, so that Russian-made films should come over here not as exotics but as expressions of universal genius.

"I believe the advent of these pictures means that Russia will henceforth assume a prominent role in the international film family. Consider that today the largest Russian studio is turning out one hundred features a year, the second largest is turning out sixty-five annually, the smaller studios are making about forty-five more—a total of 210 feature plays a year—and you will realize in what giant fashion their industry has grown since it started out nine years ago with one little picture man making an occasional split-reeler. The advance in quality has been as great as the increase in size. Skilled directors have poured in from the other countries of Europe, clever native directors have been trained up, and a film technique has developed which needed but the aid of the leading dramatic artists to ensure supreme expression.

"Since the revolution and the beginning of the Russo-American alliance," concluded Mr. Kaplan, "an intense interest in things American has sprung up throughout Russia. Previously to the recent events, they were using only ten to fifteen per cent. American-made films, but this will rapidly change and I predict that our American stars and plays will be more popular over there than any other non-Russian films. The opportunity to the American manufacturer is obvious. In fact, I should not be surprised to see within the next three years each country using from forty to fifty per cent. of the other's literary, dramatic and film output. For the political rapprochement between the two countries cannot help bringing about the rapid and liberal interchange of their art. Such has proved true with other great international alliances, and it will be even more strikingly true betwixt the great Western Republic and the New Republic of the East."

It may be added that Mr. Kaplan has already offered his services to the United States Government in opening up the principal motion picture theaters of Russia to patriotic American films.

Australian Notes

A DEPUTATION representing the Sydney film exchanges waited upon the Federal Censorship Board recently, and asked that the board should state the basis upon which it would exercise its powers of rejecting films. The deputation pointed out that some guide was needed in order that suitable instructions might be issued to buyers in America and England. The chairman of the board has now responded to that invitation, and has written the following letter to Archie Fraser, chairman of the Film Renter's Association:

It is evidently impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule which should be applicable to all cases, but perhaps a general statement of the principles guiding the board in dealing with films may assist importers in the direction desired. Briefly, the films which include scenes which exhibit any of the following characteristics would seem to the board objectionable: Nude figures, and positions of the actors which are suggestive of sexual passion or desire; indecent, suggestive, or insufficient dress; embraces overstepping the limits of affection, or which would be contrary to propriety in ordinary life; any scenes which might be offensive to the religious feelings of any class of the community; or which might be thought subversive of morality or virtue, or be harmful to the young especially of both sexes; or which might seem to encourage or appear to view with indifference breaches of the law, or perpetration of crime, and any scenes from which the inference could be drawn that offenses against those laws or rules which govern the relations of the sexes, in married and single life, are matters to be overlooked or treated lightly.

The letter continues:

The board has the assurance of importers that they do not desire the production of scenes which are objectionable. It appears that under present circumstances their choice is much limited, and that they have to draw their supplies principally from one source—and that a too vigorous application of the requirements referred to above may possibly subject importers to pecuniary loss, as it seems that they are obliged to pay for their purchases in ignorance of what course the board may take in regard thereto on their arrival in Australia. The board is consequently very reluctant to make use of its powers to the disadvantage of importers, but at the same time the duty has been imposed upon it of carrying out the regulations, which are clear and precise, and it has no alternative but to do so to the best of its ability.

Upon various points raised by the deputation in connection with the administration of the censorship regulations, the chairman made the following remarks in his letter:

The suggestion that, when a film is being screened before the board, the importer or his representative should be allowed to be present and to make recommendations as to excisions, etc., of any objectionable parts, is approved.

Action has been taken by the board in connection with the deputation's desire that the military censorship of films should not now be insisted upon. (The military censorship has banned several pictures, including "The Cheat" and "The Kiss of Hate.")

As stated before, the board considers that all importers should arrange with their buyers to procure full synopses for all comedy films imported in the future.

In regard to the film "A Hungry Heart," which was passed for exhibition only to persons over the age of 16 years, the board has now decided to pass it without any restrictions. This is not to be regarded as a precedent, however, and it is to be understood that the board will very probably reject all films of this type after the end of June next.

The latest addition to the number of news-weeklies that are released in Australia made its first appearance this week. "The Paramount Weekly" is the name of the new arrival, which is released by Australian Feature Films, Ltd.

"A Daughter of the Gods" is playing to excellent business in various parts of the continent. The production was first screened in Sydney at the Hippodrome. The Brisbane season was so successful that an extension was decided upon. Four weeks were played at the Auditorium, Melbourne. Such was the result that arrangements have been made for a two-weeks' return season at Easter. It proved a big draw in Hobart and Launceston, Tasmania, and was similarly successful in Perth, Western Australia—where it opened on March 17. After the return season in Sydney, with the big suburban houses that are to follow, the picture will tour, first Queensland, and then all the other states. New Zealand will be visited in two or three months' time.

In a previous letter I mentioned that a very important item to all Australian showmen was about to be settled in Brisbane, Queensland. S. Cook opened a picture theater in defiance of the by-laws of the local council. He was summoned, and fined £2. Mr. Cook appealed against this decision to the full court, contending that a local shire has no authority to determine how many amusement ventures may be started under its jurisdiction, but only power to see that the places are built and conducted according to its by-laws. The full court by a majority have turned down the appeal.

PETROVA PRESENTS TROPHY TO ROTHAPFEL.

Madam Petrova, the Lasky-Paramount star, whose first Paramount picture was presented at the Rialto theater, in New York City, quite recently, presented the managing director of that institution, Samuel L. Rothapfel, with a magnificent silver trophy, in cup form, as an exemplification of her appreciation of the remarkable presentation Mr. Rothapfel gave her production. The presentation of the solid silver trophy was made by Mme. Petrova, accompanied by Jesse L. Lasky, on the stage of the theater on Friday evening, June 1.

The trophy will remain in the possession of the Rialto management for one year, when it will be presented to some other director in some other community in the United States, and so one for a period of ten years. The trophy is to encourage the improvement of music in motion picture theaters, a subject that has been of deepest interest to Mme. Petrova, since she adopted the screen as her work.

LINCOLN AND FIELDING TO CO-STAR.

Romaine Fielding started on June 4 for Canada to film Edwin Bower Hesser's patriotic film, "For Liberty," which is a tale of the American Legion of Canada and the heroic part which the 33,000 Americans enlisted in the Canadian army have played in the war. The length of the feature will be seven reels. E. K. Lincoln is co-starred with Mr. Fielding, who plays the "heavy" role, while Miss Barbara Castleton will be the heroine.

The general manager of the organization is Ira M. Lowry, for several years treasurer and general manager of the Lubin Company in Philadelphia.

NEWSPAPER MEN TO SEE WHARTON SUBJECT.

Private showing of motion pictures as a convention entertainment is to come with the meeting in Ithaca June 27, 28 and 29 of the Press Association of New York. For then "The Great White Trail," the super-feature of the north which has just been produced by the Whartons, is to form one of the morning entertainments of the visiting newspaper men. A theater is to be engaged and only the visiting members of the press and their friends are to be admitted.

Popular Picture Personalities

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

JOHNSON, Emory. Born in San Francisco, Cal. Swedish parentage. Is six feet, two inches tall and weighs 185 pounds. Fair complexion, brown hair and blue eyes. Mr. Johnson has had no stage experience. His plunge was made in May, 1914, in an Essanay production titled Italian Love. He has also played with Pathe, and Liberty, and is now a citizen of Carl Laemmle's home-made town. Mr. Johnson's questionaire is about as informative as a slacker's contribution to the selective service certificate, but he does manage to remember that he likes motoring, hunting, swimming and golf. And since Mr. Johnson's brief recollection leaves us with some white space to fill we beg to remind other contributors that these valuable life histories have just plain, simply got to be of equal length and you'll save the Statistical Bureau and the Recording Angel a lot of work by filling in the blanks chockful and running over on the back.

Emory Johnson

BASKETTE, Lena. Born in San Mateo, Cal. American parentage. Is five feet, seven inches tall and weighs 75 pounds. Olive complexion, brown hair and eyes. Little Miss Baskette made her stage debut in 1915 in San Francisco as a child dancer. Most child dancers are nuisances, but she was different. She did not dance to support a whole family of "managers," but because she was put on earth to dance and not even a Gerry Society could stop her. Less than a year later her talent had brought her to the attention of the Universal and she was added to the stock. Later, to make certain of her, she was given a five-year contract. Dancing, closely akin to natural pantomime, is her second language and she works with an intelligence far beyond that which her ten years would suggest. Among her hits have been parts in Brother Jim, Shoes, The Caravan, etc.

Lena Baskette

PEYTON, Lawrence Ross. Born in Hartford, Ky. American parentage. Is an inch and a half over six feet tall and weighs 186 pounds. He made his stage debut in 1903 and for nine years played with stock and road companies. In 1912 he made his screen debut and has played with the Lasky and American companies and is now with the Universal. He did Wolf Larsen in The Sea Wolf, a Balboa production, and played in Martin Eden for Bosworth. His most notable of recent roles was Gaspard in the Lasky-De Mille version of Joan of Arc. He has also played leads with the Kalem company. In the matter of sports Mr. Payton likes "outdoor life," in which he runs true to form, but it is not just that alone. He also has a fancy for—whisper it softly—well, he was born in Kentucky, you will remember, and those roosters of his are not just to keep the hens from getting lonesome. No sir!

Lawrence Peyton

BREMER, Sylvia. Born in Sydney, Australia. Her father was English and her mother an Australian. Is five feet, seven inches tall and weighs 135 pounds. Dark complexion, dark brown hair and eyes. She made her debut on the Australian stage about five years ago, playing in various American successes, and has played in New York with the Grace George Company. On April 29 she was engaged to play with the Thomas H. Ince productions and made her debut in The Pinch Hitter. Her stage successes have been in the Argyle Case, Bought and Paid For, Ready Money, and Under Fire. She does not like the usual "all outdoor sports," but she does like horseback riding and can jockey a surf board like a Hawaiian. Indoors her hobby is the collection of antiques. She adds: "Pictures brought me to America about seven months ago and I like them awfully." She is by no means the only star from the antipodes to like and be liked by the pictures.

Sylvia Bremer

CONKLIN, Chester C. (The Walrus). Born in Oskaloosa, Iowa, January 11, 1886. American parentage. Is five feet, four and one-half inches. Weighs 135 pounds. Medium complexion, brown hair, dark blue eyes. Prior to his screen connection Mr. Conklin had experience as a circus clown and was with stock and road shows. In 1916 he joined the Keystone, playing a fireman in Fire Bugs. He adds that Mack Sennett and Bill Night were the "other" notables in the cast. His odd make-up, suggestive of a rather dissolute sea lion, brought him the name of "The Walrus" and this persisted until "Mr. Walrus" was adopted as his cast name. He rapidly rose to stardom and has played opposite to Charles Chaplin in Dough and Dynamite, Caught in a Cabaret, Tillie's Punctures Romance and others, and was starred in The Cannon Ball, Saved by Wireless, Dizzy Heights and others.

"Soldiers of the Soil" (Paramount-Bray).

THE shadows of war on the American horizon has turned the thoughts of many of America's women to the soil, and in place of spending their spare time in planning the season's gowns they can in all parts of the country be found busy preparing for the food emergency which may make it necessary for them to fill the places of the farmers of the country. The Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 71 is placing before its audiences scenes of real inspiration showing what the women at the New York State School of Agriculture at Farmingdale, L. I., are doing. Here we see these young women at work guiding tractors over the fields plowing, harrowing and planting at the same time. Trimly clad in suits of khaki they do all the things about the farm that their brothers do. Fifty or more women are already enrolled at the college and are busily engaged trying to make the 340 acres which comprise the farm grow an abundant crop.

"Repairing a Sub-Sea Cable." (Paramount-Bray).

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 71 contains an interesting account of how the work of repairing the ocean cables is conducted. We learn that when the lead coating of the cables strung along the ocean's floor have been chafed until the wires are exposed to the water they are raised by means of grappling hooks manipulated by the men aboard the repair boat and examined until the exposed part is found. The repair is then made, and where a break occurs the hundreds of separate wires in the cable must be properly joined and tested before the insulation and thick coating of lead is put on. Interesting and well-illustrated.

"Surgeon to Old Papers." (Universal).

The manner in which the lives of valuable old manuscripts are extended is shown in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 23. Here we see how the lifework of William Berwick is carried on at the Congressional Library at Washington. A mutilated document which has been submitted for repair is shown, after which we learn how the beveling of the paper for patching is done, and the splitting of paper for the mending of worn documents. The manuscript after being repaired is then shown us, and also the restored will of George Washington.

"The Animal World No. 1." (Coronet.)

No 1 of this interesting series opens in a unique manner by presenting a number of still pictures of prehistoric animals set in an animated background of the earth's vegetation. These are followed by interesting pictures of the monkey species including the ring-tailed lemur. This is an interesting introduction to an excellent series.

"The Animal World No. 5." (Coronet.)

The fifth of the series introduces familiarly several species of water fowl and is especially notable for its underwater photography showing these birds diving and catching fish. The kingfisher, the cormorant, the penguin and swan all come in for their share of attention. The picture is very well sub-titled and beautifully photographed. Many close-ups of great excellence are shown.

"Transporting Wild Animals." (Educational Films.)

In this film, which belongs to the Ditmars series, will be found unusual material. Through it we learn many things which most of us did not know about the handling and transportation of wild anmals. The fierce alligator, which is the first to greet us from his box in which he has traveled no less than 800 miles, is carefully muzzled before being released and escorted to his tank; the liberated Indian bear makes a careful survey of his new quarters; the turtles shipped like bags of potatoes appear somewhat confused upon being emptied out all in a heap; and the giraffe in a sixteen-foot crate appears quite amiable although a trifle stiff as he is led away by his keeper. The picture closes as a monkey skips gleefully from his palm-thatched crate apparently at peace with the world. The crating of a couple of deer also forms an attractive part of the picture.

"Alaska Wonders in Motion—No. 1" (Coronet.)

Some excellently photographed views taken in southern Alaska and in the vicinity of the Kodiak Island comprise this picture. A handsome Eskimo woman introduces the subject showing us how she enjoys fishing, etc. She also displays a portion of her wardrobe consisting of a raincoat made of walrus intestines trimmed with the heads of sea parrots. Various interesting and beautiful scenes show the timber facilities in southern Alaska, and the Blow Hole at the copper deposits near Latouche. The Columbia glacier is shown and also the bridge on the Government railway built across a glacier. The real spectacle of this number is a well-photographed view of what is known as the Bore, which is a huge tidal wave or water wall which travels inland at an alarmingly rapid pace and attains a height of sometimes twenty-five feet in its advance. Other interesting scenes include the loading of concentrated ore at the gold mine, Kenai lake, the town of Rooseveit, and a moving glacier near Valdez. The pictures were photographed by Al. I. Smith, of 303 South Hill street, Los Angeles.

"Southwestern Texas." (Pathe-Combitone.)

No. 12 of the Combitone series covers the southwestern portion of Texas. Among other things it shows us the second highest bridge in the world which spans the Pecos river. A new breed of Texas cattle which are a cross between the ordinary Texas cattle and the sacred cattle of India forms an interesting item and reminds us if we have forgotten that Texas is a cattle state. We also learn that the largest herd of goats in the world is to be found in Texas and numbers 17,000, and that excellent grazing grounds have been provided for them through irrigating barren lands. The shearing of the goats and other features of the industry are shown.

"Freak Metals and Their Antics." (Universal.)

No. 23 of the Universal Magazine contains an interesting visualization of how the chemist by experimenting is able to turn the laws of gravitation topsyturvy revealing astonishing secrets. We learn from the film that metals differ greatly in weight, and that gold, for instance, is more than seven times as heavy as aluminum. Mercury, the only liquid metal, is so heavy that iron floats on it more readily than cork on water. Sodium is light and will float on water, which it attacks violently. When placed on paper floated on water the heat produced by the chemical action sets fire to the sodium, which burns as easily as paper. The film also teaches that it is the oxygen in the air that causes substances to burn, and that even iron will take fire in a jar of pure oxygen.

Y. M. C. A. Favors Film Exhibitions

Association Indorses Motion Picture as Wholesome and Satisfactory Means of Recreation.

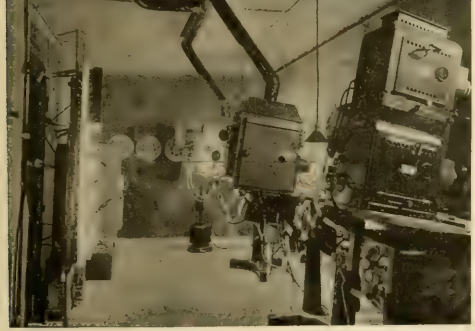
THE value of the motion picture as a wholesome form of entertainment has been recognized by the Y. M. C. A. The International Committee has been charged with the very important task of providing for motion picture entertainments in connection with military training camps, for the picture has been found to be one of the most satisfactory means of furnishing wholesome recreation for men living in military camps and on warships. It goes a long way to counterbalance certain types of entertainment and other allurements of an evil character usually to be found in the neighborhood of military posts. The motion picture is often used in connection with the Y. M. C. A. work. In a number of communities associations have undertaken to provide regular motion picture exhibitions.

Probably the most successful exhibition conducted by the Y. M. C. A. in this country is that in Coatesville, Pa., where the association has a large auditorium seating more than one thousand persons. The very best pictures from all of the companies are used. The association employs a man to give his entire time to selecting pictures and conducting exhibitions. The Board of Directors of the association feels that it is doing something worth while in meeting the leisure time problem. This association has been conducting motion pictures for more than five years, the exhibitions being given every afternoon and evening, with changes of program daily. On Saturday afternoons they have special entertainments for young people, making a charge of 5 cents for two admissions.

It appears that news pictures are preferred to scenics. In all of these cases it has been found that entertainment is the keynote for success. As one man put it, "We have got to have red-blooded pictures and plenty of action." The Y. M. C. A. has found it possible to make a wide use of motion pictures. It has proved them to be very helpful.

HIGH SCHOOL EQUIPMENT.

Carl H. Carson, of the Pasadena High School, and chairman of the motion picture committee of Southern California high schools, sends this illustration of their projection room and new equipment for the Pasadena, Cal., High School.



Operating Room, Pasadena High School.

Current is supplied through a G. E. generator, Fort Wayne compensarc type. The equipment consists of two Simplex machines with model S lamphouses and fitted with Kleine Kino lenses; a Bausch & Lomb double dissolver and a Kliegl spotlight. The operating room is of ample size, and the students take care of the operating under faculty supervision. The wooden table in the foreground under the stereopticon is temporary and is to be replaced by an all-iron table now under construction.

Putting the Educational Over

William O'Hagan Hurst, of the Paramount-Bray Forces, Thows Light On the Subject.

A CHAT with William O'Hagan Hurst, editor of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, divulged some interesting points with regard to the successful marketing of the educational film. Mr. Hurst, who is of English nativity, previous to his entry into the moving picture end of the game had considerable experience in the show business; in short he was a manager-actor-playwright. We are not, therefore, surprised at his success in deceiving the public into believing that it is merely being entertained when it is really being educated.

Mr. Hurst was placed in charge of the Paramount Pictograph shortly after its evolution from its embryonic period; and one of the things that he revealed in connection with the preparation of an educational film was that no matter what the subject might be its sub-titles must carry it over—in other words they must act as a sugar coating. In order to sub-title effectively it is necessary to have an insight into the psychology of the masses; it is necessary to associate the sub-title with the scene by means of clever wording and in a manner which will cause the subtle humor of that association to get across to the most obtuse mind. This Mr. Hurst tells us is one of the main secrets of success in presenting the educational film.

In the turning over of subjects the Paramount cameraman is enjoined to give a typewritten explanation of his subject. This is then handed to the editor, who proceeds to inculcate the proper amount of humor. The following example of a subject appearing in Pictograph No. 67 will give a good idea of the skill required to do this effectively.

"Modern Farming" (in the practical form in which the cameraman sees it).

Scene 1—A modern tractor manure spreader. Spreads nine feet wide and will cover ten acres in ten hours, allowing two-thirds of the time for loading.

Scene 2—Tractor power lift gang plow. Plows 8½ acres in ten hours. This machine consumes about twelve gallons of gasoline a day of ten hours and does the work of eight horses.

Scene 3—Tractor tandem disc harrow. Harrowing 21 acres in ten hours.

Scene 4—Tractor drag harrow. This machine harrows 60 acres in ten hours, taking the place of two men and eight horses.

Scene 5—Tractor grain drill. Drilling 30 acres of grain or grain seed in ten hours with a ten-foot machine.

Scene 6—Corn binder. Cutting, binding and carrying the bundles. This machine cuts ten acres per day, one row at a time. Formerly it took two men and six horses to do the same amount of work.

"Modern Farming" (after the editor has applied his sugar coating).

Sub. 1—"James, bring out the limousine, father's going to plow." Modern farming calls for just about that much effort on father's part since science and invention hit the farm.

Sub. 2—With the new tractor spreader. At the rate of an acre an hour father spreads the fertilizer.

Sub. 3—This is a "gang plow" (not used on street corners of big cities). On twelve gallons of gas it plows nine acres in ten hours.

Sub. 4.—The tandem disc harrow will work 21 acres in ten hours.

Sub. 5—And the drag harrow, with the assistance of father, 60 acres in ten hours.

Sub. 6—And this chariot of industry, guided by father, cuts, binds and bundles ten acres of corn a day, formerly the work of two men and six horses.

The chief factor in the sale of any article according to Mr. Hurst is its presentation. "Whether it's ham bags, lead pencils or moving picture films, you must present your goods attractively if you expect to get them over," he said.

Visual Instruction in California

Wallace Hatch, of the State's University, Tells What is Being Done in His Commonwealth.

MEMBERS of the One Hundred Per Cent Club of California, with which several live film exchange men are affiliated, were recently given an insight into the work of the bureau of visual instruction of the University of California at a club luncheon when Wallace Hatch, head of the bureau, explained his work as it applied directly to the principles along which the club is working—efficiency without waste. He pointed out the fact that commercial houses and manufacturers lose hundreds of thousands of dollars annually by endeavoring to train boys and girls who have no sympathetic outlook toward the business and who are ignorant of the lines they are expected to handle. He explained how, by the visual method of instruction provided through the University, school children can take up the study of any industry in a way that they can thoroughly understand and take some interest in following, by means of moving pictures and exhibits, the transformation of the raw material of any manufacturing plant into the finished product. There is a steadily increasing demand on the part of the schools of the state for moving pictures of an educational character and the bureau is adding new ones as rapidly as possible, the limited funds at its command now being the chief drawback. Within the past year many schools in the country districts have added moving picture machines and exhibitions are being given even in remote rural districts through the medium of traveling outfits.

The San Francisco Congress of Mothers is giving the matter of visual education its careful attention and will bring the subject to the attention of the Board of Education in a formal way within a short time. Moving pictures are being used in San Francisco in a limited way, but it is the idea of the Congress to have them form a part of the regular course of study. The question of securing suitable films is rapidly being solved and the Board of Education will be asked to furnish moving picture equipment for every school in the city.

American War News Weekly

Numbers 5, 6 and 7 Contain Intersting Subjects of Considerable Length.

THE Cinema War News Syndicate, situated in the Longacre Building, New York City, has collected some interesting material for its releases of May 27, June 3 and June 10, on which dates the fifth, sixth and seventh numbers of the American War News Weekly are issued respectively.

In No. 5 will be found a 400-foot story on the making of a citizen soldier at Fort Meyer, Virginia. The sixth release contains a 400-foot length showing the manufacture of small arms for the Army and Navy, consisting of scenes photographed in the Government Arsenal at Springfield, Mass. No. 7 has a 400-foot story on the work of the United States flying service in patroling the coast. The aerial sentry duty consists in watching for suspicious craft, sighting derelicts, etc.

Leatrice Joy in Paramount Comedies

LEATRICE JOY, one of the most charming young women in screen land, is making a hit in the Paramount single-reel comedies produced by the United States Motion Picture Corporation under the production name of Black Diamond Comedies.

Miss Joy is a shining example of the type of young artist who has won her way to the top of the ladder by hard work and study. For four years she has followed every requisite of the work needed by the artist in screen work, having first been given the incentive to go into this end of dramatics by Professor Renaud, in Paris, with whom she studied four years ago. It was this teacher who pointed out to her that her greatest laurels could be won in the silent drama, and she willingly began at the bottom, making her first big appearance in support of Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan," immediately after which production she became the leading woman in Black Diamond comedies.

Leatrice Joy.

Miss Joy recently celebrated her twentieth birthday. In the short period of time she has been playing leading parts she has won the hearts of thousands of screen lovers by reason of her inimitable comedienne qualifications and her appeal. Although her rise was not spectacular she has gained such experience in every phase of her work that she will be a favorite by reason of her versatility. Miss Joy is a product of the south and is the possessor of a most charming personality.

The Cinema a Power for Good

Some Remarkable Experiences of Its Power of Reformation.

By S. J. Banenjea.

Editor The Calcutta University Magazine.

THE cinema has come in for a good deal of abuse. Some hold that films of the "criminal type" are responsible for a lot of mischief. I know of at least half a dozen cases in which the accused pleaded that they had been led astray after witnessing certain films glorifying the deeds of some cracksmen.

That a vast deal of improvement has been effected by the several boards of film censors there is no gainsay. But something more remains to be done. A little more vigilance on the part of the manufacturers will yield the desired result.

It is well known that many highly cultured people do not visit cinema shows and even dissuade their friends from doing so. I must say that they must not condemn a potent factor for good unheard.

The cinema is a potent factor for good. We are shown too much of its seamy side, but people forget that it has a bright side too.

An acquaintance of mine was a drunkard. He was well-to-do and had a wife and two children. Every day he would drink at least six bottles. When drunk he would use awful language, beat the poor wife unmercifully and break things. In short, he was a terror to his family. Once or twice the unhappy wife had attempted to put an end to her troubles by committing suicide, but, owing to timely intervention, she could not carry out her resolve. No servant would stay for more than a month. Remonstrances were useless. The drunkard would tell his advisers "to mind their biz." Secret remedies were tried, but to no purpose. He was a business acquaintance of mine. One day, when he was a bit sober, I happened to call, and, in the course of conversation, requested him to visit a cinema theater, where a particularly strong program had been announcd. At his request, I accompanied him. There was one film which vividly described the fate of a drunkard. It interested him very much. When the performance was over he insisted on my accompanying him home. He spoke very little on the way. Entering his house, he walked straight into his private room and smashed all his wine bottles. Then he shook my hands effusively and observed:

"You are the best friend I have on earth. No more bottles for me. I am reformed."

The joy of the poor wife might well be imagined. I too was overjoyed.

Some five years have now passed away, but the ex-drunkard has never touched a drop. That film has saved a family from going to wrack and ruin. Is the cinema then no good at all?

A friend of mine was very wicked. He was responsible for the breaking up of two homes, and figured as a co-respondent in a case. One day I took him to a cinema theater, where a very fine film, depicting the wickedness of a treacherous friend, was being screened. It made a deep impression on him. For days afterward he would moralize on it. Some three months later he married and is now looked upon as a model husband. His wife is one of the happiest women on earth. That film was responsible for the change.

Another friend of mine was very irreligious. He would speak disparagingly of the Bible, deny the very existence of God himself, and shock his friends by blasphemous utterances. It struck me one day that perhaps a visit to a cinema theater would reform him. One evening I induced him to accompany me to a vioscope hall, where "The Life of Christ" was being screened. This film interested him much. Another day he himself went to see "The Life of Moses." He witnessed—as he himself confessed to me—some half a dozen "religious films," and was a changed man. He is a regular churchgoer now. He reads a chapter of the Bible every morning and freely gives to various religious societies. I should not be surprised if one day he should sell his properties and go to some heathen country as a missionary. What wrought this change? The films.

I need not multiply instances. Suffice to say that I have helped to cure over one dozen "bad cases" by my "drugless medicine."

I would urge my readers, who might come across "bad cases," to try my system of cure. I dare say they will be able to effect many cures. I would only ask them to move discreetly. They should take care that their patients do not discover their real object.

I am firmly convinced that the cinema is a potent factor for good. I dare say other experimenters on my lines agree with me.

The Lincoln Cycle

Review of Chapin Production as seen at the Strand Theater, by Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THIS IS practically a Life of Abraham Lincoln, and, while other good pictures have dealt with worthy parts of that life, this is comprehensive of the whole of the most marvelous career ever vouchsafed to an American. Like the worthy men of Ober-Ammergau, who try to live the lives of those holy characters they represent, Benjamin Chapin has tried to live again as far as possible the life of Abraham Lincoln. No sudden portrayal is this, but rather the product of nearly twenty years of study of a life of toil, and trial, of patience and victory.

For the American boy this is the noblest picture yet put upon the screen, here truth is stronger than fiction, no imaginary hero can ever inspire youth half as much as this real boy, this noble man, the moral strength of the Saviour of the Union is unfolded in a perfectly natural yet entrancing manner, with a fascination that holds the interest to an almost worshipful point.

In no other instance in history except that of the Saviour of the World is the humblest birth made a shrine of gratitude. As a manger cradled the Deity, so a log cabin sheltered the beginnings of a life of the greatest—destiny. Never was poverty so providential in its combinations; a noble godly mother, a warm-hearted boy, the minimum of books and shut in from a distracting world so that each might be concentrated upon the other, looking thus backward Chapin has wrought a wonderful work giving this chapter of the beginnings to build upon it the true life.

"All That I Am or Hope to Be I Owe to My Loving Mother."

Another title might very aptly be given to this part of the whole and most fittingly described "Motherhood." The well known Nancy Hanks here becomes a type of the truest woman-mother, her short life being shown in such a way to richly deserve the noble tribute paid her by her great son. Here it is easy to learn how the great spiritual side of the Emancipator was developed, taught by her that patience and service were cardinal virtues, that fighting was debasing and vulgar, his repeated digressions only caused a stronger repentance when face to face with her, and the horror of having offended her so filled his soul, that on her dying bed he promises her that he will "never fight again," a promise he kept save and only when to do so was as the avenger of the wronged, or the deliverer of the oppressed. Thus the mother-teacher prepared for the world a champion whose weapons were to patiently serve and deliver. The pictures of the boy Abe in almost idolatrous worship of his mother's grave form a small yet telling portion of that period of his life which the author did well not to omit.

"My Father—He Taught Me to Fight—But Only as a Last Resort."

At first there might seem to be a contradiction between the teachings of the father and mother, but, when these are broughe in their proper perspective by the incidents presented, it is easy to see how truthfully Lincoln could attribute to his parents the value of each of their teachings. Big, strong, illiterate Tom Lincoln could not understand why young Abe loved books, to him they were idleness; he could see nothing but work, so Abe must work and his books be thrown away. Sadly he parted with his books, cheerily he went to work for his ten cents a day.

At this point comes the incident which is the turning point in the career of both father and son. Abe's employer would buy part of Tom Lincoln's farm and bringing him the necessary paper to sign he falsely includes the whole farm. Abe is able to tell his father that what the neighbor read was not what was written, the falsity is thus exposed by the boy's ability to read and the father's first great tribute to young Abe is a worthy one as he tells his neighbor "Either you or Abe is telling a lie and it isn't Abe" and in the fight which ensues Abe is able to procure the false document. From this time there is a new relationship between father and son, the thrown away books are restored, and young Abe enters upon a larger life.

"Myself." "To Mirror Lincoln Has Been My Life Work."—Chapin.

This is the section of the man Lincoln, here Chapin is able to do his best and favorite work. Personally possessed of a striking resemblance to Lincoln, Chapin is able to start with everything in his favor, to live the part not to act it was his ambition and he has succeeded; his portrayal of Lincoln is almost uncanny in its realism; he seems to live as Lincoln lived, to look like him and to think and act like him, and we are richer by his years of experience; he gives us a true Lincoln. How delightfully easy and natural is this Lincoln of the screen, how perfectly at home, how manly, patient and kind.

As a man meeting the men of his times with a strange, quiet dignity fitting the position he occupied, as a man meeting his old-time neighbor and cousin as he comes to the White House, as a father over indulgent to the pranks of his two boys, whose escapades he condones and corrects, everywhere, and at all times, the Lincoln of Chapin is an attractive and powerful personality; quiet and yet inspiring.

"The Call to Arms."

Never was such a wonderful combination of history and the immediate times, the parallel is striking and will make this portion of this series the most timely piece of patriotism possible. The impatience of the statesmen of the times are brought out in striking contrast to the calm self-control of the President; the contrary predictions, the veiled threats, the concealed accusations, the torrents of advice truly caused the great man to exclaim: "I am the most advised man in the world; what I need is support, not advice." And now the crisis, Fort Sumter has been fired upon, the people are raging at the seeming inactivity of the President who, sending for the chief of staff, hands him an already calmly prepared call for the first 75,000 men; the "man of the hour" had not been unmindful of his office, but observing his mother's advice and his own promise, he did not want to fight, patience and service were first exercised, these having failed and his conscience approving he violated not the oath made to her on her death bed; he must needs now, however, as his father taught him, "fight only as a last resort." The world knows the rest.

Thanks, Benjamin Chapin, you have served your country well in giving out this wonderful representation of one of the greatest of lives, the life of Lincoln as given upon the printed pages will always be a source of information of endless profit, but they are not read by all; all, all will see the pictures, all will be thankful. There is no greater personality, there is no greater picture, there is no greater theme, there is no loftier inspiration than that which is here placed before all the people, especially before that great army of American boys whose lives will be moulded in richer parts because of this picture the which not to see it is a sin.

Try Colorado Backgrounds

Secretary of State Suggests Mesa Verde Park as a Location for Novel Film Pictures.

POSSIBLY some feature company will be interested in the suggestion that Mesa Verde Park, Colorado, offers backgrounds of an unusual sort for motion pictures. In a personal letter to one of the staff James R. Noland, Secretary of State, writes:

"We have in the southwestern part of Colorado a national park, listed as the Mesa Verde park. It is the former habitation of the cliff dwellers and scores of old houses have been cleaned out. The surrounding scenery is beyond description. I am confident that arrangements can be made with the Federal Government to locate one or more stories in the park, as the Government as well as the state is interested in advertising this unique reservation."

Mr. Noland is an old newspaper man who has dabbled in the film game a little, and doubtless he would be glad to aid any company in obtaining the necessary permission. He should be addressed James R. Noland, Secretary of State, Denver, Col.

ARTIST COTTON JOINS GOLDWYN.

Considerable strength has been added to the Goldwyn producing staff through the addition of William H. Cotton to the group of brilliant men whose best efforts are concentrated upon the direction of Goldwyn pictures. Mr. Cotton is one of the most successful of the younger American artists, having already achieved an international reputation as a portrait painter, and won distinction as well by his decorative drawings and tone-studies.

In the Goldwyn studios his services will be along the same lines, broadly considered, as those of Hugo Ballin and Everitt Shinn, whose art direction has strengthened the work at the Goldwyn studios during the last four months.

EFFICIENCY.

THOSE of us who are engaged in the musical end of the moving picture business will do well to pause once in a while and ask ourselves the question, "How can we become more efficient in our work?" What is this efficiency of which we are continually hearing so much?

The power of doing one's best and most in the shortest time and easiest way to the satisfaction of all concerned, that is efficiency. It would surely be an excellent thing to meditate and see if we are accomplishing the results we should, with the effort expended. If not why not?

For the purpose of occasionally measuring ourselves by certain authorized standards of living we are placing before you a few of the questions which may be applied to advantage daily, regarding the technic of living.

Do you like your work?

Have you learned the best, quickest and easiest way of doing it?

Have you learned the science of planning your day ahead?

Are you saving money systematically?

As a means of efficiency study do you use magazines on self improvement and on the technical or vocational side of your work?

Do you study yourself, your greatest ambitions or aspirations, your capacities and drawbacks, your past and present advancement, your technic of skill and personal character?

Are all your expenses standardized?

These few questions may or may not be applied to our personal lives. They are, however, given that we may see wherein we fall short in our business relations.

FRANK E. KNEELAND.

THE OLD VERSUS THE NEW.

When we think of the moving picture show of but a few years ago, it causes a shiver to travel rapidly up and down the spinal column. The "Black Hole of Calcutta" had nothing on those old theaters, as we would say in the language of the street. They were everything a theater should not have been, and yet they were the best the town afforded, and every town possessed one or more. Why? Because mothers and fathers were content to let their children inhabit such places, and even enjoyed going themselves, occasionally. Generally in these small town houses or "nickelodeons" as they became known later, there were no ventilating systems whatsoever, and often a wood fire raged in one corner of the room. The place was equipped with the cheapest machine possible, hence the films were so uneven that it was a small wonder people ever emerged with any eyesight at all. Children and grown-ups were allowed to indulge in refreshments, which had a muffling effect on the noise of the so-called music as it poured forth from an old square in the corner of the room, which had seen its best days some years previous.

Often have I seen a girl with a book—some tender romance, perhaps—seated at the piano, jamming down any keys that might get in the way of her fingers, but progressing exceedingly well with the story as she diffused sounds Straus, Ornstein or Strawinsky might have paled to hear.

The music? Well, it was a thing to forget as soon as possible. But now let us look for a moment into the moving picture theater of today, not of the future, but an institution which is here permanently. We pass through the spacious lobby into the autditorium, equipped with several thousand orchestra chairs and surely everything in the way of hangings the eye might delight in. Before us is stationed an orchestra of nearly fifty players augmented by an organ capable of producing hundreds of wonderful combinations. Here we also hear artists of international reputation, supported by the orchestra, together with startling scenic effects, that the composition rendered may be transmitted to the audience under the best conditions possible.

You say "Isn't it marvelous?" and quickly glance at me from out the corner of your eye to see whether or not you have been indulging in a delightful little dream, and relapse into throughts of the old picture show we used to attend in contrast to the one we are now gazing at, where each screen actor has his or her theme in the orchestra and where each bit of atmosphere or action is reinforced by appropriate music.

As we watched that tremendous audience sitting almost silent before the screen and apparently so absorbed in thought that the spirit of silence seemed to communicate itself to those portions of the program where no picture was being shown. The keen, alert manager has observed this and has made a special point of giving to his audience at these points the best music possible, something which compelled their attention as the films had done. Had this same manager used light, trashy music at this juncture, we should have found an audience who persisted in trying to drown the orchestra by their chatter. Hence it follows that cheap, obvious music cannot be too quickly suppressed by the manager who desires success, since it plays a most important part in the entertainment. With the attentive audience has come the surprising revelation that the music which the "man in the street" likes best in the long run is the same as that which the "high-brow" has placed the stamp of approval on.

So it develops that the modern moving picture audience finds itself in a better mood to appreciate Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford or Charles Chaplin, after having listened to a Wagnerian overture or a movement from one of the classic symphonies.

Does a theater managed on so pretentious a scale pay? New York says it does. The old-time "movie" is a thing of the past, and the new photoplay theater enters on an area of greater works.

INSURES FULL HOUSE FOR SECOND SHOW.

By entertaining the "hold out" with good music this exhibitor found that he could hold twice as many people in his lobby as he could without it. He always had a good house for his second show and the slight expense of a victrola, even if bought on the instalment plan, is a very small item when compared to the hundreds of dollars that it will add to the box office in a few months' time.

We are indeed glad to learn that this plan has been tested out with success in a house the size of the Alhambra. Within the past month we have mentioned this idea to several exhibitors who have complained that they were unable to hold their crowds behind closed doors from show to show. Do not imagine that a talking machine the kind you may be able to pick up some place for a few dollars or cents with several scratchy ragtime records is the kind that is going to hold your public. Decidedly not; the public has arrived at the point where they will be satisfied only with the best. The theaters which are offering the best in music and pictures are the ones that are making the money. This department will be glad to submit a list of records to any exhibitor interested in this plan.

SCORE TO "THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE"

The arrangement of the score for the film production of "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle," now being exhibited at the Broadway Theater, was made by Mr. Hugo Reisenfeld, of the Rialto. The arrangement is an excellent one and is as follows:

Athalia Overture, Mendelsohn; Romance, Grunfeld; Le Retour, Bizet; Dreams, Greig; Nocturne, Karganoff; Cradle Song, Brahms; Chanson Triste, Tschaikowski; Serenade, Rubinstein; Intermezzo, Whelpley; Liebestreu, Brahms; Adieux, Karganoff; Vain Suit, Brahms.

Advertising for Exhibitors

What Is Coming.

RECENT events in New York State merely anticipate what will presently be happening all over the country. Congress has appropriated seven billion dollars for war purposes. Apart from this each state will be put under great additional expense in connection with the war, and it has all got to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers. No one can find fault with the condition. It is not of our seeking and one that must be met, but taking a proper share of the burden and being made the goat are two different matters entirely, and unless we check this tendency to overburden the picture business, many exhibitors are going to be put out of the running through an unfair share of the taxation. There is a disposition on the part of the public to regard the motion picture business in all its branches as an inexhaustible source of wealth. As Sam Spedon has already pointed out, those in the business are partly responsible in that, in the days of prosperity, they bragged too much. They are not alone responsible in part for the belief, but they are also to blame for the conditions today through coaxing in an excess of capital. But the damage has been done and the only thing to do now is to keep the mischief down as much as possible. Several times censorship bills have been killed in New York State, and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has done effective work in preventing hurtful legislation. But there are two classes of men who want to see censorship; the men who are happy only when they are interfering with the affairs of others and that widely contrasting class of men who see in any form of censorship a source of graft to their own profit. The people of the state have been educated to the real meaning of censorship and its attendant evils, and they will have none of it. But they regard with little or no suspicion a bill ostensibly a revenue measure. The motion picture business is affluent. Let it do its bit and a little more. It can afford to. Yet come of those behind the bill have virtually admitted that the censorship rider is the real object of the bill. That the tax features, added to other taxes, will work great harm to the business does not concern either the reformers or the grafters. One class sees only the abolition of what it pleases them personally to regard as a menace. The other side sees th rich pickings to be found on the expiring industry. The tax feature, according to statements, is largely a blind, a device to hide the real object of the bill, but because the ostensible object of the measure seems worthy, many will consider the bill itself worthy who would think otherwise were the matter fully explained.

The exhibitor has in his screen a medium second only to the newspapers as a means of shaping public opinion; indeed in some quarters the screen will prove even more efficacious than the newspapers, since certain classes of persons do not read the newspapers for political news who will see facts on the screen. Properly used, the screen could be employed to present the truth in such a way that no politician would dare face his constituency after having voted for a measure—any measure—that is unfair. But the trouble is that few exhibitors use the screen fully. Many use the set of censorship slides supplied by this paper. Not only should every exhibitor in a threatened district use these slides, but he should supplement these by argument more directly applicable to his own locality and clientele. He should use the names of the local law givers, he should employ arguments that will appeal to his patrons. The censor slides are a series of brief arguments that contain in concentrated form the entire range of argument, but the set will be twice as effective if, after they are run, an extra slide flashes that asks, "Is Jim Smith (the local representative) so narrow-minded that he will vote for the censorship of innocent amusement?" That puts it squarely up to Smith personally in the minds of the people who can throw him into the political discard

There is going to be an epidemic of freak legislation in the next year or so and much of it will be directed toward the pictures merely because they are so widespread and popular an amusement. Get your lines ready now. Work with your opposition and others for a common weal and put ginger into your campaigns. Give what you say the local touch. Show others the strength of the picture theater and presently the persecution of the picture business will cease, and persecution is what much current legislation amounts to. There has been too much indifference shown by exhibitors, but now is the time to wake up if we are to wake up this side of the financial hereafter.

Complete.

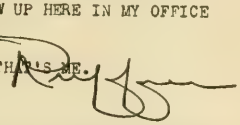
The other afternoon we went over to Morristown, N. J., and the entertainment committee took us into the Park Theater for the once ovr. It has a projection room that would please even Brother Richardson, except that it is too light, and it qualifies as a regular theater in every way, having one of the largest stages in the state. It runs vaudeville Wednesdays and Saturdays and features the rest of the time save when a combination worth while comes through that part of the state The house program is four pages 3½ inches by 6½ inches. There is a drawn design for the cover with lion supporters in compliment to the owner, James Lyons. There is a date in the front page panel, an over-all date inside, and then each day is dated, which is the way things should be done. The back page is given to the underline, but it would do the house more good to run chat of the house and its merits, even though the house speaks for itself. The front page was contributed by the man who did the interior decorations, which is a hint for other managers. There is a comfortable smoking room for the men and a parlor for the ladies, but it does not seem to have occurred to Mr. Lyons to tell them about it. They know about them, of course, but drive home the fact with a well-written paragraph and they will realize that it is a convenience and not a matter-of-course. It sizes up differently when seen in print.

Ruff's Town Crier.

We've never reproduced one of Ralph Ruffner's notes, for he is foxy and writes on yellow paper, but this time he happened to use white on his "Town Crier" style, and we are going to run it "as is." Ruff does his own stenographer stunt, and he is scared stiff of the upper and lower shift keys, so he throws the gears in on all caps and plays safe. This kills off the commas, but he manages to make it. He remarks:

I AM SURPRISED, DOC, THAT YOU DO NOT RECEIVE MORE STUFF FROM THE BIG THEATRES OF THE COUNTRY. HAVE THEY NO ADVERTISING MEN? IF THEY HAVE, WHAT ARE THEY DOING? IS THEIR OUTPUT SO GOOD THEY KEEP IT IN THE SAFE? THE LITTLE FELLOWS WANT TO KNOW WHAT THE BIG GUYS ARE DOING AND WHAT IT IS THAT MAKES 'EM BIG. IT'S A CINCH THEY HAVEN'T ALL GONE TO THE FRONT. THERE'S A LITTLE FELLOW UP HERE IN MY OFFICE NOW WHO WANTS TO KNOW.

THAT'S ME.



And this is something that has puzzled us, though in a general way we think we know the answer. In the first place few of the large houses do the intensive advertising that the little theaters, from necessity, offer. They are generally working to larger clienteles and feel that they can draw sufficient crowds. The new York houses, for example, use comparatively little space; more than the dramatic houses, but eight to twelve column is plenty for the few that advertise at all heavily. And in the second place the large house is less interested in any one problem. To some extent we think they look down upon the small house manager. But the one fact looming large is that they do not send their material in. We wish they would, along with Ruffner.

For Bennie.

It is violating no confidence to say that the sayings of Douglas Fairbanks are the most widely quoted program fills of the moment, and we know it will not hurt the feelings of Bennie Ziedman to give publicity to that fact. The reason is that it makes good reading matter that will fit in anywhere. There is no advertisement for the production, but merely stuff that would bring column rates from most newspapers if offered in the regular way. This is the secret of good press stuff. Get the indirect advertisement. Most press agents are too eager for advertising to get advertisement without paying for it.

A New Dress.

The Winona (Minn.) Theater News, published by the Colonial Amusement Company in the interest of its three houses, has put on a new dress with its thirteenth issue, scoring hoodoos. It now carries an 11 by 16 inch page, four-page issue, with the program on the back. Printed on good book instead of the cheaper news, it can give full value to fine screen cuts, which will appeal especially to the feminine element. It is an expensive issue, but an attractive one, and the foreign advertising probably keeps the cost within reason.

Something New.

The cover of the Third Street Theater, Easton, of which we recently spoke, is one of the new Kraus covers, which explains why the front page was so finely printed as to show up the inside printings. The Easton printers are a pretty poor lot and the Kraus program showed them up worse than ever, which leads to the suggestion that the home printing be carefully looked after that it may not disgrace the cover. From an exhibitor's point of view this program cover is a better buy than the colored offset covers. They are four-page sheets, 4 1-4 by 8 1-4, printed on the front only with a portrait of a star in brown, evidently rotogravure. The cuts are brilliant and striking and they mean something that no colored cover, no matter how attractive, can possibly mean. There is nothing but a line around the cut and the name of the star below, and nothing should be added in the home printing. Instead a note on the second page should explain that they are purposely left as they are that they may be framed without cutting, and to the picture fan they are as well worth framing as a carbon print. The stock is a good quality, deep cream and yet they cost but $2.50 a thousand because they are run off in million lots. Thirty-five titles are now ready but another thirty-five are in preparation. If cuts are used inside they should be run in black rather than in brown to avoid competition with a grade of work the home town printer cannot possibly hope to equal, but if this is done you will have a program you can sell. You can increase the price of foreign advertising fifty per cent. with a program such as this because they will be saved and be looked over, remaining a permanent advertisement. One house in a small city near New York is using 4,000 a week, which speaks for itself. To get the most money print the foreign advertising on the second page, your program on the third and house talk and more ads on the back. Then you can point out to the advertiser that he is on the permanent half of the sheet, which is worth the extra price to him.

Long and Narrow.

Edwin A. Halberg, of the Lincoln, Port Angeles, Wash., writes that he is interested in this department and wants to show a few of the things he has done. Port Angeles is tucked away in the northwest corner of the state and boasts a population of four thousand, when you count the Siwash Indians as inhabitants. The house is a 600-seat theater with a 5,000 pipe organ, and plays six changes a week. Mr. Halberg runs largely to long and narrow advertisements, column width and well down the page.

In the first example shown, a little more than half of the advertisement is used in order to balance with the others. The original drops the full page length and goes on to tell about the attraction, but Miss Barriscale was new to Port Angeles patrons, and Mr. Halberg wanted to make her known. The emphasis upon the eyes is due to the fact that her picture was Bullets and Brown Eyes. The next two show a favorite make up, using angled twelve-point rules for panel work. It takes about two picas from the column width, but in return it gives almost a two-column display. Another example, not shown, used a cut at the top and then ran into the pica panels. The device is distinctly good. It not only attracts attention, but it divides the announcement into distinct paragraphs, each of which is assimilated by itself. There is a psychological reason for such a division in that when presented separately facts are more readily retained than when offered in a group in precisely the same way that one word is more apt to be remembered than the seven-word sentence. Compare these with the Theda Bara advertisement and you can see how it works. Something the same effect is gained in the Bara ad. through the large type, but the result is not quite as good. The last example is a two elevens that runs half n inch over, or a short two twelves. Here again effective use is made of the twelve-point stuff. If it were not for the fact that Washington is so dry that Tom North emigrated, we would suggest that the printer be invited out for a drink. He has done his share well. Two other doubles are sent, both showing the same general line of rule work, which could be made a house trade mark in time. Enough is shown here to give your own printer the idea, and please ask him to note that there are no solid boxes of twelve-point. Either there are two sides of hairline or the rule is broken as in that two-column display. If you have to buy the rule yourself, have it cut to your most used sizes and see to it that no one else gets the same stuff. Mr. Halberg makes his debut with a distinctly good idea. We hope he comes in with more.

Post Cards Pay Best.

We have pointed out before that if you use post cards your Uncle Samuel will supply you with printing stock free if you buy the stamps of him and now R. J. Relf, of the Star, Decorah, Iowa, writes that for the money spent he finds that postcards give him the greatest returns. The card he uses is printed in red and black. He gets red for the date

Song Books.

The Globe theater, Woodstock, South Africa, must have been celebrating something lately, for it sends over a four sheet song book of war songs "With the Compliments of the Season." But there is nothing to indicate whether Christmas or Easter was meant. There are six adaptations to well known airs, most of which carry a tag verse for the house. These two stanzas sung to The Sunshine of Your Smile give the idea:

Mr. Lloyd George has given us good cheer.
About the War, we've nothing now to fear.
Strong are our troops, and stronger is their will;
Gallant Allies, old England's with you still.

Chorus:
Whether on Land or Sea, or in the Air,
We'll do our best to help the Russian Bear.
We've got the Ships, we've got the money too;
We've got the Men, and we've got our Women true.

Why go to town at night and waste you rtime.
When at the "Globe" you've got a jolly time;
Pictures the best, that money can procure.
Our price is Sixpence, and a Bob, no more.

Chorus:
Give us your smile as you come through the door.
Happy the hearts who're at the "Globe" once more.
If you are pleased just tip your friends the wink.
Send them along, hey!!! we're sorry, "I don't think."

War paraphrases are always popular and this idea is timely. Most persons will sing the tag stanzas if only to see if they can and the message is driven home.

From the Parkway.

The Parkway, Baltimore, Md., has been a bit backward in sending in samples lately, but the other day they got in three. One example is a blotter for the kid matinees. It carries a monthly calendar with the Saturdays printed in red and programs for two of the special performances. Their idea of a kid matinee is one which entertains and amuses the children. There is one educational reel and the rest a couple of comedies and a five-reel feature that will appeal to the kiddies. When your own kid shows slump, look over the program and see if perhaps you have not tried to make it too educational. A card on rather heavy white stock lists coming attractions on one side and gives the showing times on the other. The third piece is a heart-shaped card of red for "The Valentine Girl." For this a glossy black ink would have been better. The black is not quite strong enough to fight the deep red.

Shamrockers.

The class in Program Writing will welcome another instalment of the Shamrock examples. It's a pity we cannot give Mr. Kay's entire announcement each week for a few weeks, for it is a lesson in personality writing, but here are some clips from the last issue of Shamrock Picture Talks:

This week's bill lands front page space this week.

It deserved the honor sooner. But in our three previous issues there were certain momentous matters which, for your own good, we deemed it best to spread boldly before your very eyes so you would at least grasp the more significant facts before you wearily tossed "Picture Talk" aside.

(Chorus of indignant voices: "We never do any such thing! We read "Picture Talk" with breathless interest, from kiver to kiver, every single week!")

(A thousand thanks, dear readers, a thousand thanks for those few words of simple praise! Make it TWO thousand thanks, if you like. WE'RE not pikers.)

This week things have changed. No special event demands that we arouse your enthusiasm to the boiling point.

Peerless Pearl White is now safely entering her fourth triumphant week of "Pearl of the Army."

"Peggy" is a glorious memory.

So this week's bill gets front-page space. * * *

The lid, ladies and gentlemen, comes off next Monday. It comes off abruptly, and is blown high and far, to return no more for the week.

"DAVY CROCKETT" MONDAY

Dustin Farnum is the lid-lifter. Dusty Farnum of the mighty physique and the friendly smile. He apears in "Davy Crockett," a picture we believe will stand everlastingly as his masterwork.

Now, every boy that knows anything at all knows that Davy Crockett was the greatest Indian fighter that ever drew a bead on a luckless redskin. The picture is about his life and adventures, and his one great love. It all happens way back in frontier days, when the untamed wilderness began at your doorstep. Many stirring things come about before that tremendous scene where Davy, through the long, bitter night, uses his good right arm as a bar of flesh and blood to hold the door against the onslaught of the ravenous wolves outside. A wonderful picture for redblooded folks is "Davy Crocket."

Metro Day, Tuesday.

On Tuesday, Edmund Breese returns in "The Shooting of Dan McGrue." It's a funny thing about Breese. Outside of Tully Marshall he's about the ugliest man on the screen—makes Bill Hart look like the hero of an Arrow Collar ad. But, nevertheless, everybody's strong for him, and it never seems a bit out of place when he wins some fair lady-love at the finish, as he usually does. This picture, of course, is taken from Robert W. Service's famous poem, which we're going to print on another page this week if we have room.

Notice how clean and bright everything looks since we began painting up? We're nearly through, now. Then we'll start improving something else.

WANTED—A BLONDE.

We Want a Girl Whose Beauty Runs to Blondness for Some Special Work This Week. Fair Pay. Object NOT MATRIMONY. Phone, Write or Call

That last is a display ad, and hints at some special stunt. It all makes for talk and probably the West End section was on the lookout for a blonde until the lady showed up. This chatty style makes for constant readers when the style is unforced.

Elaborate.

Roanoke, Va., which started as a boom town and kept it up, has a combination program that is much ahead of the usual publication of this type. It covers four houses and is gotten out by a local concern. There are well-executed portraits of the stars on the front page, and the issue to hand has a four-page insert in color as well as American flags on the front and back inside covers. It is unusually good printing for a picture program.

Helps Recruiting.

Gordon F. (100%) Fullerton, of the Liberty, Seattle, is the first to write of recruiting propaganda. Probably in a short time most houses will be running slides, he under date of April 2 writes:

Now that patriotism and preparedness are on every tongue and headlining every edition of the newspapers, we have also introduced it on our screen. We are running three slides, colored in red, white and blue, at the request of the local recruiting office. They are thrown on the screen at each performance and read as follows:

No. 1. "How about that preparedness parade last summer of 50,000 strong? Can we count on YOU or were you only shouting? Seattle population 330,000. First battalion needs only 300 men. Help us get them."

No. 2. "YOUNG MAN, is your patriotism the shouting kind only, or do you mean it? If you mean it, SHOW IT and join the First Battalion NOW."

No. 3. American flag, red, white and blue, with picture of President Wilson.

Every Sunday we have a noon concert given by Oliver G. Wallace, our master organist, one number of which is a song. Last Sunday the song number chosen by Mr. Wallace was "Wake Up, America." As each line was played the words were flashed on the velvet curtain, above and in front of the organist, so that the audience could supply the words to the music. The music itself was very stirring and the combination of music and words on the curtain, and the spirit of the day, made this number a tremendous hit. In fact, so enthusiastic was the applause that Mr. Wallace had to play the chorus over again before he could give the balance of his concert.

In using the screen care should be taken not to give offense. It is better to do nothing at all than to make enemies for the house. It will be noted that Mr. Fullerton pins his slides to the purely local issue of building up the Seattle company.

We'll Move to Utah.

Bully for Utah! It is the first state, so far as we know, to come out flat-foot against pseudo patriotism as distinguished from the real thing. The last issue of Real Reels says:

The mails are full of circular letters and the trade journals carry ads, "For immediate delivery. About 50 feet of film of the American Flag waving." The general trend of these announcements is that every live exhibitor waves the Flag while the orchestra plays the "Star Spangled Banner" and the audience arises and cheers until the plaster comes off the ceiling.

Cheap stuff, boys. Cheap stuff!

Don't commercialize the Grand Old Flag. Such methods are offensive to many patriotic Americans in these days of war.

In this connection, at a recent meeting of the Theater Managers' Association of Utah it was unanimously agreed that the projection of the Stars and Strieps on the screen accompanied by patriotic music on the part of the windjammers and horsehair scrapers in the pit be taboo.

Think it over. If you can't "enthuse your audiences without waving the Flag, get better stuff.

George Editor Carpenter has written many things we have liked, but he never did better than that. Flag waving is the cheapest kind of cheap stuff. We wish we were in Utah. It's because we are patriotic that we have to be used as a "come-on" by some who are not. And here are more words of wisdom and good cheer that come close to the mark:

The pessimist has the floor in divers localities. He affirms that now war has been declared that business will be all shot to pieces and that the motion picture industry will go to the demnition bow-wows! He is carrying around with him a face that would sour a pasteurized creamery. He is talking of canceling his good stuff, firing his efficient help and generlaly cutting down expenses.

Cheer up, for we have a hunch. Personally we have passed through a couple of panics and an epoch of hard times. This is what we observed:

The fellow who makes the money during hard times is the cheap restaurant man. He makes more money then than he ever did because the poor man must eat, and there are a lot of fellows who cut out the high-priced places and patronize the lunch counter.

War is not going to bring hard times. If it does it won't be the 10 and 15-cent amusement caterer who will suffer. The two-dollar show may have hard sledding and there will be a lot of high-price theater patrons who will acquire the motion picture habit under the stress of economy. Don't worry, the dimes will continue to flow in as usual.

Do you remember ten years ago when money was so tight you could not even get your own money out of the bank? The Broadway theaters were bang up against it, but the vaudeville and burlesque theaters were crowded more than usual. We had ways of getting the actual figures in those days.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing adressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses by critized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Exactly.

SENDING in a couple of experiences, a correspondent adds, "These two incidents, to my mind, merely go to show the illogical methods employed and the conflicting statements made by the different heads of the same company." The incidents cited are these:

> Some time since Louella Parsons published an interview with the "Keystone" people in which she said that it was stated that Mack Sennett made the statement that "if he could find a writer who could turn out scenarios without revision he could name his own price." In the face of this, Mr. Del Ruth refuses to consider any outside work whatever. I rise to ask the question as to how Mr. Sennett expects to find his paragon (for such a paragon may exist) as long as he refuses to look for him.
> Some time since I submitted a synopsis to the "Famous Players-Lasky Corporation." It hapepned to be a drama of American life, with a natural ending. It was returned with a very favorable criticism attached, signed by Mr. Turnbull, "per A. L." The only criticism was regarding the ending, their view being that it must have a happy ending. Otherwise it was all right. He intimated that if I would revise the ending and re-submit, that it would receive consideration. I did so, giving them the ending desired. The scenario was resubmitted with the attached statement that it was revised in accordance with their criticism. They held it four weeks and returned it without even a rejection slip being enclosed.

That is one of the things that makes it difficult to get stories from free lances. The real free lances are no longer writing photoplays. They have become disgusted with the attitude of the studios toward the outside writers, and some day, when the studios realize the necessity for having stuff from the free lances, there is going to be a tough time getting them back. Mr. Del Ruth, however, is consistent in that he refuses to read the work of the free lance. He does not want the stuff and he does not spend his time coaxing the free lances to submit that the studio staff may freshen their imaginations, but some day he is going to need the now-despised writers and he'll find that the best of them have been snapped up by other companies, who have developed beginners into authors. History is apt to repeat itself, and once before it was found that the studio staffs were costing a lot of money. It may happen again.

The Lasky incident finds repetition in perhaps half a hundred other letters received in the past few months. Writers take seriously the comments of Mr. Turnbull's staff, where the only real criticism is that which reads "enclosed find release slip. Please sign and return." That means something definite, but editorial criticism, as a rule, is not worth a whoop. It is a one-man opinion from a very limited point of view. The then head of the Lubin company told Lawrence McCloskey that he thought a certain story he had sent in was so much below grade that it damaged our reputation, and yet is was "On the Lazy Line" which C. Jay Williams "saw" and made into one of the best little comedies of the year.

Both sorts of "encouragement" are wrong, both the Del Ruth "no admittance" and the Turnbull criticism. Both are discouraging to real writers, the latter even more than the former, since it holds out hope, only to be dashed.

The Difference.

It is well to remember that while in drama you can trust to your climax, in comedy you must keep them laughing as they go along. In drama the entire action should lead up to the climax, piling crisis upon crisis until the resolution comes, but in comedy you cannot have one big laugh. It must be one long laugh, which is vastly different.

Libraries.

Unless you have an exceptional library of your own and can add to it any volume you desire, learn to use the public library. Get acquainted with the index system and learn to dig out the books that will help you from the mass of seemingly meaningless titles. Store your mind with facts; all sorts of facts. Read medical works and books of travel, biographies, and works on mechanics. Learn how things are done. Even the knowing how may help you to an idea. But don't read with the idea that you are studying. That spoils it all. Read for amusement. If you make work out of it you'll not remember half so much. Read with interest and not by rote and it will stick by you long after you think you have forgotten. You never really forget anything. It is merely that you cannot remember it, so put it down in the most attractive form and you'll be more apt to recall it.

Real Authors.

Real authors are inventors of ideas. They are men who do better work today than they did last year and who will do still better next year and the year after. They are not men who write one or two good ideas and then stop. Almost anyone can write at least one good story and some can write two or three before they stop, but the trained man keeps on writing, and the more he writes the better the stuff he turns out. Don't call yourself an author, even in your thoughts, until you can stand the acid test of time, and by then you won't call yourself an author, but you'll be a writer.

Consistency.

Go to the theater, look at some of the stories you see on the screen, and then come away, determined that your own scripts shall be better planned for consistency. Learn now to guard against breaks and you'll be ready for the time when breaks will count against you. Photoplay patrons do not enjoy the inconsistencies any more than you do. They patronize the theaters in spite of the irritating breaks. When they revolt, more careful writers and producers will be in demand.

Footage.

Every now and then a new angle does creep up, and the other day a puzzled author sprung this:

> I know you can't tell how much footage a story will make, but how much story should I write. I read the other day that a certain company made 19,000 feet of —— ——, and the 5,000 feet released will contain just the essence of the story. Do I have to write enough to make three or four times the necessary footage in orner to let them boil it down?

The question is not as foolish as it may sound to you, because the same statement, with varying footages and titles, can be found in almost any issue of this paper. It is no wonder that the beginner seems puzzled. As a matter of fact, most of the excess is due to doubling the negative, or making two or more negatives of the same scene. The rest is overelaboration of the original story in an effort to make it more striking, and this excess clogs the story to the point where perspective is lost and a botch is made of the cutting.

For some time one of the Lubin directors working under Arthur Hotaling used to take our split reel stuff and try to make it into full reels because he liked the story. Then the interpolated stuff would be cut out and some of our own material with it, and the result would be a lop-sided and uninteresting picture. It was never possible to cut back to the original script because of the material grafted onto the old action. It is the same with the overdeveloped feature. It is seldom or ever possible to pull it back to the original limits for the interpolated business, and the story will run into the original scenes, and to take out the deadwood necessitates the amputation of some of the original material and the covering up with leaders.

It is enough that the author writes enough material to make a proper footage if the story is properly handled. A really competent director will make only this and no more—but there are few really competent directors.

A really adequate story is a thing so nicely balanced that any change will throw it out of perspective. It should be complete as it stands and be left untouched. We will have them made that way some time. Back in the old days, when it was considered scandalous for a director to turn in more than 1,200 feet for a one reel, we got far more consistent pictures than we do today. Pray for that day to come again.

"All Rights."

Hearst's International has an interest in Essanay's "The Truffiers." Samuel Merwin wrote the story and sold it to the Cosmopolitan. In all good faith he sold the picture rights to Essanay, but the Hearst company showed that it had purchased all rights, and declared in on the Essanay production. Before you make your old fiction into photoplay be certain that you have the right to offer the material. Most companies have rather involved release forms which must be signed, and these carry all rights. The safest plan is to make certain that the picture rights are expressly reserved to you or that the release specifically reads "First publication rights only," which is an even better form, though few companies will consent to make this release to the author unless his standing is such that he can dictate terms.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From Australia.

H. Brow, Sidney, New South Wales, Australia, writes:

I hope you won't think I have too much nerve butting in on you from clear over this side of the world. (That's the kind of nerve I like.—Ed.). I have been receiving the Moving Picture World for some time. Have been operating for the past six years, and at long distance having watched you and your department, I take the liberty of telling you how I appreciate it. I have gained a great deal of knowledge through the department, the like of which does not exist in the whole of Australia.

Will you kindly tell me what the working conditions and wages are in the U. S. A.; also something concerning the examination an operator must go through before he can secure a license? We have no recognized union over here, still we cannot complain as wages are from twenty to twenty-five dollars per week for a six-hour shift, and each shift has an assistant, the same being a boy about eighteen years old, who receives $6.50 per week. The work of the assistant consists of keeping the box (Operating room.—Ed.) clean, sharpening carbons, cleaning and oiling the machine, threading up, and carboning the lamp; also he does the rewinding. A good assistant is allowed to take the machine and finish the reel while the operator starts the next and dissolves one picture into the other. I am not much in favor of large pictures, but out here our public demands a big picture, and as they are the ones who pay, hence have the right to get what they want. You doubtless will smile when I tell you we have a lot of shows with a 32 foot picture. In fitting up my present show I stuck up for a 20 foot picture, but the management would not listen to that. The very smallest they would concede was 22 feet. We had not been running long, however, before we got complaints that our picture was too small (It was small besides the 32 footer), and we were compelled to increase it to 18x24, and that is how it now stands. It would be larger only we cannot make it so without pulling our stage to pieces, and as we have our screen set in a garden effect, with fountains and statues, it cannot be done. We have two Pathe Exhibition Model projectors. In my opinion it is the best machine there is, and we have had a lot of them to choose from. Am working from city council current, which is 240 A.C. Have two Phoenix motor generator sets direct coupled, capable of delivering 80 amperes of 70 volt current, which passes through two 70 volt, 80 ampere rheostats with shunt regulators. My throw is 100 feet. I run a 65 volt arc, and pull 60 amperes. Get a very good picture without any worry. We dissolve one picture into the next, and everything works like clockwork. The rheostats are my own make; also the dimmers for house lighting, which are controlled from the box. I installed the whole thing myself.

A man like yourself could make quite a name for himself if he came over here. Try and get a vacation and come over for a look-see. Can assure you you would not regret it.

Could I get one of the Handbooks here, or would I have to send to New York for it? In closing I wish you everything of the best and all the success you certainly deserve.

I would like to visit Australia. I have always had a curiosity to see your country, but it is a long, long way to Melbourne, and I am afraid I will have to keep right on wishing.

As to the working conditions over here, why it is almost impossible to give you any adequate information, because they vary widely with the different cities, towns and sections. Operators receive all the way from $10 to $50 a week, though very few get the latter figure. A fair average for city work is $20 to $25. In small towns it averages considerably lower. In some of the Pacific coast towns the avergae is higher.

As to the examination, you will be able to get a pretty good line on that from an article which will probably be published in the department before this letter is.

As to those big pictures, why I have expressed my opinion on that subject so often that it is hardly worth while repeating. No, I don't think the audience ought to be allowed to have what they want, when what they want is very bad for them, or rather, for their eyes. There is far, far more eye strain with a 32 foot picture than there is with a smaller one; this for various reasons, which have already been explained many times in the department.

I shall be glad to hear from you at any time, Brother Brow, or from other Australian operators or managers. I believe inter-communication of this kind brings us closer together, and helps us to realize that the world is not so large after all.

Voiced His Sentiments.

From C. W. Reed, Columbus, Ohio, we have the following:

Your editorial in a recent issue, voiced my sentiments to a tee. The operator who persists in punching holes in the finish of the reels entrusted to his care, in order to warn himself of its approaching end is not one who is working for betterment in our branch of the business. Punching may be done away with by the use of either of the two following systems, viz.: the change over sign on the finish and start of each reel. The following is the system I am now using on all productions except those put out by the Thomas A. Edison studios, releasing through Kleine, Seelig and Essanay, who, in their features, use the change-over sign.

End of reel No. 1 Subtitle: Do you want to stay here and take care of baby? I am sure she would be safe in your care.

Scene: Girl bouncing baby on knee.

Scene fades.

And so on through the entire production I am projecting. Punch marks certainly do seriously mar the production, and they are not really necessary. The Edison studios are to be commended for putting into operation the first practical change-over sign. But there is still one objection to their plan as now used, viz.: the color of the subtitles are seldom the same. As like as not at the end of one reel one will be red and the beginning of reel two amber, which tends to confuse the audience, which is apt to think it is about to read another title. I would like to hear more from operators on this important and vital question. The foregoing samples of punching were clipped from a Bluebird film, "God's Crucible." It was a new film, as you can see. It came direct from the Cincinnati office. I should have thought they could easily have traced it, being such new film.

Brother Reed is not very clear in some parts of his letter, but perhaps you can "get him." It is quite possible for the operator to fix up a change-over sign for each production, but it is an outrage to compel him to do it. The manufacturer should incorporate the sign in the film, as Edison is now doing. But the absence of a sign most emphatically does NOT justify the operator in outraging the property placed in his care. And what do you think of the samples presented?—first run film too!

The Baird Machine.

During the past year the Baird Motion Picture Machine Company, manufacturers of the Baird projector, have not been standing still. Robert J. Emory, president of the company, is the presiding mechanical genius at the factory over in Newark, N. J. And "Bob" is not only a man of more than ordinary mental capacity, a corking good mechanic, a student of optics, as applied to the projector, and a machinist par excellence, but he is also a "good fellow" in the best sense of that term.

The greatest drawback the Baird Company reports is lack of factory facilities, which is not at all easy to remedy just now, because machinery is something you don't pick off Christmas trees these days, and most factories manufacturing machines of the kind the Baird Company needs are anywhere from six months to a year and a half behind with their orders.

During the past year the Baird Company has made the following changes in their projector. They have put on a double sheet iron lamphouse in place of the one made of aluminum, having found that the aluminum one was a very excellent radiator of heat, whereas the double sheet iron one radiates comparatively little. They have also brought out an asbestos-lined condenser mount, which, while this department cannot unqualifiedly recommend it is still much better than the ordinary iron mount. An iron lens mount must, in order to deliver the goods, be well made, carefully machined, and must present a reservoir which will equalize the heating and cooling of the lens. The advantage of the iron mount as against the asbestos lined is summed up as follows: Asbestos insulation of the lens prevents the fast leakage of heat from the lens at a point of metallic contact therewith, and thus it stops breakage, caused by that particular thing. It does not, however, present a heat reservoir, and the result is that in instances where the operating room is rather cool or a strong current of air blows over the lamphouse there is much greater liability to breakage with this form than with a well-made metal mount—but lay emphasis on the "well-made," because unless the metal makes true contact with the lens all the way round it will be worse than nothing. The asbestos mount is far better than a poorly made metallic mount, but in our judgment not nearly so good as a properly constructed metallic mount.

The Baird machine tension adjustment is excellent. The knerled thumb screw with which it is adjusted is 2½ inches below the center of the aperture and therefore removed from at least a goodly portion of the heat of the spot. The screw itself is approximately ½ inch in diameter, and the thread is a reasonably coarse and substantial one.

The adjustment itelf ranges from very nearly nothing at all to a very heavy tension indeed—far more than would ever, under any possible circumstances, be needed; also the arrangement is such that although the two tension shoes are entirely independent of each other, the pressure upon each is at all times precisely the same. In short, the tension of the Baird machine is excellent, and the only possible suggestion I could make for improvement would be that the knerled screw be made ⅝ of an inch in diameter instead of ½ inch. This, however, is not important, or even necessary, but I think the screw would be just a little better if it had a larger diameter—the same diameter as the head of the gate latch.

The governor and shutter shafts have been changed, so that instead of telescoping they are now made in one piece. This eliminates the wear which it was found took place between the two shafts. The company is now using a longer aperture plate, and has lowered the lower tension shoes. Beyond this the Baird projector stands practically the same as it was one year ago, which is altogether to its credit, always assuming that the company makes those changes which are found necessary, as I am sure the Baird Company would.

The company reports business as being excellent, and that due to lack of factory facilities they are and have for a long time been unable to keep up with their orders.

Variable Illumination.

Roger F. Dennis, Ithaca, N. Y., propounds the following problem:

I am using two Powers 6-B machines, Speedo Arc Controller, Hallberg rotary converter with a two-arc-control instrument board, and a Hallberg economizer with a double throw switch, the latter for emergency only. I am using Speer carbons, ¼ top and 9/16 bottom. Average amperage 55, with a 52-volt arc. The throw is 142 feet 6 inches. Lenses are two Gundlach Manhattan 7½ inch E. F., with meniscus and bi-convex condensers. The picture is 17 feet 6 inches wide. We are running pictures only, giving three shows a day, featuring Paramount, Triangle, World, Vitagraph, Artcraft and Selznick productions. It seems to me this is an excellent equipment, and that we are producing a very good picture. The manager, however, is complaining of the light being unsteady—bright and then dim, and I am at a loss to understand this, as the hands on both the volt and ammeter show no variation, other than three or four amperes. The only way in which I can account for it is the variation in illumination due to light and dark scenes in the film, and I believe that this is really what he sees. We ran "Panthea" on March 8th, and the print was very dark. The manager thought that raising the amperage would help. I then used all we had, but it seemed to make no difference on the dark scenes at all, only making them more noticeable by the glaring of the light when the light scenes came along. Now, my claim is that the fault lies in the film, and not in the apparatus, while he thinks it is either the equipment or me. If I am wrong I would very much like to know it; if he is in error I should also like to know that fact. At any rate, I should like to know the opinion of an authority on this particular point, and am enclosing a stamp in the hope of getting a letter from you.

You are presenting a very peculiar proposition, Brother Dennis, but if there is no appreciable change in the amperage or voltage of the arc, it follows that there can be no considerable change in the light provided the arc burns smoothly. If there were carbon faults sufficient to appreciably change the tone or quantity of light, then your arc would not burn steadily. I think we may assume that the trouble does not lie in the light. It would seem improbable that your manager, who doubtless is accustomed to seeing moving pictures in other houses than his own would attribute the difference in screen illumination due to the difference in density of the film, to anything else than that cause. It is very easy to judge this, because where the illumination is decreased by a difference in the density of the film, this does not alter the brilliancy of the pure white objects in these scenes, and if such objects remain at full value of illumination, then there is no variation in light. With modern films, in order to bring out the full value of the various delicate shades of photography it is necessary to use a very brilliant light, nor will this prove to be trying to the eyes of the audience, providing you use a proper screen. Under such conditions, too, it is quite practical to mellow the glare of the light, and thus relieve the eyes without appreciably diminishing its brilliancy, by using what is known as an Amberlux lens, which may, I believe, be bought of all dealers in motion picture supplies, and certainly can be secured from the Picture Theater Equipment Company, or Mr. Hallberg, New York City. This is not really a lens but a ray filter. It costs $3.50, and I strongly advise its use, particularly where brilliant screen illumination is the order of the day.

Uneven Flicker.

C. Morris Carlock, Pauls Valley, Okla., says:

I am in trouble. Am running two Power's 6-A machines, and until lately have been getting a good picture. Of late, however, I have been experiencing an uneven flicker from one of my projectors, which apparently seems to back-lash. Now, I am quite positive this is not really the trouble, because the machine is running smoothly, and the speed does not seem to affect the flicker but very little. Am unable to locate the seat of the trouble, therefore ask your assistance, which will be highly appreciated.

I am wondering if you are confusing flicker with travel ghost, the latter being flashes of white up and down from white letters in a black title, or from white object in the film. If this is the case, and it has developed recently, without any change in the shutter, then it is probably due to worn gears, and you can remedy the matter by securing a strip of soft leather about ½ inch wide and hanging it over the shutter shaft, attaching one end to the shutter shaft bracket and attaching a very small weight to the other end, in order to form a brake which will hold the shutter back on the retard. If it is really the flicker you have, and you have not changed your screen, then I would say you have probably increased your illumination. It is quite possible that you have a poorly balanced shutter, which you could very likely improve, but it is not practical to set all that forth in this department. Why don't you send $4.00 to the Moving Picture World and get a copy of the Handbook. You will find all these things dealt with in detail therein, and I am quite sure the book will broaden your knowledge in a way that will be worth to you very many times its price. If it is travel ghost you have, it might also be caused by altering the distance of the revolving shutter from the lens.

A Problem in Screens.

Thomas Roddy, Hibbing, Minn., writes quite interestingly, as follows:

Am writing you for advice regarding projection in my theater, which I am at all times trying to improve if possible. I submit the following data for your information. Length of throw, 101 feet; drop only 5 feet; size of picture, 9.8 x 13.3 feet; kind of screen, plastered wall; width of house, 25 feet; distance from rear seats to screen, 95 feet; from front seats to screen, 12½ feet Am using 50 amperes direct current, Rexolux A. C. to D. C. motor generator being used. Projectors are one 6-A and one 6-B Power's. Lenses are No. 2 Gundlach on both machines. Cannot recall focal length of condensers, but am using meniscus next arc and plano in front. I am not satisfied with my screen, for the reason that with films having dark photography or hazy or even what we call poor photography, I find that results are unsatisfactory to those people sitting well to the rear of the house—say the last 5 or 6 rows. Now, of course, as you know, there are any number of screens advertised, but with me the question is which is the one best suited to the conditions found in my style of house. Of course, any of them might solve the problem so far as my back seats are concerned, but it is the front seats which concern me. I am afraid that if I selected a screen which reflected too much light it would result in people not wanting to go anywhere near the front of the house, because of the eye strain which might result. Of course, I don't know that this would happen, but I submit it for your consideration. I might say in closing that I seem to be getting a very good picture—better than I have seen in a number of larger houses in the larger cities—but that does not satisfy me. I want the best, as I realize that projection is the chief asset of a theater and the best costs no more than the poorest.

Brother Roddy, you should have no trouble of the kind you set forth, if you install a modern screen, and if you do, it would only be necessary to install an Amberlux lens or ray-filter at a cost of $3.50 per machine in order to soften the tone of light without materially decreasing its brilliancy. I am unable to understand, however, why it is that the thing you describe with relation to your present screen should occur only in the last three or four rows of seats. With a 13 ft. 3 inch picture, there ought to be no trouble in following the action of the picture at 95 feet, unless the illumination is very dim indeed. I am wondering if the fault doesn't really lie with your auditorium lighting. Are you sure that there is not some white light, either in the side or ceiling lights, which strikes the eyes of that portion of the audience seated in the rear seats. The advantage in a semi-reflective surface screen lies in the fact that you can get the same brilliancy with less current consumption, and the fact that you install one doesn't mean that you need to increase the brilliancy of the picture. If you install a metallic surface screen, and leave the amperage where it now is, you will get a considerably brighter picture. This probably isn't an altogether satisfactory answer, but from your description I am satisfied that the fault will be found in the auditorium lights, and not in the screen.

You are showing the right spirit when you say that, while your projection is good, it doesn't satisfy you. The man who is satisfied never gets anywhere. The dissatisfied chap may make a bit of a nuisance of himself, but he is the man who is constantly improving, or at least is seeking to improve. However, if after carefully examining your auditorium lights you find that my surmise is not correct, drop me a line to that effect, and I will see if I can do anything further for you.

Moisture in Carbon.

From H. R. Edgecomb, Chief Engineer, Speer Carbon Company, Saint Marys, Pennsylvania, comes the following interesting communication, which I heartily commend to the careful purusal and consideration of operators:—

As you doubtless know, all makes of soft cored projector carbons have given trouble from time to time on account of the falling out of the core. Since we began the manufacture of carbons we have been giving this feature particular attention, chiefly along the line of improving the composition of the core so that it would have the least possible tendency to disintegrate and form a deep hole in the crater. We have arrived at what we consider to be the very best composition for this purpose and we have recently been making exhaustive tests to demonstrate the excellence of our core. When we began these tests we immediately found that the presence of moisture in the carbon made a very considerable difference in its operation. We conducted this test using the principal makes of imported carbons for comparison with ours, and all the carbons which we tested behaved in the same way. Our first test consisted in dampening the carbons as much as would be the case if they were stored in a damp room for any length of time, and these were burned in the lamp house without any attempt to dry out the dampness. As a result, the cores in all the samples were blown out for a considerable distance, but as the carbons burned away this condition righted itself and the core did not blow out, as was the case at the beginning of the test. We next took carbons which had been stored in our test room, which is a relatively dry room, and tests of these carbons showed that the conditions caused by dampness were cleared up very much quicked than in the case where a greater amount of dapmness existed. The third test was made on carbons which had been artificially dried by placing them in the top of the lamp house when the lamp was burning. These carbons kept their core in place from the very beginning of the test. These tests show that the condition is one inherent in the coring material used by all manufacturers of projector carbon, viz., all coring materials will absorb water from the atmosphere, and if not properly dried before burning, this water when quickly turned to steam will cause excessive pressure in the core and thus force it out, leaving the hole in the carbon. After burning a sufficient time, however, the whole core becomes thoroughly dried, after which there is no more trouble.

From time to time we have received letters from operators who said that they improved their operation very much by placing the carbons in the top of the lamp house previous to using them so that they would be dried out thoroughly, and these tests confirm their statements.

To prevent blowing out of cores when carbons are put in service it is very necessary that these carbons be thoroughly dried, and we would strongly recommend that carbons be kept in a warm, dry place to prevent the absorption of moisture from the air, or that they be dried for an hour or two previous to being used in the lamp.

There is no question but that moisture in carbons will prove to be detrimental, though it had not occured to me that sufficient steam could be generated to blow out the core. Possibly this is the thing which is causing so much core trouble. It sounds very reasonable. I would suggest that any operator can make a test by laying some carbon for a week or two in a damp place, and then alternating the use of the damp carbons with some that have been carefully dried. This would be a practical test and one which could very easily be made without any particular trouble.

Travel Ghost.

Harold Amlie, Benson, Minn., says:

I am having trouble with travel ghost, which no adjustment of the shutter seems to eliminate. Am running a Power 6 B, equipped with a 3-blade shutter. Several weeks ago our machine was sent to one of the leading Minneapolis repair shops. There was no ghost in the picture before the machine was sent away, but there was a very noisy grinding in the gears when the framing lever was horizontal. After being overhauled the grind is much worse; also there is a travel ghost, which changes from top to bottom of white objects when the framing lever is moved. When the framing lever is at its highest point the ghost is down, and vice versa. When the framing lever is horizontal there is no ghost, but a very noisy grind. Could it be that the shutter blades are too narrow?

In the first place, Brother Amlie, the grind is caused by the improper adjustment of the toggle gear. I would recommend your attention to instructions Nos. 22 and 23, page 499 of the "Handbook," a copy of which I presume you have. If you have not, then by all means send and get it. Price, $4.00, from the Moving Picture World, and I venture the assertion it would be worth fully $40.00 to you. From what you say, I believe your main shutter blade is just barely wide enough to cover the light ray when it is set exactly right, but when the framing lever is moved up or down it alters the position of the shutter with relation to the lens slightly and thus causes the trouble. No doubt you could remedy this condition by setting the shutter at the dissolving point of the light ray, or as nearly as you can get to it, though of that I cannot speak with authority without knowing more about your lens system. I would suggest that you try to apply the chart shown in Projection department, March 24 issue of the Moving Picture World. If you have a lens of ordinary focal length, very likely the mere application of this chart will move the lamp house back sufficiently to narrow the light ray in front enough to lay Mr. Ghost. If not, write me again, giving me complete data as to amperage, kind of current, diameter and focal length of objective lens, and very likely I will be able to help you. I would suggest, however, that when you want machine repairs made, it would be better to send the machine to the manufacturer, the Nicholas Power Co., 90 Gold street, New York City.

Take Up Belt Adjustment.

A. C. Russell, Nanson, N. D., comes in with the following:

I am the inventor of a coil spring attachment for the belt of power-driven projection machines. This little invention is in the form of a short coil spring, which gives the belt considerable elasticity and in every way improves its operation. I have never used it on a motor drive. Stumbled onto this little device at Ashcroft last summer and used it on a Powers 6 A, which went up in the "Big Smoke" July 5th last, when three business blocks, including my humble establishment, left this peaceful earth via the fire route. I have applied for a patent on this device, and if it looks good to you kindly let the Department Brothers know it. They will last as long as the machine will, and then some.

I don't quite understand, Brother Russell. You are a trifle tangled in your dates. You say you have never used it on a motor drive, and then seem to say that you did use it. Well, anyhow, it consists of a coil spring about one-quarter of an inch in diameter and about 2 inches in length, the idea being to cut out that much of the belt and put in the spring, which, of course, serves to give the belt a tension. Really, I don't know just how this thing would work, though it looks reasonable enough, but my advice to you is not to spend money on a patent. Sell as many of them as you can, but if you pay out $50, $60 or $100 for a patent you will have to go some to get it back. You see, my Brother, it is not only the cost of manufacture you have to consider, but the marketing of it, and there is where you would be apt to fall down so hard it would make your teeth rattle when you come to pay the cost of advertising a little device of that sort.

Methods of Determining Exposure.

ONE of the greatest difficulties encountered by the photographer, whether he wields a still camera or turns the crank of motion picture box, is that of exposure.

Gelatine emulsions are of different speeds and latitudes and subject to deterioration. The celluloid base from which motion picture film is made and which is also extensively used for film cartridges, film packs and as cut films, reacts upon the emulsion and causes it to gradually lose its sensitive qualities in a much more rapid ratio than that of emulsions coated upon glass.

An emulsion records the amount of light which acts upon it in a definite mathematical ratio, but one emulsion may be "faster" than another. For example, if two plates or pieces of film are taken, one of which is twice as fast as the other, and both are exposed for a short time at equal distance from a standard candle, the faster emulsion will show a much greater density on development than the slower one. If, however, the slower one is exposed twice as long the two pieces will have equal density.

It is highly important in making tests of any character in photography that every factor in making relative tests be reproduced exactly or the results obtained will be false.

Development, time and temperature must be controlled exactly, fresh standard developer being used for each test as it deteriorates with use; fixing, washing and drying times and temperatures must also be the same. A test made in cold developer and another in warm easily give rise to very false conclusions in regard to the speed of a film or plate. Many photographers have been greviously misled in their conclusions in regard to materials by inaccurate tests.

Inasmuch as different emulsions require different developing times to record gradations of light in their true ratio, it is necessary to make preliminary tests to ascertain the development time where it is not given by the maker.

Where photometric instruments are not at hand for accurate tests the simplest method of arriving at the proper development time is to expose a strip of film giving relative exposures of 1, 2 and 4. Cut the film lengthwise in three strips. If you think five minutes to be about the normal development time, develop the three strips 4, 5 and 6 minutes respectively. If you have been fairly lucky in your assumptions as to the speed and time, one of the nine permutations obtained will be correctly exposed and developed, giving a basis for farther experiment. If the nine permutations are all too dense, the exposures have been too long. Try again with shorter exposures; if there is much fog or stain, the development may have been too long. Try again with shorter development. If the strongest exposure and longest development is the best of the nine, try again with longer exposure and longer development times.

Many methods have been worked out for determining proper exposure. The following data is largely taken from material collected by A. Horsley Hinton, formerly editor of the Amateur Photographer.

The principal factors governing exposure are: (1) the speed of the plate; (2) the actinic power of the sun's light for the time of year in a given latitude and its position at the particular time of day; (3) the effective diaphragm aperture of the lens; (4) the nature of the subject and its illumination as affected by local and atmospheric conditions. With others these data are supplemented by, and practically based upon, actinometric observations of the action of the light upon sensitive paper exposed near the camera or the subject at the time. Both methods are in many cases of undoubted use, but the information given by instruments of this kind can only be considered as approximate, and much is left to the judgment of the operator, whose surest guide will be an intelligent study of the principles on which these instruments are based, together with carefully-recorded observations of the combined working of his lenses, shutters, plates and methods of development under the varying conditions of practical work. Before using any of these instruments it is necessary to know approximately the relative sensitiveness or "speed" of the plate in use. In the early days of gelatin dry plates their rapidities were stated as so many times those of wet plates, or (as they are still) "ordinary," "instantaneous," "rapid," or "extra-rapid," terms which, though suitable for one make of plate, may not be so for others. This was improved upon by the adoption, in 1878, of Leon Warnerke's "Sensitometer," which was in use as a standard for some years. It consisted of a transparent scale of 25 squares of different intensities, marked with opaque numbers and arranged so that each third number indicated a doubled rapidity. This was placed in a frame in front of the sensitive plate, and exposed for thirty seconds to the constant light emitted by a phosphorescent tablet, supplied with the instrument, which was previously excited by burning one inch of magnesium ribbon in front of it. The exposed plate was then developed and fixed, and the highest number visible indicated the rapidity of the plate. In 1890 F. Hurter and V. C. Driffield introduced an entirely new system of calculating the sensitiveness of plates of different rapidities. They make a series of exposures in seconds on different parts of the plate in geometrical progression with a standard candle at one meter distance. After development for a certain fixed period with a standard developer, fixing, washing and drying, the "densities" or logarithms of the opacities of the different parts are measured by a special photometer and plotted on a skeleton diagram, producing a curve, one portion of which will practically be a straight line. The position of this line with reference to a scale of exposures given on the diagram decides the rapidity of the plate, while its length indicates the "capacity" of the plate for the truthful rendering of tone. The elaborate investigations by which these results were obtained are of great interest, and were published in the Journal of the Society for Chemical Industry (1890, 1891), and later ones in the Photographic Journal (1898). A complete account of the system by V. C. Driffield was published in 1903, as No. 56 of the "Photo Miniature Series."

It is very unfortunate that this important contribution to photographic science is now out of print and therefore unobtainable. It is to be hoped that Tennant & Ward, the publishers, will soon issue a reprint of this valuable booklet.

A complete account of the work of Hurter and Driffield is to be issued later by the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain, but it will probably not be obtainable by the general public.

It is to be deplored that no universally recognized system of speed numbers has been brought into use, nearly every maker of films and plates having some system of his own which bears no relation to that used by other manufacturers.

The H. & D. system is probably the most scientific one.

The sensitiveness shown on the H. & D. scale is directly proportional to the speed number given. The method has been adopted by several dry-plate makers in denoting the sensitiveness of their different brands, and is more or less the basis on which the plate-speeds for the modern English dry-plate actinometers and exposure meters are calculated. Several systems of photometry and measurement of the speeds of dry plates have been discussed at the meetings of the Congres International de Photographie, in 1889, 1891, 1900 and 1905, but no definite standard has been finally adopted. In Germany the use of J. Scheiner's sensitometer has been adopted, and appears to be extending. It is based on a system of photographing the graduated tints given by rotating sectors. A full account of the instrument, and of a system of sensitometry based on its use, is given by J. M. Eder in the Photographische Correspondenz (1898) P. 469, and (1900) p. 244.

The Chapman Jones sensitometer is the simplest tester for the ordinary worker. It is made by Sanger, Shepherd & Co., 5, 6 & 7, Gray's Inn Passage, Red Lion St., Holborn, London, W. C., and is sold in this country by Allison & Hadaway, 235 5th Ave., New York.

In 1901 Chapman Jones brought out a convenient plate tester on the same principle as the Warnerke sensitometer, but extended by the addition of a color sensitometer, which is useful for the comparison of orthochromatic dry plates, color screens, light filters, etc. It consists of a screen plate, 4¼ x 3¼ in., containing a series of twenty-five tints of graduated densities; a series of colored squares, blue, green, yellow and red, and a strip of neutral grey, all five being of approximately equal luminosity; a series of four squares of special pure colors, each representing a definite portion of the spectrum; also a space of line design, over which is superposed a half-tone negative. To use the instrument, a quarter-plate of the brand to be tested is exposed behind the screen for a few seconds to the light of a standard candle placed at the distance of a foot, developed, fixed and washed. An examination of the plate will show the sensitiveness, range of gradation, possible range of exposure, sensitiveness to color, size of grain, amount of halation and the most suitable light for development. It can be used for many other tests, and enables any brand of plates to be readily tested by the user and compared with any standard he may find convenient. In making these and similar tests, a standard developer should be allowed to act for a fixed period and at a uniform temperature.

Urge More Care in Fire Prevention

Committee of National Association Recommends Seven Rules for Observance by Theater Men.

AN APPEAL to the owners and managers of motion picture theaters in the metropolitan district, urging the immediate action of greater safety precautions in the handling of film in projection booths and rooms has been issued by the committee on fire prevention of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

There have been two motion picture fires in the projection booths of motion picture theaters recently. In one of the well-known New York theaters in this city a slight fire in the booth through the prompt attention of the operator and the theater attendants was extinguished before the firemen arrived and the audience marshalled out of the theater without panic.

In a motion picture theater in Westchester County, however, a small blaze spread to the films in the booth and caused a bad panic in the audience, although the fire did not spread beyond the booth. Women and children were trampled upon and badly injured, but fortunately no one was killed.

These two fires serve to emphasize the fact that it is the panic hazard which must be guarded against and that every precaution must be taken to prevent the occurrence and spread of a film fire within the booth itself. The following recommendations are offered to the theater owners and managers from the wide experience in fire prevention of the National Association's Committee:

1. Comply with local regulations and see that the employees do the same.

2. Enforce the "no smoking" rule in the booth absolutely. The great majority of film fires are really caused by lighted cigars or cigarettes, although defective wiring, electrical sparks, spontaneous ignition are offered in most cases as excuses.

3. Keep all film when not actually in use in tin cans or other containers. The burning of one reel of film will fill a theater with its fumes.

4. Don't keep in the booth or a connecting room any film except one day's supply. Unfortunately the booths in many theaters serve as storehouses for old junk, and unless this practice stops there is going to be some film fire.

5. Keep the booth neat and clean and free from rubbish. Throw all film scraps and clippings into a self-closing metal can.

6. Have the wiring, globes and electrical equipment frequently and regularly examined.

7. Have a couple of pails of water in the booth, also a pail of sand. If the sand is thrown on a small film fire it will quickly smother it and not injure the film. A soda acid and extinguisher is also a mighty good thing. The best precaution of all, if you can arrange it, is to have a couple of automatic sprinkler heads put in the booth.

Most film fires have started through carelessness and could easily have been put out at the start with a bucket of water.

Mr. Weiss has been an important factor in both the Mutual and Triangle organizations and Mr. Warren has been publisher and editor of important newspapers in Chicago, St. Louis, New York and elsewhere.

West Likes Selznick, Says Berman

Exchange Manager Says Exhibitors There Credit Film Man With Being Father of Open Booking.

"ALL through the Middle West and down into Texas, wherever I went, exhibitors all spoke of Lewis J. Selznick in terms of gratitude, as the father of open booking," says Sol J. Berman, manager of the New York exchange of the Selznick Enterprises. Mr. Berman has just returned from a business trip in the course of which he visited the principal cities of the Middle West and Eastern Texas.

"It is impossible to overstate the enthusiasm with which exhibitors welcome the acceptance of the open booking method of distribution by one after another of the companies which have been holding out against it," says Mr. Berman. "It was the invariable comment whenever I met an exhibitor and was introduced as a representative of the Selznick Enterprises. The advantage of not being bound by long-time contracts, of not having to take the poor with the good, of being able to select their own attractions from week to week, were subjects of incessant comment.

"Another important point is that I find exhibitors are discovering how foolish it is to pick out pictures which they can get cheap. They are finding, as Mr. Selznick said the other day, 'that it is better to pay $100 for a $100 picture than $5 for a $5 picture.' We are just beginning to learn what this means to the improvement of the pictures themselves in increasing the demand for the best.

"It is noteworthy that throughout the country the moving picture exhibitors are extremely prosperous. This is especially significant in the territory through which I traveled, because recently it has been visited by floods, unseasonable rains, tornados, and all sorts of calamities of a local nature. The business men as a whole are none too optimistic, but the moving pictures are thriving. It is substantial proof of the solid character of the business, the reason for which is the necessity for entertainment, no matter what general conditions may be. If there is either business or other depression, the need for relaxation is all the greater, and the picture provides the maximum of entertainment at the minimum cost. This is something that is going to be proved conclusively in the next few months. Too many people in the picture business go about with a half apologetic air. Instead they ought to be proud that they are giving the public not merely what it wants, but what it needs."

Mr. Berman reports great success in the West for "The Barrier." In Kansas City the first run was at the Twelfth Street theater, where it was held for a second week to capacity business. The Garden theater, Des Moines, booked the big feature for a week, and other important houses were planning long runs.

SPECIAL RELEASE OF "HONOR SYSTEM" SOON.

There will be a special release of "The Honor System," William Fox's cinemelodrama, beginning in September, covering the entire United States. At present, this R. A. Walsh drama is booking only for New York and New Jersey.

William L. Sherrill, president Frohman Amusement Corporation, presided as chairman, the following companies being represented: Paramount, Allan Rock; Metro, W. E. Atkinson; Goldwyn, Roland E. Blaisdell; Artcraft, H. S. Clark; Vitagraph, V-L-S-E, A. I. Segal; Pathe, A. E. Rousseau; E. I. S., Dixon Boardman; World, G. J. Schaefer; William L. Sherry, J. C. Clark

Walter S. Topping, assistant chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives, explained the purpose of the specifications, and several new types of film shipping cases which in many respects are approved by the Bureau of Explosives, were inspected by the representatives present.

A committee consisting of Allan Rock, H. S. Clark and A. I. Segal, was appointed to submit various types of metal fasteners to be attached to the film cases so as to conform to the proposed regulations, as Inspector Topping stated it was only a question of time when the use of the web or leather straps which are now used on film case would be discontinued.

It was estimated that there are about fifty thousand of the square type of film cases in use by the various branches of the industry and it is the desire of the committee to devise plans for continuing the use of these cases by conforming to the new specifications, thereby saving the distributing companies and exchanges many thousands of dollars during the year.

A draft of the proposed new specifications for film cases as submitted follows:

Lois Meredith Heads Own Company

MANY rumors have been launched lately to the effect that Lois Meredith, now starring at the head of her own company, Lois Meredith Pictures, Inc., is French. This Miss Meredith denies. For the benefit of those seeking the treasured information, Miss Meredith is Irish. She was born in Belfast, Ireland.

Three years ago Lois, together with her mother and brother, landed in America and decided to locate in the West. They took up their abode in San Francisco, where Lois soon became a favorite. Here Oliver Morosco first saw Miss Meredith at a charity benefit. He at once approached her mother, whereupon they closed a contract which called for Miss Meredith's appearance at the Morosco theater in San Francisco, as the star of "Peg o' My Heart." Everyone who saw her in the part were sure the story must have been written solely for her. Mr. Morosco took her east and starred her in a Broadway play, "Help Wanted," that will not soon fade from the minds of New York theatergoers.

Lois Meredith.

Her winsome smile, her Irish wit, her eyes smiling over the footlights, again found a wider field of endeavor, and Mr. Morosco loaned her to the Jesse Lasky Film Corporation, for whom she played the lead in "The Woman." Morosco finding her so huge a success on the screen had the original story of "Help Wanted" picturized and Miss Meredith played her original part in this on the screen. Miss Meredith also appeared in several Pathe pictures co-starred with Cyril Maude. Now the height of her ambition is being realized: she finds herself at the head of her own company.

M. F. Tobias, a film pioneer, is responsible for the organization. Miss Meredith has started work on her first picture.

SELZNICK GETS "ON TRIAL."

"On Trial," a photodrama made from the sensationally successful drama that ran a whole year in New York, has been secured by Lewis J. Selznick for the territory covered by his New York and Chicago exchanges. Exhibitors in New York state can book this picture through the Selznick exchanges at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and 66-68 Exchange street, Buffalo. Bookings may be made immediately.

This great picture is the first to be selected by the National Exhibitors' Circuit, an organization of exhibitors formed to secure for the exhibitor a certain number of guaranteed box-office attractions. Recognizing the advantage of distributing through the Selznick organization, the circuit transferred to it the rights for the territory mentioned.

"On Trial," therefore, is offered to the exhibitors of New York state with the double recommendation of the experts of the National Circuit and that of the Selznick forces. S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto, New York, secured the production for the first showing in that city.

LANDAU SEES 'EM ALL FIRST.

A novel method of staging private showings of his programs has been hit upon by Manager Landau, Butterfly theater, Milwaukee. In a room adjoining his operating room, Landau has placed a screen about 4 by 5 feet. The machine has been placed about 10 feet from the screen. Mr. Landau runs all his films in this room preparatory to showing them in his theater.

"I find that running off my programs on the small screen enables me to censor and make suggestions for the speed of the film. The small reproductions are more clear than those on the larger screen and I find the plan is much more satisfactory."

Famous Authors for Famous Players

Announcement Made of Works to Be Adapted for Summer and Fall Release.

WITH the departure for California of Jesse L. Lasky, in charge of production of Famous Players-Lasky pictures, announcement is made this week of the photoplays in course of making or completed to be released through Paramount during the late summer and early autumn months under its new "star series" selective booking plan.

As a result of the determination on the part of the producers to bend every effort toward the improvement of screen standards, there are named such distinguished authors and playwrights as Mark Twain, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, W. Somerset Maugham, George Broadhurst, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Owen Johnson, Wallace Irwin, Carolyn Wells, George Middleton, Gellett Burgess, Charles Kenyon, Beulah Marie Dix and others whose names are notable in the field of letters.

The plays of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero are recognized as being among the highest contributions to the drama made by any Englishman of the present century. The play of Pinero which has been selected by Famous Players-Lasky is his great comedy, "The Amazons," in which Marguerite Clark is to star in the role of Lady Thomasine.

It will be remembered that Famous Players-Lasky obtained the rights to all of Mark Twain's great writings and that the company has so far used this vast source of material most sparingly, having produced only "The Prince and the Pauper" and "Puddin' Head Wilson." The third Mark Twain production will be perhaps his most popular story, "Tom Sawyer," with the cast headed by Jack Pickford and Louise Huff.

The first of Mr. Maugham's photo-dramatic contributions will be an adaptation of his own popular play, "The Land of Promise," in which Billie Burke will star. Madame Petrova will star in an adaptation of Mr. Broadhurst's "The Law of the Land."

One of the most recent of Mary Roberts Rinehart's writings has been the "Sub-Deb" series current in the Saturday Evening Post. These are being adapted by Famous Players-Lasky with Marguerite Clark in the role of the adorable Bab.

Mr. Irwin has been induced to convert Hashimura Togo to the screen especially for Famous Players-Lasky, and Sessue Hayakawa, the well known Japanese actor, has been appropriately assigned to the stellar role.

Owen Johnson's "The Varmint" is now being adapted for the screen at the Lasky studio with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff as the featured players.

For Billie Burke, Mr. Burgess' story, "The Mysterious Miss Terry" has been chosen.

George Middleton will be represented by an adaptation of "A Wife's Strategy," which will star Pauline Frederick.

PERMANENT LEADING WOMAN FOR FAIRBANKS.

Eileen Percy, the talented stage beauty, who makes her motion picture debut in the Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture "Wild and Woolly," has signed as permanent leading woman for the athletic star. Miss Percy will appear opposite Fairbanks in all his productions for the coming year as a result of her unusually effective work before the camera in the new Fairbanks subject which will be released by Artcraft on June 24.

Miss Percy is a vivacious girl of seventeen who made her first appearance on the speaking stage in Maeterlinck's play, "The Bluebird," followed by numerous engagements in Broadway productions. Her last stage engagement, which she left in order to appear on the screen with Fairbanks, was with "The Century Girl," in which production she won wide personal recognition.

PRESS HUMORISTS TO BE GOLDWYN'S GUESTS.

The American Press Humorists, who will hold their annual meeting in New York City during the week of June 25, have set aside one day on their program which is to be known as Goldwyn Pictures Day. On the morning of Wednesday, June 27, the members of this distinguished newspaper and magazine organization, with their wives, will depart for a day's outing at the Fort Lee studios, where they will be the guests of the Goldwyn officers, authors, stars and technical staff. They will be entertained at luncheon by Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn stars, who at that time will be working upon three separate productions.

Lyman Howe Opens New York Office

Pioneer Exhibitor in the Market to Buy Meritorious Educational Films.

THE trade in general will be interested in the announcement that Lyman H. Howe, who is recognized as a pioneer exhibitor of moving pictures in America and also the leading exponent of educational films, has opened a suite of offices at 1202 Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, 'phone Bryant 1820. S. M. Walkinshaw, vice-president and general manager of the Howe organization, will devote much of his time to the new offices, with his assistant, R. E. Gillaum. The Howe organization comprises two corporations, which, while operated separately, are nevertheless closely affiliated.

The producing company is known as the Lyman H. Howe Films Company, Inc., and specializes in the production of scenic, travel and educational subjects of exceptional merit and maintains a staff of photographers who constantly seek out distinctive and unusual scenes. The company erected its own laboratory and studios at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Mr. Howe was also one of the first to realize the possibilities of animated cartoons in motion photography and for many years his staff of artists have been creating them up to a standard that is as exclusive today as when they first engaged in producing them.

The other Howe organization is known as the Lyman H. Howe Attractions (Inc.), and operates traveling companies which have been playing the leading theaters of over five hundred cities and towns twice each season for over twenty years. This record is all the more notable when it is remembered that these companies never present dramatic subjects, but films of facts—that are really instructive, yet which so many other exhibitors who underrate the intelligence of the public so often reject. Besides, a corps of imitators and impersonators behind the screen accompany and accentuate every action of each scene and in instant unison with it.

One of the functions of the offices just established in the Godfrey Building is to inspect all artistic and scientific yet humanizing films of this character that appear in this market and to buy all that are of exceptional merit.

ROYAL FILM SERVICE ENTERS SUIT.

The Royal Film Service Company has commenced an action in the United States District Court against the Motion Picture Patents Company, the General Film Company, the Biograph Company, the Kalem Company, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, the Lubin Manufacturing Company, the Selig-Polyscope Company, the Vitagraph Company, the Armat Moving Picture Company, Pathe Freres and Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and ten individual defendants under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law to recover treble damages of $300,000.

The complaint alleges that the defendants have acquired an illegal monopoly in the motion picture industry and alleges that by reason of the alleged unlawful monopoly its business has been seriously crippled.

CHAPLINS BOOKED FOR ENGLISH SAILORS.

Charlie Chaplin will entertain the sailors of one division of English warships as they wait impatiently "somewhere in the North Sea" for the German fleet to venture through the Bight of Heligoland. An order for the entire series of Mutual-Chaplins has been placed. The rental fee for the films has been handed over to Lady Beatty's fund for wounded soldiers and sailors.

Chaplin's Mutual comedies are booked on virtually every American warship. News that Chaplin is to be on the evening's program brings a wholesale cancellation of shore liberty, and when the screen is raised the foredeck is jammed with officers and seamen.

WILLIAM FOX HELPS OUT THE NAVY.

Lieut. Wells Hawkes, of the Recruit, the great warship model which has been built in Union Square, New York, to stimulate naval enlistments, was in a quandary recently.

Reeruiting was so brisk that Lieutenant Hawkes found it was almost a boomerang. He had so many embryo sailors that he had no place to put them. Nearby is the Academy of Music, William Fox's enormous photoplay-house. Mr. Fox heard of the difficulty and immediately got into communication with Lieut. Hawkes, so the naval "rookies" spent their spare time settled snugly in an upholstered theater seat, through the courtesy of J. Stebbins, the Academy manager.

Value in Titles of Copyrighted Dramas

Motion Picture Producers Must Respect Such Property Rights, Declares Judge Manton.

WHEN the title of a copyrighted drama acquires a trade significance it acquires a property value to the author of the play which must be protected, and consequently producers of motion picture plays must not use such titles, Judge Manton in the United States District Court decided recently. The decision was rendered in an action brought by J. Hartley Manners against the Triangle Film Corporation and the Rialto Theater.

The film company released a photoplay under the title "Happiness," which was exhibited at the Rialto Theater, and Judge Manton granted the application of the playwright for an injunction pendente lite and denied a motion made by the defendants for the dismissal of the suit.

"The use of the title Happiness in a prominent theater in New York City staged for performance by one of the foremost actresses of her time has given to such title a value and asset such as to constitute a property right in this plaintiff which should be protected," asserted Judge Manton.

"While it is true that the title of a copyrighted play is not protected by copyright the use of that title is none the less to be secured to the owner of the copyrighted matter as a trade mark if the title so first employed by him has acquired a trade significance as an arbitrary designation. I think the use of the title for a motion picture play as used by the defendants is an infringement of the plaintiff's sole right to the title of the play in drama on the stage and that the injunction should be granted."

The film company contended that the photoplay had been written by a scenario writer employed by the New York Motion Picture Company, which produced the photoplay which was released by the Triangle Company, without knowledge or reference to the drama, which was produced at the Cort Theater in 1914, about three years prior to the production of the film.

The decision is of unusual interest to motion picture producers and exhibitors, as heretofore the courts have not generally held that titles to dramatic productions arbitrarily selected are the exclusive property of the authors of the dramas, and film manufacturers have felt free to use such titles for photoplays not based on the theme of the dramas.

If the decision is affirmed by the higher courts it behooves film producers and exhibitors to be careful not to select titles for photoplays which have been employed by producers of drama.

The photoplay produced under the title "Happiness" was not based on the theme of the drama previously staged under that title, but the playwright contended that the mere use of the title infringed on his rights, as the drama is still being produced by stock companies and he has made arrangements with his publishers for the publication of the dramatic work in book form.

National Association Forms War Board

President Brady Appoints Committee Representative of Trade, to Co-operate With Federal Government.

FOLLOWING up the work it has been doing for Uncle Sam in connection with the Liberty Loan the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is planning to continue in co-operation with the Federal Government throughout the period of the war.

To this end President William A. Brady of the National Association last week announced the appointment of a special committee, to be known as the war co-operation committee, to handle all matters in which the motion picture can be used to further the interest of the American Government in the world war. Cable arrangements were made with D. W. Griffith, the American director now in Europe, who has been doing special work for the British and French governments, to assume the chairmanship of the new committee.

Other motion picture interests are represented on the committee by William L. Sherrill, vice- chairman, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky; Richard A. Rowland, Metro; P. A. Powers, Universal; John R. Freuler, Mutual; Ricord Gradwell, World Film; J. A. Berst, Pathe; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph; W. R. Rothacker, S. A. Lynch, Triangle Distributing; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman; J. H. Hallberg, United Theater Equipment; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithographing; Arthur James, president Associated Motion Picture Advertisers; Lee A. Ochs, president National Exhibitors' League; Samuel H. Trigger, president Manhattan Exhibitors; Louis F. Blumenthal, Auditorium theater, Jersey City, and Louis L. Levine, Regent theater, Brooklyn.

This committee will have its first work in conjunction with Chairman George Creel of the committee on public information, which was recently named by President Wilson to look after this important phase of the matter. Mr. Creel is represented by Kendall Banning, who is in charge of the division of motion pictures for the Government's committee.

The purpose of the body of men selected by President Brady is to devise working plans and to be prepared to furnish whatever aid the motion picture interests of the country can put forth to meet such emergencies as the war will bring out and organize the picture interests of the country in whatever work the Federal authorities think they will be useful The committe is to remain in force as long as the war situation makes it necessary

A news weekly committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been organized by the election of Jack Cohn, chairman; E. B. Hatrick, vice chairman, and Pell Mitchell, secretary. The following companies were represented at the meeting: Universal's "Current Events" and "Animated Weekly" by Jack Cohn and H. E. Culbertson; Gaumont-Mutual's "Mutual Weekly" and "Reel Life" by Pell Mitchell and Paul M. Bryan, and Hearst-Pathe by E. B. Hatrick and Emanuel Cohen.

This will be one of the most important committees to work in conjunction with the new war co-operation committee.

Mastbaum Puts One Over on Censors

Pennsylvania Board Having Cut a Number of "On Trial" Titles, Barred Lines Will Be Spoken.

THE Pennsylvania State Censors having eliminated several important titles, it is announced by Managing Director Stanley V. Mastbaum, of the Stanley Company, that throughout the week of June 18 the film version of the famous play, "On Trial," nevertheless will be shown at the Stanley theater, Philadelphia.

Mr. Mastbaum has found a way of expressing the titles by having the title spoken by a competent actor.

Instead of flashing the titles on the screen, as is the ordinary method of describing a scene or situation, these will be spoken as they occur and in such a descriptive and audible manner that even those who have been slow reading the screen announcements will hear them distinctively—thus adding charm to the picture.

When the big drive comes throughout the United States for a hundred million dollars for the Red Cross, a great part of New York state will be influenced to give through a motion picture which is being made without remuneration by the Whartons at Ithaca and which will be furnished free to all motion picture companies. The picture is being made primarily for use by the committee of Rochester, which is seeking to raise one million dollars as its part of the fund. At the head of the Rochester workers is George Eastman, president of the Eastman Kodak Company, and it was through his suggestion that the Whartons were appointed the makers of the Red Cross film.

It was originally intended by the Rochester people to have the film made as a straight commercial product, paying the Whartons a profit for the work. This the Whartons refused to accept, and as a result, the picture is being personally directed by Leopold D. Wharton, who also wrote the scenario.

The picture will be exhibited in all theaters throughout this district the week of June 25, in which President Wilson hopes to see a hundred million dollars flow into the coffers of the Red Cross.

FOR GENERAL REPRESENTATIVE HERE.

William Alexander, who has been one of Fox Film Corporation's general representatives abroad for the last few years, is in New York.

Mr. Alexander served in a supervisory capacity in England, Ireland and Wales during the past year. Previous to that he opened several branches for Fox Film Corporation in South America. He will be at the home office for some time. He reports that "A Daughter of the Gods," the Fox-Kellermann photoplay, is doing a record business at the London Opera House.

Players a Plenty for Seventh Exposition

Red Cross Booth, in Which Articles Donated by Stars Will Be Auctioned, Has Aroused Great Interest in Chicago.

AFTER a strenuous visit of ten days in New York, Ludwig Schindler, manager of the Seventh National Exposition, is back in his quarters in the Masonic Temple. He reports having received several cheering contracts for space in the Coliseum and the promise of the appearance of quite a number of stars during the run of the Exposition. The stars have been promised in addition to the list already published in previous articles:

Mrs. Vernon Castle, International; Pearl White, Pathe; Norma and Constance Talmadge, Selznick; Violet Mersereau, Universal; Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne and Harold Lockwood, Metro; Henry B. Walthall and Hobart Henley.

Manager Schindler also states that nearly all the large producers have already contracted for space and selected their locations. In addition to those already mentioned who have signed for space as given in previous articles are Art Dramas, Midwest Amusement Company, Chicago, and Tom Randall & Co. (artificial flower manufacturers), Chicago.

Ralph O. Proctor, district manager of Art Dramas, has promised to have several Art Dramas players at the Exposition.

A cable was sent to Mary Garden in Paris by Fred B. Warren, vice-president of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, regarding her appearance at the Exposition, and the reply made states that in all likelihood the prima donna will be present.

On Saturday, July 14, at 10:30 a. m., the Seventh Annual Convention and Exposition will be opened in the Coliseum Building. Governor Lowden of Illinois has promised to arrange his state affairs so as to be present and deliver the opening address.

The great hall in which the Exposition will be housed will be beautifully decorated, according to a color scheme decided upon some time ago. Adjoining it, in the Annex, the following conventions will be held:

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, the National Association of Motion Picture Advertising, Inc., the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the F. I. L. M. Clubs of America, and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the latter including the manufacturers and distributiing houses of machines, supplies, etc., for the moving picture industry.

From July 14 to 22, inclusive, the Exposition will open its doors to the public at 11 a. m. and will run until 11 p. m., daily. The opening day will be known as Goldwyn-Mae Marsh day, when Mae Marsh and other Goldwyn stars will be present.

The Red Cross will be a prominent feature at the Exposition, and it is expected that numerous members among the picture fans attending will be signed up.

It is the aim of the Exposition management to interest all the prominent players in the industry in this worthy association, and it is hoped that every one, whether in attendance or not, will donate some appropriate article for the Red Cross booth. These will be auctioned off by actors who will be present at the Exposition, and it is expected that a goodly sum will be secured in this way for the aid of the soldiers and sailors. Prominent Chicago society leaders have already arranged to take charge of this booth, and the big Chicago dailies are certain to give liberal publicity to the daily records made.

The Exposition management will not be benefited by any of the money taken in at the Red Cross booth, and every star in America is requested to send an article—or as many as they decide on donating—to the Exposition Manager, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Every package sent should bear the inscription, "For Red Cross Booth."

The opening meeting of the Seventh National Convention will be held Tuesday morning, July 17, and the proceedings will continue throughout Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. A banquet will be held on Thursday evening, July 19, in the Morrison Hotel, and on Friday evening, July 20, there will be an exclusive entertainment for all connected with the trade, in the Terrace Garden, Morrison Hotel.

The time of meetings of the other four conventions has not yet been arranged, but will be announced later.

Exposition Opens With Mae Marsh Day

Goldwyn Player Makes Her First Public Appearance—Artists Will Arrange Company Booths.

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION, one of the most widely discussed of all the screen producing companies, has won the honor of opening the annual exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to be held in the Coliseum, Chicago, beginning Saturday, July 14. The first day of the convention will be known and advertised as Mae Marsh day.

Incidentally, this will be the first time during her screen career that Mae Marsh has ever made a personal appearance in conjunction with any motion picture gathering or presentation. During all the years she has been growing to her present important place in the screen world Mae Marsh has lived very much in the background with her mother and sisters.

Hugo Ballin, William H. Cotton, Goldwyn's artist-specialists, and Herbert Messmore, scenic constructor and technical director, are building and designing special settings for the Goldwyn booths at the Coliseum and will journey to Chicago to erect them. Miss Marsh herself has a big surprise in store for the screen fans of Chicago and all the surrounding territory who will attend the show.

F. M. Brockell, manager of Goldwyn's Chicago offices, will be in active charge of this company's Coliseum exhibit and handle the local requirements for Miss Marsh's appearance.

Kansans Stand Pat on Deposits

State League Members Declare They Are Still Determined to Cut Them Out.

THE Kansas Exhibitors' League is standing pat on its position opposed to the requirement of deposits from the moving picture exchanges; its officers say that they are well satisfied with the present situation. It was disclosed at the recent special meeting of the League at Wichita, Kan., that every exhibitor who attended the meeting had either canceled or was about to cancel his contracts with exchanges requiring the deposit, and that many members not present were also canceling.

The League, at its Hutchinson meeting, April 23-24, had set May 15 as the last day on which deposits were to be paid and before which exhibitors were to cancel their contracts. At the urgent request of various exchanges, however, the date was postponed to June 1. The exchanges wished time to confer with their principals.

At Wichita June 4 and 5 the exhibitors seemed eager to push the demand for elimination of deposit. Some had been rather half-hearted about it, it was said; but at this meeting they declared that they were in on it. Much enthusiasm was shown when one exhibitor reported that an exchange that had been requiring deposit had recently made a contract with him on which no deposit was required. The League has 112 members.

The League at this meeting reiterated the decision made at the Hutchinson meeting, and announced generally as one important phase of the negotiations between exhibitors and exchanges that the Triangle's bond plan was not acceptable.

In a recent letter, C. E. Glamann of Wellington, president of the League, has well expressed the attitude of the Kansas exhibitors in the following statement:

"The motion picture business is not a great deal different from other lines of business; for instance, take the grocery stores or the clothing stores; they are not required to put up a surety bond or a deposit on goods which they are going to buy; the wholesale houses are in touch with the different stores over the country and know who is good and who is bad, and good customers are not required to carry the burden of the bad customer, and we feel the same way in regard to the good exhibitor and the bad exhibitor. Because there happens to be a bad exhibitor in my part of the country it does not seem right or just that I should have to put up a surety bond or a deposit to guarantee that the poor exhibitor will live up to his contract.

"The exchangemen seem to have the idea that all exhibitors should be classed alike and forced to put up a surety bond or put up a deposit, regardless of their standing, and we have no assurance that the exchanges will make good their contracts with us—only their word; if it is right and just that the exhibitor be asked to put up a surety bond or deposit, why should not the exchanges put up a bond with the exhibitors also?

"It seems to me that when the exhibitor sends his check in advance for his program the exchanges are absolutely sure they will have protection on the program; and if the check does not come in time, the exchange has the privilege of sending the shipment C. O. D., which is done anyway, regardless of whether there is a deposit or not.

"There are several companies operating in this territory which do not use the deposit system or surety bond, and I am quite sure their losses are not any more than those of the companies which have required the deposit; if they can get along and do business and make some money on this basis, it surely seems to me the rest of the companies could do the same.

"We want to do the right thing by the exchanges, and on the other hand, we want them to do the right thing by us.

"The members of this League are business men who will absolutely live up to any contract they sign, and for that reason I believe the exchanges should grant them the privileges they desire."

Big Plans for Keystone Convention

Many Players, as Well as Manufacturers and Exchangemen, Promise Attendance.

CHARLES H. GOODWIN, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, which will hold its big state convention and exposition at the Parkway Building on June 25, 26 and 27, announces that several leading photoplay stars have been secured. Among those who have promised to come are Earle Williams, Corrinne Griffith, Misses Norma and Constance Talmadge, Mrs. Talmadge, Derwent Hall Caine, Tom Carrigan, Mabel Taliaferro, Anita Stewart, Pearl White and Molly King.

A special train will also bring a large delegation from Pittsburgh. Alice Brady, Madge Evans and William A. Brady and Ricard Grodwell of the World Film Corporation also will be on hand. Other men prominent in the producing field to be present will be Lewis J. Selznick, Walter W. Irwin of Vitagraph and C. R. Seelye of Pathe.

Spaces at the Convention Hall have been subscribed for by the Peerless, Metro, Paramount and Artcraft, Selznick, Mutual, Fox, World, Universal, Bluebird, American Photoplayer, Air Sweet, Kline Poster Company, Ideal and National Poster Co.

Fred Herrington, national organizer, and Lee Ochs, the president, are expected to be present during the big convention. A prize to be offered by H. Dembow, manager of the William Fox Exchange, will be a Fifty Dollar Liberty bond, which will be given to the best dancer appearing during the convention. All the publicity and details of the big affair are being worked out with satisfaction, and there is every indication that the convention will be a big success.

Michigan Convention Poorly Attended

Exchangemen Outnumber Exhibitors—Delegates Go Into Executive Session After Fifteen Minutes' Talk.

THE annual convention of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held at the Hotel Pantlind, June 12 and 13, was very poorly attended by the exhibitors, representation among the film salesmen and exchanges being greater than that among exhibitors.

The morning session scheduled was not held, and in the afternoon the general session lasted only about fifteen minutes, after which the convention went into executive session, eliminating those who were not exhibitors. What was transacted at this meeting and also on the second day of the convention will be contained in a report from the secretary to appear next week.

While the writer does not want to find fault with the League or those who attended, it would seem that a great deal better results could be accomplished by having the film salesmen and exchange managers present at meetings so as to hear their side of the various discussions coming up. Inasmuch as all topics on the program were of a general nature, would it not have been better to keep in members of exchanges and the trade press rather than exclude them? The Moving Picture World is more than ready to give every assistance and support it can to the association, which is best proved by the fact that it went to the expense of having its representative go to Grand Rapids.

The exhibitors who went to the convention are to be commended for their loyalty to the association, and it is to be regretted that instead of five or six hundred exhibitors being in attendance there was a mere handful.

With such a lack of co-operation and support, how can it be expected that the association will thrive? It must have greater support—not next year or the year after, but immediately.

North Carolina Holds Successful Convention

Sixty League Members and Many Film Men Meet at Wrightsville Beach—Varner Indorsed for National President

THE fourth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina convened at Oceanic Hotel, Wrightsville Beach, near Wilmington, on Thursday, June 12. The opening session was called to order by the president, P. W. Wells, of Wilmington. Addressing the sixty odd league members and film men in attendance he extended to them a cordial welcome and then introduced Parker Quince Moore, mayor of Wilmington, who gave to the league and its members the freedom of the city of Wilmington and expressed a desire to meet each one personally.

The next speaker was the mayor of Wrightsville, Thomas H. Wright, who said in behalf of the Beach he extended to the visitors a cordial welcome and hoped they would take advantage of everything the place afforded without restraint, as he had withdrawn the police during the convention so their pleasure could be unconfined.

The third speaker was J. Clayton Grant, who spoke on the county tax on motion picture theatres, giving a remedy for lessening them by appeal to the State Attorney.

A. F. Sams, the league's attorney, in a brief and witty speech, praised the good work of the league. He said the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina has shown that it can do things and do them right, and he hoped to see its president or secretary the next president of the National League.

At 1 p. m. President Wells announced the afternoon session and adjournment was in order. Those in attendance were:

The afternoon session started at 3 o'clock and closed at 5.30. Reports of committees were made and the committee of ways and means went in to executive session to discuss regulation of bylaws. Henry B. Varner addressed the convention on his and President Wells' work at Washington before the Senate Finance Committee in behalf of the tax on admission, whereby the report of the Finance Committee recommended the exemption of the admissions up to and including 25-cent tickets. Mr. Varner also spoke of the need of raising money for the North Carolina League to meet the current expenses and funds to pay the expenses of the delegates to the National League convention at Chicago, incidentally remarking if the National League did accomplish more in the future than it had in the past he didn't think there was any use in attending its convention. He then offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Senate Finance Committee of the United States Congress has recognized the exhibition of motion pictures as one of the factors in the educational work of our country and has further seen fit to show just consideration to the industry by relieving it of the proposed excessive war tax, therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League shall set aside one day's receipts each month from the operation of their theaters throughout the State and contribute same to the National Red Cross Society through their respective local chapters or auxiliaries. Be it further

Resolved, That this resolution shall be in effect during the duration of the present world war.

Friday's Session.

The session of the second day of the convention, Friday, started at 10.30 o'clock. After the formal opening by President Wells, R. V. Anderson, of Charlotte, was given the privilege of the floor. In a very well worded speech he presented to President Wells, in behalf of the Exhibitors of North Carolina, a gold watch with the inscription, "Presented to Percy Wells by his moving picture friends, June 16, 1917."

C. R. Seelye, who was announced as the leading speaker of this session, did not put in an appearance, and A. F. Sams addressed the convention on organization. Among other things, he said that members of the league should not contribute their dues only, but should add their presence at all conventions held by the league. North Carolina fought the war tax on admissions at its own expense, single handed, and it still had a balance on hand in the treasury of $128. There always will be need for a fund to meet necessary expenses, and the league should see that it always has the money to meet them. Matters of national concern would arise in the industry, Mr. Sams continued, and it is time we have a national organization to get on the job as well as the North Carolina League did. All leagues should be a power for good, socially and morally. Cultivate political friendship and reciprocate it by aiding political friends on your screens and personally whenever you can be of service to them.

"The state organizations make up the National League and it should encourage state leagues," continued Mr. Sams. "The National League needs reorganization, and the North Carolina League should send a strong delegation to the Chicago convention and see that a real organizer be made the head of the National Exhibitors' body. I therefore offer the following resolution:

"'Whereas, The North Carolina Exhibitors' League recognizes the necessity of a thorough national organization, and whereas the ability of Henry B. Varner as a leader and organizer is likewise recognized, be it resolved, first, this league unanimously indorse H. B. Varner for president of the National Exhibitors' League of America; second, that the delegates to the national convention at Chicago be and hereby are instructed and directed to exercise every fair and honorable means to compass his election.'"

The resolution was unanimously adopted. W. Stephen Bush spoke of the Chicago convention and complimented Mr. Varner on his success before the Senate Finance Committee and of his own efforts in behalf of organization and the industry.

Afternoon Session.

The nominating committee presented the names of the delegates to the Chicago convention, as follows: P. W. Wells, Wilmington; H. B. Varner, Lexington; A. F. Sams, Winston-Salem; B. S. Aronson, Raleigh; S. E. White, Greenville; H. R. Mason, Goldsboro; H. J. Paradis, Wilson; J. White Ware, Gastonia. Alternates, B. H. Stephens, Wilmington; J. W. Lambeth, Thomasville; Edgar E. Pearce, Winston-Salem; O. R. Brown, Raleigh; H. T. Drake, Fayetteville; H. F. Stalling, Kingston; P. S. Arrington, Rocky Mount; C. L. Welch, Salisbury. The entire list was unanimously elected.

P. W. Wells was re-elected president of the league; H. B. Varner was re-elected treasurer and secretary; L. J. Taylor, of New Berne, first vice president; George W. Beyers, of Greensboro, second vice president, and A. F. Sams, attorney. The ways and means committee of the previous year was re-elected—R. D. Claven, Charlotte, chairman; L. G. Taylor, New Berne, and B. H. Stephens, Wilmington.

W. Stephen Bush again addressed the convention, complimenting Mr. Varner on his excellent work at Washington and promising to show his personal appreciation of Mr. Varner's wonderful achievements in some substantial way in the near future.

Messrs. Aronson and Brown, of Charlotte, extended an invitation to the North Carolina Exhibitors' League to hold its mid-winter convention at the capital city of the state, where they would find a cordial welcome and plenty of entertainment. The invitation was accepted.

The convention, which had been the most successful ever held by the North Carolina League, adjourned to meet at the call of the president.

Bush Didn't Know Varner Was a Candidate.

W. Stephen Bush lost a great opportunity to add to his eulogistic dilations on the achievements of H. B. Varner at Washington in behalf of the exemption of the war tax on admissions to motion picture theaters. He did not arrive at the convention until twelve o'clock noon Friday, the last day, just as the morning session was about to adjourn. He was unaware that the North Carolina Exhibitors' League had declared itself in favor of Mr. Varner's candidacy for the presidency of the National League and that Mr. Varner had decided to be a candidate.

At the afternoon session of the convention Bush again orated on Mr. Varner's splendid work in behalf of the exhibitors and the whole industry. He said it was with profound pleasure he heard Mr. Varner's name read among the other delegates to attend the Chicago convention. He knew Mr. Varner's presence would be of incalculable benefit and do much to make it a great success. He failed, however, because he was ignorant of the fact, to say what a great National League presidential candidate Mr. Varner would make. He did not fail to say, be it said, that he had made a solemn promise to himself some time ago to present Mr. Varner with a token of his and the exhibitors' appreciation of Mr. Varner's past and recent efforts in their behalf.

Mr. Bush hoped to make this promise good in the near future, probably at the mid-winter convention of the North Carolina Exhibitors' League. This token, he said, would have materialized some time ago had it not been for the petty jealousy of one or two of the trade papers, who had failed to solicit the subscriptions for the token in their columns (ten cents a sub.), a trifling amount in order to give every one in the industry a part in it by doing his bit.

Just previous to Mr. Bush's afternoon talk one of the league members moved that every member of the North Carolina League donate ten dollars toward a campaign fund. Even this did not give Mr. Bush an inkling of the big "noise" and event of the convention.

Mr. Bush made a flying visit to the convention, leaving immediately at the close, 5:30 p. m., to catch a 6:45 train for New York, and evidently then did not understand that H. B. Varner had declared his candidacy.

Where ignorance is bliss it is folly to be otherwise, although it was no fault of the convention that he did not know that it had declared Mr. Varner a candidate for president of the National Exhibitors' League of America; it was mentioned two or three times in his presence. Perhaps it was better he did not know.

FRANK REMBUSCH APPEALS TO EXHIBITORS.

To the Editor of Moving Picture World:

Motion picture exhibitors of these United States, be up and doing this very minute. Get busy when you read this, and for the next few days give your entire efforts and attention to the Federal tax question.

Do you realize the importance and dire consequences of a prohibitive tax? I wrote and asked a Canada exhibitor to give me the results of how a tax of one cent on each ticket had effected the exhibitors in that country.

He says: "Our tax regulation most costly in the world, except perhaps the Italian Government. People did not protest in time, and now it is too late. We pay one cent on each ticket, and this obliged us to raise our admission price from ten to fifteen cents, and now people do not come. They have not the money to come so often, and business has fallen off one third.

"Some moving picture managers, and as picture managers usually do, tried to put each other out of business and pay the extra tax themselves, and all profits were lost, and, more so, they were in the hole. I inclose you a sample of war tax ticket that we have to pay, and since paying many shows have closed up and are going out of business because it costs hundreds of dollars, which the show could not raise. Some fools paid the tax out of each admission and lost everything.

"I say you had better hold together and protest in time or else you will suffer commercial death, and the people will suffer because amusements are all to charge high prices. Only the large houses remain in business, and cheap amusements for the poor and middle class people quit."

These are facts quoted from experience and not theories, and need no further explanation except to briefly review what has been done up to date.

When the House Committee proposed a tax of 10 per cent. on gross receipts the Indiana Organization sent a delegation to Washington and found only one more state taking an interest in the tax question. Mr. Varner, Mr. Sams and Mr. Wells, of North Carolina, the same gentlemen who came to the rescue over two years ago on behalf of the small exhibitor.

We found Mr. Ochs and some trade papers and film manufacturers saying to Congress that the tax of 10 per cent. was all right on the exhibitor, but there should be no tax on film. As usual, gentlemen, let the exhibitors pay the whole burden, and again, as usual, most exhibitors calmly submitting to the axe.

North Carolina and Indiana have been working diligently ever since, and Mr. Crandell at Washington, an exhibitor there, was spendid help.

Through filing briefs and seeing our representatives and Senators we have been able to show and prove that a tax of 10 per cent. or of one cent on every ticket, which is 20 per cent. on a five cent ticket, would put most of us out of business. Fortunately, North Carolina was in a position to be of great service, and Mr. Warner, who has now the second time come to the front on behalf of the exhibtior, deserves a great vote of thanks by the exhibitors of the United States for his work.

But our work is not finished, we need the co-operation of every exhibitor in the United States this mighty minute.

If you don't say anything, Congress is liable to believe that you are able to pay the tax.

Here is the status at this writing: The Senate Committee reports no tax on amusements of twenty-five cents and under admission tickets.

We must now use every influence possible on the members of the Ways and Means Committee in the House to stand by the Senate bill after it passes the Senate and goes to Congress. Congress does not want to put us out of business, but it wants to know the facts.

P. S.—Exhibitors we should say to producers, all film men and everybody not an exhibitor, keep your hands off, it is not your business, and you do not know what an exhibitor can pay in the way of tax.

Furthermore, we should remember any one that takes a hand in this in the future.

F. J. REMBUSCH,
President of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors League.

Wisconsin League Elects Delegates

Discusses Question of Deposits and Also Proposal of Closing Down for Summer Months.

THE deposit system and the closing of all picture houses during the summer months were discussed in the first state convention of the Wisconsin Motion Picture Men's Association, in Milwaukee, Thursday and Friday, June 7 and 8. Three hundred Wisconsin theaters were represented in the convention and delegates to the national meeting in Chicago were elected.

J. W. Sherwood, of Madison, was elected director of the state organization, while the following delegates were elected to the Chicago convention: J. Grauman, George Fischer, Henry Trinz, of Milwaukee; Thomas A. Lee, Fond du Lac, H. Rhode, Kenosha. The following were elected alternates: Mr. Fisher, Madison; Mr. Langmeek, Frank Cook, Frank Brimmer, Henry Langheinrich, Milwaukee.

The deposit system was thoroughly discussed and there were some heated discourses on the subject. The general concensus of opinion was against this system. The proposition of closing all the picture houses in the city during the summer months was taken up, and the result of a straw vote showed the exhibitors present in favor of this proposition.

A number of exchange men were present and they, too, said they would welcome the closing for a month or so of all the theaters, if the proposition could be made general, so that it would give them an opportunity to get ahead on their releases. It is expected a great many Wisconsin exhibitors will attend the Chicago convention in addition to the delegates.

Illinois Safe From State-Wide Censorship

House Refuses to Accept Senate Bill and Senate Votes Down Recommendation of House Conference Committee.

Chicago, Sunday, June 17.

THE Senate passed the Guernsey bill Saturday with an amendment excluding Chicago and all other cities in Illinois having municipal censorship. Near the close of the session, at 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning, the House Conference Committee recommended that the Senate make the censorship state-wide. The senate voted down the report, thus leaving this industry safe for two more years from absolute state censorship. It is a notable victory.

Chicago, Saturday, June 16.

AT the time of writing, the latest news from Springfield concerning the Guernsey state censorship bill is somewhat surprising, as it shows that the managers of not less than eleven Chicago exchanges sent individual telegrams to Guy Guernsey, expressing sympathy with and favoring the passage of his bill. Each of these men is a member of the F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago.

Representative Guernsey showed these telegrams to members of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate while it was in session on Thursday, June 14. The effect it created can be readily imagined.

The Chicago local has the names of all these men, and if the bill passes each of them will be held responsible by exhibitors throughout the state for his part in this matter.

A letter from William J. Sweeney to President Hopp, of the Chicago local, written Friday, June 15, states that the Guernsey bill will go to its third reading Saturday, June 16, and will then be returned to the House for conference. Mr. Sweeney, when writing, had the impression that the bill will pass in the Senate as amended by Corporation Counsel Ettelson, of Chicago, if it will be reached Saturday, June 16. He also stated that it looked as if there will be an all-night session Saturday.

Fred W. Hartman, who accompanied Mr. Sweeney to Springfield, made a strong speech before the Senate on Thursday, for which he was highly complimented by Senators. Mr. Peglar, representing the Mutual Film Corporation, has also been a strong aid.

W. W. Watts, state treasurer of the Illinois League, was kind enough to send me the following information:

"Should the Illinois State Senate pass the Guernsey motion picture censorship bill and the House of Representatives concur in the Senate amendments, one of the most farcical of measures will be put up to Governor Lowden for his approval or veto. The bill has been advanced to third reading in the House and is expected to be placed on its passage in the Senate tomorrow.

"Even if the Senate should pass the bill, there is a question whether with the rush in the final wind-up of the session in the House the lower branch can get to the measure in time to vote on it.

"Amendments have been tacked on the measure that has made it a huge joke, so far as censorship is concerned. One of the amendments, and the one that practically kills the bill, in the opinion of some of the best lawyers in the Legislature, is the provision wherein the measure does not apply to cities or towns which have motion picture censorship boards. These lawyers point out that should the bill become a law every little village board and hamlet officer on up to the city commissioners and city councils will pass a censorship board ordinance.

"The result of state censorship then would be no more than the holding of a fat political job by one man. Men who are known to be close to the administration point out that Governor Lowden will not stand for anything like that, and that, if the measure comes to him in its present form, his use of the veto will be justified.

"Opponents of the measure, who are not confined to exhibitors alone, but include censorship boards like the city of Chicago, are of the belief that with numerous censorship boards all over the state the end of motion pictures in Illinois can be seen; for, if a manufacturer will be forced to permit many boards of diverse opinions to pass on his pictures, the latter will become so mutilated that they will have no value whatever.

"Those who have been given credit for the sensible solution of censorship are of the opinion that if all boards are done away with, the motion picture manufacturers themselves in time will work out the problem and that there will be no more cause for censorship of films than of newspapers and magazines.

"We are in hopes that the bill as it now stands, with all the amendments tagged on to it in the Senate, will most probably not be accepted by the House. When the Senate adjourns the bill may be left over with the unfinished business. If, however, the house accepts the bill punched full of holes as it is, it means Illinois will have state censorship that will raise all kinds of legal questions, and that the manufacturers will have two boards to combat instead of one. It also means tht the national industry has one more state censorship board, and no one can be blamed but the manufacturers themselves and the managers of the film exchanges in Chicago.

"The Chicago local, Illinois branch of the M. P. E. L. of A., has the names of all the exchange managers who wired Representative Guernsey assuring him that they were in favor of and in sympathy with his state censorship bill. Now if state censorship comes to Illinois exhibitors will have to thank these exchange managers for the additional burden placed on the trade, and it will be important for exhibitors to know just who these managers are."

The Chicago local sent William J. Sweeney and Fred W. Hartman to Springfield Monday night, June 11, to watch the progress of the bill. Joseph Hopp, president of the local, also intended to go, but was detained on account of the meeting of the license sub-committee of the council, which he attended.

A letter received from Mr. Sweeney by President Hopp states that after passing the House the Guernsey bill went to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate instead of to the Committee on Licenses and Miscellany. Mr. Sweeney also reported that the Judiciary Committee had called two meetings, one set for Wednesday afternoon, which was postponed until Thursday afternoon. Mr. Sweeney talked to several members of the Senate Committee, but could get no definite promises from them. Senator Dailey, of Peoria, who is on the Judiciary Committee, stands with exhibitors against the bill. The Senator has always been friendly to moving pictures, and at an exhibitors' convention, held in Peoria several years ago, which I attended, he made a magnificent speech of welcome to President Neff and the delegates present.

Messrs. Sweeney and Hartman have sent wires throughout the state to exhibitors requesting them to wire immediately to their senators to vote against the Guernsey bill.

Major Funkhouser, of the Chicago censor board, and Attorney Ayers, of the Chicago corporation counsel's office, have been in Springfield watching the progress of the bill in the Senate, and there are also present several prominent women to speak against the bill's passage.

Prominent among those present in Springfield who are fighting against the passage of the bill is Mr. Peglar, representative of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Adolph Powell has been in Springfield working hand and glove with Mrs. Blanchard, the originator of the bill. It is said that he has given out that if the bill is passed he will be one of the reviewers on the board of censors.

Joseph Hopp has kept in close contact with the situation in Springfield, and has advised Theodore Mitchell, chairman of the censorship committee of the N. A. M. P. E. in New York, of the progress of the bill.

To the Moving Picture Stars of America

How to Benefit the Red Cross, the Seventh National Exposition, Themselves and Picture Fans—All at the Same Time.

THE seventh annual convention and exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America are close upon us, and at this time it is specially appropriate that producers, distributors and exhibitors should be reminded of the personal obligation incumbent on every one of them to see to it that the event shall be made worthy of the fifth industry in the United States of America.

True, it is war time and the business is affected by a number of other adverse conditions; yet it is all the more compelling that every one of us should shoulder his particular share of the general burden, and march with sturdy step and chins up to the success that awaits earnest and united effort.

The management of the Seventh National Exposition is in the care of men who can be unhesitatingly commended as worthy of the confidence of all concerned, and at its close the books will be open to inspection, and for every cent of money received or spent there will be an honest accounting. This has been promised and a faithful performance will be insisted upon.

All present indications point to the attendance of a splendid constellation of stars at the exposition. Chicago picture fans are already in a state of high expectancy over this feature of the exposition, and I now come to the consideration of a matter in which every moving picture star in the country, whether they attend the exposition or not, can show their patriotism and aid materially in the success of the big event at the same time.

The exposition management has arranged for the location of a Red Cross booth in a prominent position on the Coliseum floor. Leading society women of Chicago will have charge of this booth. Their aim is to increase the funds of this benevolent national organization for the benefit of "our boys in khaki and blue." Every penny taken in will be devoted to the Red Cross fund. The management will not receive a cent of this money, and the space for the booth has been given to the Red Cross.

Stars throughout the country, big and small, of the first magnitude or the sixth, are requested to send in to the manager of the exposition articles which can be auctioned off at the Red Cross booth. Every article will be auctioned by some star present at the exposition.

Stars are possessed of fertile imaginations and happy judgments as a rule. Suppose the beloved Mary Pickford had by her an old gown, worn in one of her famous characterizations, and that she could, by hook or crook, contrive so that it would reach Ludwig Schindler, manager of the National Exposition, to be auctioned off to the highest bidder among the thousands of fans present. Think of the hundreds of dollars that might bring to the Red Cross fund, and think also of the thousands of people it would attract to the exposition at the Coliseum!

We are waiting for you, Mary, to start the ball rolling!

And then there are Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, and many other stars in the business. In the selection of an article each could show a happy originality that would enhance its value a hundred fold.

Now the stars are invited to pause for a moment in their courses and emit flashes of gladdening light to the Red Cross workers and to the great army of moving picture fans in Chicago.

Every package sent should be addressed: Exposition Manager, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago, and each should bear the instruction, "For Red Cross Booth."

Proposed Increase of Chicago Licenses.

For some time past the license sub-committee of the Chicago city council has had under consideration the readjustment of licenses on moving picture theaters in Chicago, with the view of increasing them so as to net the city an increase of $30,000 annually.

The meeting held by the sub-committee, in the City Hall, Wednesday morning, June 6, occupied an hour and a half. It was attended by the special committee appointed by the Chicago Local to draw up a schedule of licenses on the theaters ranging from 300 up, with Joseph Hopp, president, as chairman. About 75 other members of the Chicago local were present. Nothing was definitely decided, and the sub-committee adjourned until Tuesday morning, June 12.

At this meeting the sub-committee had a license schedule of its own, which was read to those present, the members having refused to consider the schedule submitted at the last meeting by the exhibitors. The sub-committee's schedule is as follows: For theaters seating 300 people, a license of $175 per year; for theaters from 301 to 500, $200; for theaters from 501 to 1,000, $300; theaters from 1,001 to 1,500, $350, and for theaters seating from 1,501 up, $400. The present license is $200 per year for all houses.

The meeting was then adjourned, with the understanding that the entire license committee of the council will meet Thursday, June 21, to take final action in the matter. The committee on licenses will then report to the city council at the first meeting held afterwards, which will be on Monday evening, June 25.

It is the aim of the committee on licenses to have the schedule adopted by the council, so that it will take effect on July 1, the beginning of the new license period.

It is of note to state that for 1917, 81 licenses less were issued than for the year 1916. This difference was made up altogether by the going out of business of small houses.

The license committee's reports show that there are at present only 415 moving picture theaters in Chicago, with a total seating capacity of 219,950. Of these 415, 204 houses have 300 seating capacity or less; 12 have between 300 and 350; 13 have between 350 and 400; 9 have between 400 and 450; 8 between 450 and 500; 15 between 500 and 550; 14 between 550 and 600; 13 between 600 and 650; 20 between 650 and 700; 18 between 850 and 900; 8 between 900 and 950; 20 between 950 and 1,000; 3 between 1,000 and 1,050; 4 between 1,050 and 1,100; 6 between 1,100 and 1,200; 1 between 1,200 and 1,250; 1 between 1,250 and 1,300; 4 between 1,300 and 1,400; 2 between 1,400 and 1,450; 1 between 1,450 and 1,500, and the Covent Garden, with 2,250.

Vancouver Not To Open Until 5 P. M.

Exhibitors Decide Poor Attendance at Matinees Will Not Justify Doing Business Afternoons.

AT A meeting of the British Columbia Motion Picture Association, of Vancouver, B. C., C. R. Dippie, of the Mutual exchange, tendered his resignation as secretary-treasurer of the association. Mr. Dippie gave as his reason for resigning the fact that the association was really an exhibitors' organization, and, being an exchange man, he felt that the interests of those most concerned would be better served if the officials were drawn from the exhibitors' ranks. Mr. Dippie's resignation was accepted, and pending the appointment of a successor Mr. Gow acted as secretary pro tem.

After a good deal of discussion, the association has decided that all Vancouver picture theaters shall not open their doors during the summer months until the hour of 5 p. m. The exhibitors consider that the poor attendance at matinees during the heat of the summer will not compensate for the expense of keeping their houses open all day, especially now that the extra competition of the Orpheum, with its prize-giving scheme, has to be met.

The new arrangement went into operation on June 18, and is to be continued as long as found practicable. All houses which have a double shift for operators, musicians, or other employees will lay off those members of the staff, who will become unnecessary under the new arrangement. It is hoped that the increased business which ought to result in the evenings will fully make up for the abolition of the matinee. This will not apply to the Orpheum, as Con Jones is naturally not a member of the association, and having all the field to himself, he will probably need a squad of police to handle the crowds that will flock around the doors of his theater. This will be splendid for the returned soldiers, but at the same time many theater employees who will be thrown out of work partly as a result of the "charity" performances at the Orpheum, will make that charity look somewhat like a case of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." It is hoped that some sort of amicable understanding will be arrived at on this question in the near future.

Oklahoma Elects National Delegates.

Delegates Also Adopt Resolutions Thanking North Carolina Men for Work on War Tax.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oklahoma met at the Lee Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, June 12. The meeting was called to order by President A. B. Momand, who, after a few brief but inspiring remarks, introduced the national organizer, F. J. Herrington, who made a convincing talk upon organization. There were exhibitors from all parts of the state in attendance.

Resolutions were adopted thanking the members of the United States Senate, also Mr. Varner, Mr. Sams and Mr. Wells, of North Carolina, in appreciation of their untiring efforts defending the exhibitors against an unjust war tax. The secretary was instructed to write them a letter of thanks. Then came the election of delegates to the national convention, Chicago, July 14 to 22. The following were elected: A. B. Momand, L. W. Brophy, T. H. Boland, John Slocumb, J. S. Olive, A. H. Jones and William Finney. It was decided that the delegates should go to the convention uninstructed.

It was also recommended that meetings be held quarterly instead of once a year as in the past, as such meetings have a tendency to stir up enthusiasm in the members and bring applications of new members to the league, as was proven at this meeting, seven new members being admitted. The convention also started out on a campaign to increase the membership, and if the same spirit prevails at the time of the meeting in September the members claim they will have 75 per cent. of the exhibitors of the state as members of the league.

There was a rising vote of thanks extended to the national organizer and the meeting adjourned.

Lois Weber Starts Production

Has Her Own Studio Where She Will Direct a Series of Pictures to Be Known as Lois Weber Productions.

LOIS WEBER, the well-known woman director, started production last week on the first picture under her new contract. Miss Weber has now her own studio in Los Angeles, occupied only by a single company in which she will direct a series of pictures to be known as Lois Weber Productions.

Miss Weber's new studio is situated at Santa Monica and Vermont avenues. A stage 80 by 150 feet is now under construction. There will be sixteen dressing rooms, administrative offices, scenic and property rooms; in fact, everything pertaining to an up-to-date and well-equipped modern picture plant.

The first picture to be produced by Miss Weber is a seven-reel comedy drama called "The Whim," from a story and scenario of her own. Kenneth Harlan and Mildred Harris have been engaged to play the leading parts.

The remainder of the cast includes Adele Farrington, Gertrude Astor, Ethel Weber, Colin Kenny, Alfred Allen and Therese Young. Arthur Forde is the assistant director and Frank Ormston technical director.

In a studio of her own design, and under conditions as nearly ideal as they can well be made, Miss Weber hopes and expects to make more attractive and engrossing pictures than ever before. Miss Weber is done with the purely propaganda picture. But she still intends never to produce a story unless it is founded on a vital, timely idea, of public and permanent interest.

Phillips Smalley will be associated with his wife, as he has been in the past.

The Pickford family are now represented at the Famous Players-Lasky western studio. Jack Pickford is co-starring with Louise Huff, and Lottie Pickford is shortly to appear in the supporting cast of Fannie Ward.

Yorke Metro Players Return

In Arizona Lockwood Company Gets Typical Western Atmosphere Taking Part in Annual Round-up.

AFTER two weeks spent camped on a ten-thousand-acre cattle range in Arizona, Fred J. Balshofer's Yorke-Metro Producing Company has returned to the Los Angeles studios, where the remaining scenes of the western picture featuring Harold Lockwood will be completed. The story being produced is "Under Handicap," from the novel by Jackson Gregory, adapted for the screen by Fred Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer.

While making the scenes at the Arizona ranch, the Yorke-Metro players were unusually fortunate in being encamped at a point near the final drive of an annual round-up, in which the cowboys of several large ranches in the territory combined forces and drove all the cattle together within a radius of many miles.

Miss Anna Little, who joined the Lockwood Company in Arizona, was one of the factors in preventing a serious accident, when Fred Balshofer, directing a scene, mounted a bolder which slid from its support and toppled down the canyon. Miss Little gave warning to the producer in time for him to leap to safety.

Tyrone Power Signs With Marine

Tyrone Power has signed a contract with the Marine Film Company, of Los Angeles. The Marine Film Company is the name of a new concern recently organized in Los Angeles, of which M. Phillip Hansen is general manager. As mentioned in this paper last week, Henry Otto, who produced "Undine" for Universal and "Mister 44" for Yorke-Metro, has been appointed director of this new company.

Francis Burnham is the leading woman. Miss Burnham recently left the California Motion Picture Corporation and was previously connected with the Fox company.

The first feature of the company is a sea story of seven reels, written by Richard Willis. The subject is a modern Lorelei story with a mythical parallel. Most of the scenes will be taken at the Santa Barbara Islands.

Included in the cast are Jay Belasco, who plays the juvenile lead, and John Oaker, who will take the heavy part. Agnes Blanchard will appear in the role of the legendary Lorelei and Frances Burnham will be the modern Lorelei. Among others in the cast are Winifred Greenwood and Gypsy Abbott.

Director Henry Otto states that he expects that this new picture will far surpass his famous "Undine."

The Marine Film Company will be at the old Kalem Studios in Hollywood. Their features will probably be released on the state-right plan.

Indian Potentate Visits Universal City

With an entire absence of ostentation and without even a single servant in attendance, a royal son of India visited Universal City this week. The visitor was Prince Deva Ram Sokul Maharaj, nephew of Tuhski Ram Maharaj, ruler of Darjeeling, a principality in the Himalayas, independent of British rule. The Prince, who is twenty-six years old, has been educated in Europe, graduating from Oxford College and taking post-graduate courses at Heidelberg and Bonne and also at Harvard and Chicago Universities.

Little Gertrude Carlos, daughter of Mr. Carlos, presented the player with a bouquet of American Beauties

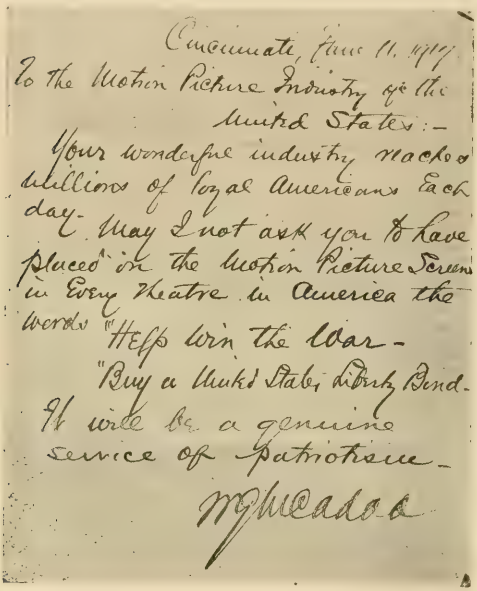
McAdoo Writes Letter to Industry

Secretary of the Treasury Appeals to Power of Screen to Help Float Liberty Bond—Other Activities.

THE flotation of the Liberty Bond issue of $2,000,000,000 has been successfully accomplished. The motion picture industry contributed to the result its full share. The influence of the screen was recognized by Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, who in a notable message expressed his appreciation of its power. Secretary McAdoo handed the letter to H. Serkowich, managing secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League and Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. The occasion was a big meeting in Cincinnati on the evening of June 12. The following is a facsimile of the letter:



Cincinnati, June 11, 1917.

To the Motion Picture Industry of the United States:—

Your wonderful industry reaches millions of loyal Americans each day. May I not ask you to have placed on the Motion Picture Screens in Every Theatre in America the words "Help Win the War—"Buy a United States Liberty Bond. It will be a genuine service of Patriotism—

WmGAdoo

Although it is too soon to get exact figures of the amount subscribed to the Liberty Loan through motion picture sources, reports received by the National Association of the motion picture industry indicate that it will approximate $5,000,000. A list submitted by the association shows amounts approximating $2,000,000. These results do not take into consideration the countless millions subscribed by people who were influenced by the various loan campaigns conducted upon the screen of America's motion picture theaters.

The National Association brought every resource of the motion picture industry into play with such success that in all probability the final returns will show the allottment to be exceeded by a comfortable margin. The producing and distributing companies rallied to the call and employees of motion picture concerns entered with a will into the campaign. Prominent motion picture actors and actresses responded with enthusiasm. Their subscriptions alone will total upwards of a million. Subscriptions from the big companies jumped quickly into six figures while men and women of the screen both volunteered with their money and services.

The committee sent 30,000 patriotic slides to the 15,000 motion picture exhibitors of the United States, together with letters from Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo and Association President Brady, asking for co-operation. Of perhaps greater influence was the patriotic trailer which was distributed broadcast to exhibitors. In animated form this told the need of support of the Liberty Loan, ending with an inspiring paragraph from President Wilson's speech asking Congress to declare that a state of war existed.

Roscoe Arbuckle and the members of his staff subscribed for $41,000 worth of Liberty Bonds.

Amid enthusiasm June 12 was informally made Liberty Loan Day for General Film with the inauguration of a special system for aiding employes of the big distributing organization to buy bonds in the government's campaign for the Liberty Loan. The outcome was an immediate subscription estimated at $50,000 by executives and employes of General Film all over the country.

Manager Harold Edel of the Strand Theater put in a busy week doing his "bit" in the film drive for Liberty Loan subscriptions. The theater and executive staff were put at the disposal of the Liberty Bond Committee which, availing itself of Mr. Edel's generous interest, had workers at the Strand every day during the week. On Sunday Mr. Edel inaugurated a speaking campaign from the Strand stage and secured the services of some of America's foremost citizens, women prominent in financial and social circles. On Monday afternoon William A. Brady, president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industries, appeared and made one of his characteristic right-from-the-shoulder speeches.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company announces that the subscriptions to the Liberty Loan on the part of employes of the company totals $79,000. When all the Western studios are heard from it is expected that the total will exceed $100,000. Nearly all these subscripitions are on the instalment plan except a few subscribed outright by the officials of the company.

Hahn to Arrange Score for "Hate"

CARL HAHN has been engaged by the Fairmont Film Corporation to arrange the musical score for "Hate," the seven-reel feature recently completed and which will soon be given a New York run at one of the Broadway theaters. The final details in connection with the work of Mr. Hahn has been selected to do were carefully gone over Friday and actual work on the various compositions have already been started. Mr. Hahn is one of America's foremost conductors; at present he is orchestral director for the New York Arion Society, the New York Mozart Society and the Brooklyn Arion.

The decision on the part of the Fairmount Film Corporation to send out a complete orchestration with "Hate" was reached by Robert Bolling, vice president, early during the past week. Mr. Hahn was selected because of his recognized ability as a conductor and as a composer. The score will be so arranged that it will be possible to give it orchestration by the largest as well as the smallest orchestras. Most of the selections will be highly dramatic in their scope, with a wonderfully tender and inspiring motif running throughout the entire script.

Carl Hahn.

Mr. Hahn has won signal honors in the musical world. He received his training exclusively in the United States, particularly at the College of Music, where his father, Theodore Hahn, the well-known flutist, has been a member of the faculty since the regime of Theodore Thomas, the first head of the famous institution.

In arranging the score for "Hate" Mr. Hahn promises a number of intensely dramatic compositions of his own. He will be unhampered in his work.

PRESIDENT LAEMMLE STARTS EAST.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who has been visiting the coast studios of the company at Universal City, left for the East Friday, June 15. The evening before he gave a farewell dance and supper, which many prominent film folk from other studios attended. It was the largest social event of its kind ever held in the film colony. Mrs. Laemmle accompanied her husband.

United to Distribute Power Machines

Arrangements Completed by Which New Corporation Will Handle the Projectors in All Its Territory.

AN operating arrangement of far reaching importance and beneficial effect on exhibitors has been consummated between the Nicholas Power Company and the United Theater Equipment Corporation, whereby the famous product of the Power Company will be distributed in the territory now covered by United Service Stations.

For seventeen years Nicholas Power has been manufacturing motion picture projectors, and today the Power machine stands as a notable credit to the man who has concentrated his energies and efforts in perfecting motion picture projection apparatus. Today there is not a country in the world that does not boast of its Power machines. It is estimated that there are more than fifteen thousand Power's machines in use today.

The United Theater Equipment Corporation, in announcing its policy some weeks ago, promised to give the exhibitor something more than the ordinary sales service of machines, equipment and supplies—a practical individual service with particular attention to the care and maintenance of motion picture apparatus. The officials of the corporation being practical supply and equipment men and understanding fully the requirements of the motion picture exhibitor, have laid plans to establish an efficiency in projection which has never been equaled.

The service plan operated in conjunction with the Nicholas Power Company is the first big step towards bringing the manufacturer, the distributor and the exhibitor into close equipment relationship, all working together in harmony for one object—perfectly projected pictures.

Under the new arrangement, all branches of the United Theater Equipment Corporation will at all times keep on hand a sufficient number of Power's loan mechanisms for the benefit and use of owners of Power's machines. These loan mechanisms will be furnished free in an emergency to any user of the Power's apparatus, or while repairs are being made. Each branch will also carry on hand a large stock of Power's parts and supplies, so that replacements can be made immediately. Each branch manager will give his personal attention to the installation and maintenance of all Power's equipment in his territory and expert machine men will regularly inspect and give advice on repairs.

Mr. Bach, who formerly was in charge of the publicity service department in Canada for the Universal Company, was at the time he resigned to join the M. H. Hoffman, Inc., about to leave on an extended trip throughout the United States, installing service departments, similar to the one he originated in Canada, in all the main offices of the Universal Company. Mr. Bach will now take up that work. Prior to that he will take a holiday in Canada.

Mr. Bach's headquarters will be in New York City, and the first service department to be organized will be in the New York Universal office.

VIRGINIA PEARSON SPEAKS FOR ORPHANS.

Never in her career as a motion picture player has Virginia Pearson received such an ovation as was accorded her at the opening ceremonies of the Israel Orphan Asylum in New York's Ghetto last week. Although her appearance as the guest of honor was advertised for 9:30, the new orphan building was jammed at 7:30. When Miss Pearson arrived later a crowd two blocks long filled the street to such an extent that her car could not approach the building. A hurry call for the reserves brought a large force.

Miss Pearson gave a stirring patriotic address and sold 1,500 photographs of herself, donating the entire receipts to the orphan fund.

Theater Men and Operators Express Appreciation of Work of World's Projection Expert.

THE Moving Picture World is receiving letters from the points visited by F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of this publication, in which the writers express their appreciation of the good work accomplished by the Rooseveltian exponent of high-class projection. We quote from a few of these:

Montgomery, Alabama.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank you for the visit of F. H. Richardson to this city. I assure you that since his talk and his praise of the work done by the boys, things have improved wonderfully. He seems to have given them a new pride in their work and new ideas of its importance and its possibilities. I feel that his visit and his talk did much good here, and I am accordingly grateful to you for having permitted his coming. R B. WILBY, Colonial Theater.

Tampa, Florida.

Just a few lines to show our gratitude and appreciation toward your representative, F. H. Richardson. Mr. Richardson has opened the eyes of every operator in this city and all have benefited by his lecture and the good advice he gave.

We thank you as well as Mr. Richardson for your good efforts toward the betterment of projection.

MANUEL NASTI, Secretary I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. O., No. 321.

Tucson, Arizona.

The undersigned are taking this opportunity of thanking you for making it possible for the operators as well as managers to listen to a gentleman of the caliber of Mr. Richardson. We all have profited by his lecture. (Signed by Managers and Operators of Tucson.)

Victoria, British Columbia.

The visit to this city by Mr. Richardson was greatly appreciated by both the managers and operators, which, no doubt, will be a great benefit to both the managers and the operators.

E. C. CLARK, Manager, Columbia Theater.

Vancouver, B. C.

Everybody present was delighted with Mr. Richardson's lecture. His great descriptive powers and keen sense of humor lent an added interest to the most impressive lecture ever heard in this city in connection with the moving picture industry. Mr. Richardson's powers for bringing home the vital facts concerning each one's part in his special line of work was unexcelled, and great credit is due this man who, by his integrity and determination against great obstacles, has done so much to bring the projection end of the industry to such a high plane as it occupies today. A. O. HANSON, Secretary and Treasurer, M. P. M. O.

Missoula, Montana.

Some of the things Mr. Richardson told us hit home very hard, but we are all Missourians and consequently want to learn and want to be shown, and we appreciated having the pleasure of Mr. Richardson's presence among us, and take this opportunity of thanking you for the good work we believe you are doing in sending him through the country.

MISSOULA AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

Walla Walla, Washington.

It is the writer's opinion that too much praise can not be given as to the value of these straight-from-the-shoulder talks in which Mr. Richardson points out to us our glaring faults and at the same time points out the cure.

How easy it is to find fault and not suggest a remedy! But our friend not only finds the fault but gives us the remedy, and for that we are duly grateful. I trust that this good work may not cease with this trip, but that we may look forward to the not too distant future in anticipation of another visit.

Personally I want to express my keen appreciation of your generosity in making it possible for us to hear Mr. Richardson and I know that all the boys here join me in this expression.

Kent Returns from Inspection Tour

Sales Manager of General Film Talks of Visits to Exchange Managers and Exhibitors.

AFTER a trip of inspection to various mid-western branches of General Film, including, among others, Detroit, Chicago and Minneapolis, General Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent returned to New York with this important section of his field confirming his expectations in regard to various new merchandising methods.

Mr. Kent's tour was devoted not alone to branch managers, but to exhibitors in each branch territory. His main purpose, however, was directly to instruct branch managers in the application of modern systems and policies that have been adopted by General Film. His trip was part of the educational campaign waged from headquarters and which includes every member of the vast organization.

"We are requiring that our branch managers discard many obsolete policies that seem to be a sort of tradition in the film industry," says Mr. Kent. "Many merchandising methods new to this business are being introduced as swiftly as the magnitude of the organization permits. We find that most of these plans not only fit well into the distribution of motion pictures, but are badly needed. What we are successfully approaching is the minimum of delay and expense to the exhibitor and ourselves.

"We are receiving most favorable comments from the exhibitors throughout the country whose complaints have been investigated by the home office and straightened out for them. In fact, we are requiring our branch managers to make a written report to the home office whenever they find it necessary to discontinue the service of any exhibitor as the outcome of a misunderstanding."

Mr. Kent reports that he found conditions vastly improved from the General Film standpoint.

Melbourne Macdowell

THE news that Melbourne Macdowell has become a member of the Triangle stock company at Culver City should prove of unusual interest to those screen fans who also recall the striking impersonations that this actor contributed to the legitimate stage in years past.

With his wife, the late Fanny Davenport, one of the most celebrated American tragediennes of the past generation, Macdowell appeared in many classic productions. His best-known roles were Marc Antony in "Julius Caesar," Scarpia in "La Tosca," Loris Ipanoff in "Fedora," Almerio in "Gismonda" and Andress in "Theodora Virginius."

Melbourne Macdowell.

Melbourne Macdowell was born about fifty years ago in Washington, South River, N. J. Although the son of well-to-do parents, the young Macdowell insisted on living his own life in his way. He followed the sea intermittently from his eleventh to his twenty-first year, only taking time enough off to spend a few terms in high school.

The rugged outdoor life built up a wonderful physique. He stands a half-inch less than six feet in height and weighs 200 pounds in working trim. He is active and is able to give an account of himself in a melee with the mitts.

As the heavy lead in "The Flame of the Yukon," opposite Dorothy Dalton, Macdowell will make his debut in the silent drama. Without previous experience in screen acting, he is said to have created an unusually telling characterization in the role of "Black Jack" Hovey, proprietor of the Midas Cafe where big scenes in this Alaskan drama take place.

BURTON HOLMES HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

Cable advices last week from Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, who is now in Australia making travel pictures for Paramount, told of his having narrowly escaped death in Hawaii, while obtaining some wonderful pictures of the eruption of the volcano in Hawaii. The cable states, "Party barely escaped death from eruption. Trip delayed two weeks. Letter follows."

"In all my twenty-seven years of almost continuous traveling, this experience in Hawaii is one of the most remarkable that I have ever had," said Mr. Holmes. "The pictures that we secured will undoubtedly create a sensation when they are shown, for they are wonderfully vivid and contain far more action than any pictures that were ever made of a volcano while in eruption."

Three New Paramounts

Fannie Ward in "Her Strange Wedding," House Peters in "The Heir of the Ages," and Fatty Arbuckle in "Rough House."

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

OF three new Paramounts, the most noticeable for acting, for story and for direction is "Her Strange Wedding" with Fannie Ward in a role that affords her scope for some remarkable work. It is a good interesting picture, full of suspense and a sense of newness. The picture will appeal mostly because of Fannie Ward's handling of the big dramatic situation. She plays a society girl who touches our sympathy by her sense and by the suggested backgrounds of estimable character of her actions.

We know that the young man she is marrying is a thief—she finds it out the first day of the honeymoon. How the two react is kept within actual humanity by restrained acting on the part of the characters and the impression made is helped by unusually good subtitles. Tom Forman has the part of the young man and Jack Dean plays his older brother, the hero of the picture. Melodramatic incidents are grouped around the picture's dramatic truth and it goes well. The screen plot is by Charles Maigne from the story by George Middleton and it is a five reel Lasky picture.

"The Heir of the Ages."

This five reel Pallas picture assumes that the eternal triangle worked itself out in the Flint Age very much as it does today. We don't know a great deal about the Flint Age, and can assume that it does; but to use the two ages in the same picture as counter-parts in the same story is too old to be in any special degree artistic. "The Heir of the Ages" with House Peters as the hero strong man, Nina Byron as the girl and Eugene Pallette as the weak brother opens with scenes in the Flint Age and then with the same characters the story is played with a background of American western life. The triangle practically is the same both times. The big, strong brother loses for a time the love of his girl to the personality of the morally weak brother. In both stories there's a test that shows up the weak brother. In the Flint Age the strong one is sacrificed, in the modern story the weakling succumbs. It makes a fair picture. It has suspense and many pretty scenes. A vigorous fisticuff fight will please many. It gives no new exposition of humanity. It is by William Addison Lathrop.

"Rough House."

"Fatty" Arbuckle will give many a laugh in "Rough House" a Paramount picture in two reels. The astonishing attention he gives to a conflagration in his bed room will be a new laugh producer. There is no unoccupied moment, and while there is much in the picture that is old, none of it is slow. Nearly all of it is good.

"The Great White Trail"

Seven-Reel Photoplay Produced by Whartons Has Considerable Iterest, but Motives Are Not Always Well Handled.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE subject chosen by the Whartons for their first independent production is one that will prove interesting to most moving picture patrons. "The Great White Trail" is the title of the picture, which is in seven reels. Leopold D. Wharton wrote the scenario and directed its production. Long experience in filming mystery and crime serials has not been the best school for a man who undertakes the writing and production of a serious story in which normal human beings are supposed to go through the reasonable tribulations of life even as it is lived in the outposts of Alaska.

Certain fundamental laws of dramatic construction must be observed and the motives that actuate the characters must stand the test of being born of common sense or all the anguish of the heroine and the noble conduct of the hero go for naught. The author has also made the mistake of having these two characters take turns at losing their wits.

Fortunately, the greater part of the weak incidents come in the first part of the picture. The readiness of the husband to believe the worst of his wife and his promptness in turning her and her baby out of the house do not give him a very good start with the spectator, especially as the man he suspects is his wife's brother. Sixteen years later the entire family are found in Alaska and, after great trials and tribulations, are reunited. In telling this story the producer has taken advantage of the winter climate of the Northwest, and introduced many snow scenes of great beauty.

A few minor details of production will not bear close examination, but the general impression is favorable to the picture. A comic butcher boy is lugged into the story, the author and the actor both doing their best to justify his presence.

The photoplay is fairly well acted. Doris Kenyon and Paul Gordon head the company.

"The Little Orphan"

Ella Hall in Characteristic Child Part Is Star of Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay that Never Fails to Entertain.

exploits during the action of the story that are equally amusing—when viewed from a safe distance.

The first thing communicated to the spectator is that three well-to-do bachelors conclude to adopt a Belgian orphan apiece. All three suppose they are to become the fathers of boys, but the youngest man in the group learns on the arrival of the children that his foster child is a girl. He makes the best of the matter, even after he discovers that the goat and the rooster are also to become members of his family.

There is plenty of comedy in the picture and a love motive is supplied when the little orphan arrives at the proper age and discovers that she prefers a husband to a father. This exchange is not accomplished, of course, without sufficient playing at cross purposes. In the meantime the transformation of the little emigrant into a charming young lady is well worth watching.

Ella Hall's demure assumption of the part, her unaffected method of impersonating such youthful persons, have just the right touch. Her success in this line is a long one, and the little girl from Belgium is one of the most attractive of the list.

"A Bit o' Heaven"

Kate Douglas Wiggin's Story Charmingly Done in Moving Pictures by the Frieder Film Corporation.

Reviewed by James S. M. McQuade.

IN the later seventies Kate Douglas Wiggin wrote "The Birds' Christmas Carol," and the story in pamphlet form chanced to come into the hands of a publisher who immediately saw in it the evidence of unusual talent. He sought the author, who at the time was unknown, and as the result the book soon appeared in several languages, and it is known today wherever civilization exists. Strange to say the story escaped the notice of well known producers, and it remained for the Frieder Film corporation, a Chicago organization recently formed, to tell the story in moving pictures, under the title, "A Bit o' Heaven."

The story has to do with a crippled child, Carol Bird, the only daughter of her wealthy parents, who are proud of two strong, healthy sons, in addition. Little Carol is a hopeless invalid, and the tender love and affection of the entire family go out to her, fearing the day when the soul shall take its flight from the fragile body. Carol has a devoted Uncle Jack also, a traveler in distant lands, who cheers her by a letter, in which he promises to come home and spend Chirstmas with her.

But little Carol has other friends, outside of her sphere indeed, but nevertheless faithful, loyal friends, who would go any length to spare her pain or to bring her pleasure. These are none other than the nine ragged members of the Ruggles family, little boys and girls who live nearby, whom Carol has often watched at play and wished that she could join them. Mrs. Ruggles, their widowed mother, toils ceaselessly to bring up this healthy brood of hers—from Sarah Maude, the elder, and the little mother, down to sturdy little Larry, the pet and pride of the Ruggles' family.

Shortly before Christmas, Carol, who had been planning for sometime to give a pleasant surprise to her Ruggles friends, asks her mother if she can invite them to a Christmas dinner. Mrs. Bird gladly consents, and so the letter of invitation is written by Carol and is carried to Mrs. Ruggles by Sarah Maude.

The commotion which this letter creates is best told in the pictures, as are also the preparations made by Mrs. Ruggles to have her children appear in presentable condition. The mirth which these preparations create seizes the spectator with such continuous grip that he loses the sense of time and place. He is truly in the midst of it all, at times earnestly sympathizing with Mrs. Ruggles in the knotty problems that confront her and sincerely admiring the resourcefulness that overcomes every difficulty.

Peory, for instance, has no stockings, and Mrs. Ruggles surmounts the difficulty by telling Clem, her eldest boy, to go out and ask Mrs. Cullen, a neighbor, to lend her a pair and to promise that Peory will give her boy Jim Cullen half of her candy. Peory flares up at this bargain, but Mrs. Ruggles settles the matter by asking: "Which would you rather do, Give Jim half your candy or go to the party barelegged?" The said stockings are a sight—striped, not like a zebra, but black and white!

"They'll be the makin' of you! Ain't they stylish, Peory?" Mrs. Ruggles says to that disgruntled young lady, as she surveys them with delight. Then in an aside to the other gazing members of the family, Mrs. Ruggles says confidently, "Nobody'll fergit she's got 'em on."

This is only a single sample of the mirthful preparations, not omitting the dress rehearsal to which Mrs. Ruggles subjects her brood, before they depart for the Bird mansion. They are certain to delight both old and young, and people of all ages.

The scene showing the Ruggles' family around the Christmas table, with Uncle Jack seated at the head and the invalid Carol looking delightedly on, will remain with everyone who sees it for sometime to come. The director has seen to it that the Ruggles children eat just as they have been accustomed to eat at home, and Larry eats so ravenously that his face soon begins to pucker up with pain, which comes from an overgorged "tummie."

The closing scene is one of sadness. The merry Ruggles children have gone, laden with beautiful Christmas presents, taken from Carol's Christmas tree. In her mother's arms, the child is seized by a great faintness. "Mother, I do think we have kept Christ's birthday this time just as He wanted it done," she whispers, and then passes away.

This picture is now being handled on the State rights plan.

"The Star Spangled Banner"

Genuine Patriotism Portrayed in Edison Three-Reel Photoplay Written by Sumner Williams.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

FULL of genuine, unadulterated patriotism is "The Star Spangled Banner," an Edison three-reel photoplay. It was made from a magazine story by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews. In adapting this story to the screen, Sumner Williams has done a piece of original work. The theme of the story is respect for the flag of one's nativity.

Scene from "The Star Spangled Banner" (Edison).

Paul Kelly has the part of an American youth, brought up in England, who has lost all respect for the American flag. Herbert Evans is a colonel of the United States Marines. A regiment of the marines takes part in the picture. The story is set at the Marine barracks. Fred Gleason is an old sergeant of the marines, whom the American boy insults.

The retreat ceremony, the lowering of the flag, at the marine barracks is pictured in a very impressive manner. As the young American stands there with his hat on while everyone else is uncovered, the audience cannot help convicting him of the grossest disrespect. The raising of the flag at the end of the picture, when the American salutes it as everyone else does, is another inspiring scene. These situations have a mighty emotional appeal.

Here are no bloody battle scenes; no Fourth of July claptrap; no titles prating of the stars and stripes. The story takes place in time of peace. The present enemies of the United States are not mentioned. No intelligent alien would feel the least discomfort upon viewing this picture.

Everyone knows how audiences are stirred by photographs of men of national prominence. In this picture the photographs of Grant, Stonewall Jackson, Lee and Farragut are skillfully interwoven in a way that is bound to stir enthusiasm.

This is an excellent play for everyone, but especially for children of all ages.

Pathe Pictures

"The Cigarette Girl," Five-Reel; "A Relentless Fate," Chapter of "The Neglected Wife," and "Max, the Heartbreaker."

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

PROBABLY the best picture that Gladys Huelett has ever been featured in—and the writer has seen some mighty good Hulette pictures—is "The Cigarette Girl," a five-reeler produced by Astra for release by Pathe on July 7. Unlike several previous pictures in which Miss Hulette was featured, this one is not so obviously a vehicle for her: the story is interesting and out of the ordinary, and while the character played by Miss Hulette dominates at all times, the star is not the whole works. The offering is a most pleasant and interesting combination of star and story, strengthened by a fine supporting cast and intelligent direction.

Scene from "The Cigarette Girl" (Pathe).

The story is one of New York life—of a phase of New York life that is little known outside the inner circle. It tells of a framed-up alienation-of-affections suit against a young millionaire and of the part played in the lives of all by a cigarette girl in a cabaret who is as honest as she is sweet. The story leads into the novel situation in which the cigarette girl becomes the "name-only" wife of the wealthy youth so that the designing woman with whom the youth is infatuated cannot obtain money. The youth's fortune is turned over to his wife, and she saves him from the woman and himself. In the end the girl and love triumph over the circumstances that are working against the youth.

William Parke directed the picture with a care and a knowledge of the requirements of the story that have resulted in greatly adding to the worth of the production. William Parke, Jr., is seen in the role opposite Miss Hulette. Warner Oland is a smooth and plausible villain. Florence Hamilton does good work as the villain's wife. An unnamed member of the cast, who plays the part of Trot, a cabaret dancer, is a young man of considerable ability. His work is specially commendable.

"A Relentless Fate."

In this, the eighth episode of "The Neglected Wife," serial, Kennedy quarrels with Margaret over her many friends, and he leaves her angrily. He is nominated for Congress. At a big meeting an exciting free-for-all fight takes place and Kennedy is spirited away by Doyle. Margaret and Norwood follow. Kennedy is thrown from Doyle's machine and wakes up in the arms of Margaret, who has followed the Doyle machine with Norwood. Norwood realizes Kennedy is "the other man." Ruth Roland, Roland Bottomley and the other members of the cast do their usual work.

"Max, the Heartbreaker."

Max Linder is seen in a two-reel comedy that combines the scenic beauty of the Riviera with humor of the sort that has made Max famous. Some of the scenes are truly beautiful. The comedy element is rather slow in coming, but when it comes Max gets over a full share of laughs. The story tells of two girls crazy over Max and who later fight a duel over him. But Max gets one of the bullets. Some scenes in the doctor's office are quite funny.

"House of Cards"

Five-Reel Drama Featuring Catherine Calvert and Frank Mills Released by Art Dramas.

Reviewed by Ben. H. Grimm.

MOSTLY on the strength of never-failing "kid stuff," "House of Cards," a five-reel drama featuring Catherine Calvert and Frank Mills, and to be released on the Art Dramas program, will get over. The picture was written and directed by Madame Blache, and produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation. It is presented by Herbert Blache. Kittens Reichert, a little girl player, and an unnamed negro boy, should rightfully be featured, for it is on these two that most of the burden of entertainment rests. Without their presence in the picture it would have been as flat as territory excavated by retreating German troops. The two are responsible with the aid of their director, for humorous and appealing bits that have always made a strong appeal to a certain proportion of picturegoers.

There is much to commend about the picture, and equally much to condemn. Credit must first be given for some of the directorial touches and photographic feats; and there are many pretty scenes in the picture. And, too, the scenes visualizing the dream of the professional woman who has neglected her child and believes her dead are quite good. The chief fault of the picture lies in its lack of story. Madame Blache has touched upon two deep and serious questions—child labor and the woman who pays more attention to her career—a scientific career—than her child. But Madame Blache's touches on these two vital things are superficial—she never scratches below the surface, and a seriousness of purpose with which she starts out her picture is almost summarily dropped soon after the start. The husband of the woman, too, neglects the child, and the child runs away with a negro newsboy. The parents believe the girl dead, and the husband thinks it best to separate. The woman becomes ill with brain fever. The husband, who has turned down a proffered bribe and who beings an inevtigation of child labor, meets the little daughter, who has come to search for work in a factory. The child brings the parents together.

Catharine Calvert, the widow of Paul Armstrong, the playwright, has the role of the woman. The husband is played by Frank Mills. James O'Neill is one of the supporting players.

Production details are thoroughly adequate.

THE third episode of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," by E. W. Hornung, entitled "The Tracking of Stingaree," produces an excellent moral effect. Stingaree teaches Howie a temperance lesson and saves a young Irish girl from elopement with a good-looking fugitive from justice, who is also a drinking man. Interest is well kept up throughout by skillfully keeping several problems in the air at once. Stingaree wants to save Kate O'Brien. Howie quarrels with him because he wants to intercept a shipment of gold. So Howie goes off to get drunk and give Stingaree up to the troopers. Stingaree and Howie reunite in time to save Kate.

Edythe Sterling is very pretty as the young Irish girl. Miss Sterling is a new actress who is just coming to the front. In the second and third episodes of this series she acquits herself nobly. True Boardman, wearing a white coat and a monocle and riding his white horse, is ever the same chivalrous, picturesque Stingaree. He displays horsemanship when he rides standing up on the horse's back to jump into a tree. Paul C. It should be noted, too, that the troopers look as if they were really members of the New South Wales Mounted Police. This is a "Western" that should please everyone.

"Seaside Romeos."

This is a Ham and Bud comedy. Ham has a Welsh rabbit directed by Carl Harbaugh and produced by William Fox. The star's part is that of a near-sighted bookkeeper in a country flour mill who gets Broadway struck and visits that celebrated street.

Once in sight of Times Square he catches the spirit of the locality and blossoms into a real sport. In fact, he hits such a hot pace that it is difficult to believe in his experiences. The author asks you to believe in them only to the end of the story, however. At that point he owns up that Hezekiah Dill's visit to the city was all a dream. This method of becoming a Broadway sport has its advantage: you save your money, no matter how much you are forced to part with during the dream.

Carl Harbaugh has seen to it that his scenario was well treated in the way of production, and has directed on excellent cast. Stuart Holmes is unexpectedly amusing as the thrifty hero who only travels in his sleep. He is supported by Wanda Petit, Dan Mason, Mabel Rutter, W. B. Green, J. Sullivan, Mario Majeroni and Jay Wilson.

"The Maelstrom"

Five-Part Vitagraph Production of Ordinary Calibre Features Earle Williams.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NOT in any way out of the ordinary as a moving picture production is "The Maelstrom." It represents a type of quite vivid melodrama, and leans to old methods of picture-making rather than new. The story, to commence with, is one in which we are supposed to take things for granted and hesitate to ask the why and wherefore of anything. The characters just stay "put" as the author placed them, and make little effort to explain themselves. And after all there are many people who would find enjoyment in "The Maelstrom" if for no other reason than that it puts up at least one good fight.

Earle Williams and Dorothy Kelly have the leads with Denton Vane, John Robertson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Gordon Gray, Bernard Seigel and Robert Gaillord in the supporting cast. The story treats of how Jimmie Hallet, a wealthy young New Yorker, while stopping to light a cigarette one foggy night by a lamppost, has a package of papers thrust into his hand by a girl, and of incidents which follow in consequence.

Going where the girl's message leads him he enters a dark house and is about to turn the light on in one of the rooms when he is knocked unconscious by a blow from a person hidden by the darkness. When he awakes he finds himself in the same room with a dead man, and tries to telephone the police. In the search for the murderers of the dead man the millionaire is always in evidence, following in the awake of notes which lead him into trouble.

The girl, who has been tricked into a false marriage with one of the criminals of the story, finally discovers that she is free and the mutual affection which has sprung up between her and the millionaire ends in betrothal.

"The Upper Crust"

Splendid Mutual-American Featuring Gail Kane Deals Principally With Refined Comedy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the best five-part productions on the market will be found in "The Upper Crust" with Gail Kane in the leading feminine role. Playing opposite to her with fine success is Douglas McLean. Mr. McLean's work is very effective, and we believe that Miss Kane has never done a more charming piece of work in pictures. Eugenie Ford in the role of Mrs. Todd, the mother of the lazy son of a rich widow, also does excellent work. The picture teems with clean, wholesome comedy, and the sub-titles are skillfully worded and arranged. Neither does the picture contain any waste matter; it leads easily to a finish without a dull moment, and represents a type much different from the ordinary moving picture.

The story treats how a young woman on the verge of starvation answers an advertisement for a housekeeper. Upon applying at the home of the rich widow she is accepted and sent immediately away to take charge of Mrs. Todd's country home, with enough money for running expenses and permission to make use of Mrs. Todd's charge account for any clothing she may require. Molly O'Toole, as the young woman is named, is mistaken for Mrs. Todd by the villagers, and Molly in a mischievous mood takes advantage of their innocence and proceeds to pose as that lady.

This rash procedure later gets her into considerable trouble out of which she is helped by Mrs. Todd's son, whom she has never seen, and who has also taken advantage of the situation as he sees it and taken a position as her chauffeur. Young Todd, it should be explained, had previously in accordance with his irresponsible, mischief-loving nature, bought out the traveling store of a corn-cure merchant. Tiring of this life he had given the outfit away and had walked across country to enjoy the solitude of his mother's country home.

Discovered by the pretty housekeeper making himself comfortable in the house he is taken for a tramp and promptly dismissed. The situation develops in a very amusing and consistent fashion, and finally he becomes her chauffeur and they have fallen in love with each other, and she is about to marry the millionaire next door for his money, his identity is made known to her and we leave them in each other's arms with the mother looking on approvingly.

In fact, the rolling of the boat furnishes Charlie with opportunities for laughmaking all during the first reel. There is some uproariously funny stuff pulled when the bunch of immigrants go to the messroom for eats. During the trip over Charlie meets a beautiful girl—Edna Purviance. "The Golden Lotus," Five-Reel Feature on Brady-International Program, and "The Divorce Game," Produced by Peerless.

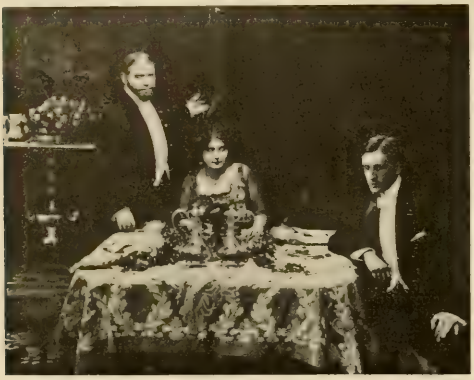
"The Golden Lotus."

THE French company, directed by Louis Mercanton, are the producers of "The Golden Lotus," a five-reel feature picture on the Brady International Service program. The story is typically French, but it has an excellent moral, with virtue triumphant and a sinning woman paying for her transgressions with her life. The leading character is a handsome young woman named Leah, who acts as a decoy for a gambling house, where infatuated young men ruin themselves for her sake. Having allowed herself the luxury of awakening a pure passion in the breast of a wealthy young novelist who does not know her real character, Leah finds that she loves him truly in return.



Scene from "The Golden Lotus" (World).

The facts about Leah come to light, however, and the novelist turns from her in disgust. He goes to Africa and, on his return, learns that Leah, who knew him only by the name he used on his books, has become his father's wife. She tries to win his love again, but the young man has bestowed his affection upon another woman, the sister of his best friend, and Leah's efforts are useless. Her elderly husband then discovers his wife's past history, and she ends her troubles by committing suicide.

The plot is well put togther, and the direction by Louis Mercanton exhibits the same skill in the choice of artistic locations, competent actors and general superiority of production that characterized the first picture of this series in which Regina Badet played the leading part. As Leah in "The Golden Lotus" she has a role that is suited to her in every way and she makes the most of her opportunities. Martin Bradford, George Corday, Guy Favieres, Paul Guide, Paul Obrey and Louise Sand are the other acomplished members of the cast.

"The Divorce Game."

Taken from the play "Mlle. Fifi," written by Leo Ditrichstein, "The Divorce Game," a five-reel Peerless photoplay featuring Alice Brady, has a French locale, although the part played by the star is that of an American heiress married to a French nobleman. The titled gentleman has a full supply of blue blood and spendthrift habits. The mother of the heiress, who has already paid her son-in-law's debts on two occasions, refuses to foot the bills for the third time, and the young couple, who are still in love with each other, plan to get the better of Mamma.

The scheme involves a scandal, a divorce and a certain little actress named Fifi Dupet. Matters turn out much more seriously then was anticipated, and a French duel, during which the nobleman is wounded, brings the heiress, the actress and Mamma upon the field of honor, all eager to stop the bloodshed at any cost. This is accomplished and everyone rushes into the arms of someone else.

"The Divorce Game" is lively and amusing and has been cleverly directed by Travers Vale. Alice Brady looks, dresses and acts the American heiress charmingly, and with John Bowers, Arthur Ashley, Kate Lester, Joseph Herbert, Jack Drumier, and Marie Lavafre as members of her support, the cast has not one weak spot.

New Subject Chosen for Gail Kane.

"For the Family Name" has been chosen as Gail Kane's next vehicle for release through Mutual. This is from a scenario written especially for Miss Kane by the fiction and scenario writer, Dan F. Whitcomb.

"Who's Your Neighbor?"

Prostitute Is Leading Character in Six-Reel Drama Advocating Segregation of Vice—Story Is Thoroughly Immoral.

Reviewed by Ben. H. Grimm.

THE best indication of the sort of a picture "Who's Your Neighbor?" is can be gleaned from the fact that a prostitute is the leading character in it. The production, which is in six reels, is one of the most insidious, moral-destroying pictures ever produced. It will lower to the level of a bawdy house any theater in which it is shown. It reeks with a filthy sex element that struts across the screen in the sheep's clothing of alleged propaganda advocating the segregation of vice. It is good propaganda for procurers and their ilk, for it makes vice attractive. It shows how a woman who sells her body gets a full return in worldly goods. Absolutely no adequate retributive punishment for the harm wrought by the woman is shown.

And the production preaches the doctrine that a harlot always is such by choice; it further propounds that she does not want to reform, and strongly infers that she cannot be reformed.

With that belief expounded, the author has endeavored to show that the women from the red light district scatter into houses all over the city—into respectable apartment houses, etc., until no one really knows who or what his neighbor is. The author has chosen an unusual and a strong story, which fact lessens the effect of the picture as propaganda—the story is so strong that persons of refinement will turn away from both the story and propaganda.

Every member of the cast portrays his or her part with absolute fidelity. The fact that the picture is well-produced makes it even more harmful, in the same sense that a well-dressed criminal is less likely to be suspected than a poorly dressed one.

The picture is offered state rights buyers by Master Drama Features, Inc. It was produced by S. Rankin Drew from a story by Willard Mack.

Triangle Shows Two Subjects

"Paws of the Bear" a Genuine Screen Story—"Madcap Madge" Old Stuff With Bright Comedy Spots.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"Paws of the Bear."

A GENUINE screen story is "Paws of the Bear," by J. G. Hawks, admirably handled by Reginald Barker, the sets being of unusual artistic merit, and flawlessly interpreted by Clara Williams, William Desmond and a splendid support. The story is accorded high place because of its satisfactory structure, one holding interest closely from beginning to end, and because of the general merits of production. Its greatest weaknes is lack of definite aim. A series of tense situations are strung together in businesslike shape, well calculated to hold attention, but the absence of deep sympathetic felling results from no very definite purpose. There is a message to be carried from the Austrian Government to that of the United States, and of some vital consequence had been given to that message the whole complexion of the story would have been changed for the better.

At the opening of the European war, Desmond, as an American traveler, finds himself badly complicated with a Russian spy in the person of Clara Williams. They are taken out to be shot by a file of soldiers when an aeroplane drops a bomb on the shooting party with such accuracy that it is blown to atoms. The American travelers and the Russian spy find themselves in a new relation aboard ship later on. She is pursuing a messenger from Austria, who happens to be an old classmate of the American and intrusts the important document to him. The rest of the play is composed of plot and counterplot about the scrap of paper, but the fact that its contents are unknown to the audience seriously detracts from suspense. The story is interesting and it will go.

"Madcap Madge."

"Madcap Madge" has bright comedy spots which will win a laugh, and it is so well handled and interpreted that it will get over nicely with the average audience, but it contains a lot of very old theatrical stuff, the worst being the ambitious American mother who wants to marry her daughter to a "lord." This is the tamest kind of material today—it is worn to a frazzle. Another serious and marring weakness is the decision of a sensible American business man to commit suicide because of some possible financial reverses. This weakens the mother and father of two daughters who are both happily married at the end. Every actor in the cast does well, Miss Olive Thomas making the most of her limited opportunities as a madcap, but the finest characterization by far is that of the actual lord, who is unsuspected throughout, and accordingly scorned, by the American weaklings.

This character and the capers of Miss Thomas furnish practically all the amusement. In a genuine screen story, not a theatrical composition, all the comedy of character would have been intensified several times over. The faults are therefore of authorship, lack of originality and fine sense of what is really humorous in human nature. Director and company in cases like this simply do the best they can with the material in hand, and they are to be congratulated on doing so well. The story is so satisfactorily presented that it will get over nicely with the moving picture fans.

"The Flame of Youth"

New Butterfly Release Features Jack Mulhall in Story of a Breezy, Entertaining Sort.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN "The Flame of Youth," a five-reel subject, Jack Mulhall is provided with the right sort of story interest for his fresh, engaging style of hero. This type of character shows off to best advantage when a well-rounded plot is working in the background, and the hero is not expected to carry the whole production on his looks, however pleasing they may be.

In this number, written by Willis-Woods, and carefully produced by Elmer Clifton, there is a well-built, entertaining story. It concerns a young man named Jimmy Gordon, engaged to a society girl named Lucy Andrews. Jimmy is a bit of a roughneck and shocks Lucy and her mother prodigiously, which gives a titled Englishman, Sir Beverly Wyndam, a chance to intervene. Jimmy's father, disgusted with his son's manner of life, transports him suddenly to the island of Calabas, where the Gordon Syndicate operates a fire opal mine.

The youth is still nominally engaged to Lucy, although there has been something of an estrangement. He meets on the island Nadine, stepdaughter of the crooked mine manager, and falls instantly in love with her. He discovers the crooked work going on at the mine and has many exciting encounters with the crooks, finally aiding the girl to escape to the mainland and sending back to have the gang arrested. Lucy has eloped with Sir Wyndam.

The title and sub-titles have been attractively decorated and some of the island scenes are picturesque. The story is developed with a good, light touch.

The cast is quite large and equally meritorious. Besides Jack Mulhall it includes Ann Kronan, Donna Moon, Hayward Mack, Alfred Allen, Ed Brady, Fred Montague, Burton Law, Percy Challenger, Harry Mann and Harry Morris.

An elaborate photoplay edition of "The Garden of Allah" is being prepared by Grosset & Dunlap, the book publishers. The book will be exploited in connection with the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah."

"Wild and Woolly"

Second Douglas Fairbanks Release Presented by Artcraft a Prolific Breeder of Hilarious Joy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE secret is out! The best brand of wild-riding, quick-shooting, fierce-fighting, Johnnie-on-the-spot cowboy is born and raised in New York City. This astonishing fact comes to light in "Wild and Woolly," the second Douglas Fairbanks release presented by Artcraft, scenario by Anita Loos and directed by John Emerson.

Scene from "Wild and Woolly" (Artcraft).

It happens in this wise: Jeff Hillington, a Manhattan-bred young man of rich but honest parents, whose greatest hero is the W. S. Hart type of cow-puncher, sets out to master the accomplishments in the way of riding, shooting and rope throwing that are always associated with this class of westerner.

Believing that the "Wild and Woolly" is still in the raw state so graphically depicted in the story and film of a certain grade, he yearns to take a trip to the land beyond the Rockies and steep himself in encounters with bad men, wicked Indians and all other terrors of the plains.

When the chance comes to satisfy his yearning he togs himself out in regulation cowboy fashion and lands in a town that long ago abandoned its frontier habits and is now a sober, civilized community with all the modern improvements. Knowing young Hillington's Wild West craze and wishing him to give a favorable report on a railroad improvement for the town, the citizens of Bitter Creek prepare a reception that fairly oozes the local color for which Jeff's soul yearns. Indian raids, revolver duels and a train robbery are among the diversions on the program. Jeff is given his fill of an excellent counterfeit of the real thing, after his revolvers are secretly loaded with blanks.

Then something goes wrong with the fun. A real bad man takes advantage of the masquerading to effect a real train robbery and to carry off the belle of the town, with whom Jeff is already in love. And right here young Hillington proves that he knows the West better than the dwellers themselves, and also that his correspondence school training is the only genuine sort. He pulls off stunts that must be seen to be believed, and rides, ropes and shoots his way straight to the heart of the abducted maiden and wins the unbounded admiration of the rest of the Bitter Creekers.

A cow in a clover field, a cat with a catnip ball or a monkey with a bushel of peanuts never had a more enjoyable time than the gloom-dispersing Mr. Douglas Fairbanks extracts from each of the situations in the photoplay. Most of these situations are not new, but the method of their working out is frequently novel and often exceedingly funny.

The Anita Loos scenario is in the lady's best style, and John Emerson has directed it with a corresponding amount of technical skill and completeness of production. Eileen Percy, the new leading woman of the Fairbanks company, has youth, good looks and considerable ability. Walter Bytell, Joseph Singleton, Calvin Carter, Forest Seabury, J. W. Jones, Chares Stevens, Sam de Grasse and Tom Wilson complete an able cast.

MILDRED CALL, GOLDWYNNER.

A child who is doing most successful work for the Goldwyn Pictures is eight-year old Mildred Call. She was first screened in the second of the Mae Marsh pictures, and immediately cast for a part in the second Maxine Elliott picture which followed. When the Margaret Mayo comedy, which forms the third Marsh picture, was being cast little Mildred was given a berth in her third Goldwyn production. Her mother, Sophie Call, also has a role in the Marsh picture.

"On Trial"

Screen Version of Elmer L. Reizenstein's Novel Spoken Drama Repeats Its Early Success in Moving Picture Form.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit having chosen a screen version of Elmer L. Reizenstein's novel stage melodrama, "On Trial," as its initial feature, it is now in order to record the fact that the selection is a real success. Produced by the Essanay Company and directed by James Young, the picture is just as thrilling and grips the attention just as firmly as it did on the spoken stage. The direction and the excellent acting of the cast naturally have much to do with this result.

The novel form in which the play was built and the clever manner shown in making the many changes of scene caused no end of talk when "On Trial" was first brought out. The story itself, however, was one of absorbing interest. Starting with a murder, the trial of a suspected man is shown, and the evidence that finally convicts the murderer—the chain of events leading up to the crime—is enacted before the eyes of the spectator. The author never fails to win sympathy for the right characters, and several of his scenes have the strongest kind of human appeal.

From the point of play construction it is interesting to recall that Gaboriau, the celebrated writer of French detective stories, always built his plots in a similar way. The story opened with the discovery of a crime and the rest of the tale was devoted to tracing the events that led up to it. This form of construction is particularly well adapted to stories of crime, where the interest does not center in the victim, but in the suspected man.

Sidney Ainsworth as Robert Strickland, Barbara Castleton as Strickland's wife, Little Mary McAlister as his daughter, and James Young as Gerald Trask, play the four leading parts with all the necessary skill, and the rest of the cast are equally proficient.

Firing Line Hospitals.

Views of field dressing stations, close up to the firing line on the Somme front in France, with hundreds of men being rushed to the emergency operating rooms by stretcher bearers, are among the most interesting of the scenes in "Heroic France," the eight-reel war picture released by Mutual.

In this intimate showing of the workings of war Dr. Alexis Carrel of the Rockefeller Institute is shown and the use of the Dakin solution for ascepticising wounds is thoroughly illustrated.

"The Land of the Long Shadows"

Five-Part Essanay Story of the Yukon Is Weak—Ruth King, However, Is Tower of Strength.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE snow fields of the Yukon when the search for gold was at its height is the setting of "The Land of Long Shadows," by Essanay. This is a five-reeler featuring Jack Gardner, most ably supported by Ruth King. The picture was arranged and directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

Ruth King has the part of Jeanne Verette, the daughter of a saloon keeper in a little tent village of gold seekers. The first part of the picture, showing what a prosperous business a rival saloon is doing with women soliciting, has little to commend it. Jeanne is compelled by her father to solicit. She is told to wink at the patrons, "but at's all." The author probably considered this essential to the development of the story We must not presume even to suggest that he should have found another way to start things off. We must be content with remarking that his opening reel is disgusting.

Jack Gardner is Joe Mauchin, a trapper, who visits the saloon, falls in love with Jeanne, and in protecting her from a brutish admirer kills him. Joe and Jeanne elope. The story is weak; poorly plotted, and poorly motivated. It is very slow about getting under way. The inebriate who appears so much in early scenes does badly what is meant to be a comic part.

The acting of Ruth King is remarkably good all through the picture. She and Jack Gardner give an excellent portrayal of young love. In his lighter scenes, Jack Gardner tends to become silly. But Ruth King is a tower of strength to the picture.

With the exception of the scenes in the first reel portraying the vicious life of the mining town, this is a good picture. It would be well to show it to adults only.

"The Rise of a Nation"

Harry Palmer, who has been identified with the Mutual program, is now producing cartoons under his own firm name, Harry Palmer, Inc. His animated drawings will be released by the Educational Film Corporation of America and will appear on the same reel with the Raymond Ditmars animal pictures.

The first of these new releases is named "The Rise of a Nation" and depicts in an amusing but decidedly effective manner the response of the people of the United States to President Wilson's call to war.

Ward and Pennington Head Paramount

Supporting These Two Talented Players Are Arbuckle's Second Comedy, Pictographs, Holmes Travelogues and a Black Diamond.

THE week of June 25, finishing the first half of this year, will be a particularly notable one for Paramount by reason of the fact that two unusual five reel features, starring Fannie Ward and Ann Pennington, and the third of the Paramount Arbuckle Comedies, will be issued this week. Besides, there will be three single reel features; the seventy-second edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen"; the seventy-third of the series of weekly trips around the world conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his fellow-journeyers to Palm Beach and Miami, and a Black Diamond Comedy entitled "Auto Intoxication."

Fannie Ward's picture for this week will be "Her Strange Wedding," which was written specially for this star by Charles Maigne from George Middleton's popular story of the same name. The cast supporting Miss Ward is one of unusual excellence, including such well known players as Jack Dean, Tom Forman and Billy Elmer. The production was made for the Lasky-Paramount Company under the direction of George Melford.

Ann Pennington, the celebrated dancer of the Ziegfeld Follies, returns to the screen in her first picture after "Susie Snowflakes" and "The Rainbow Princess," in which she scored such unusual success last season Her next production will be "The Little Boy Scout." Owen Moore, who plays the leading male role oposite Miss Pennigton, does a clever piece of screen work. Supporting Miss Pennington and Mr. Moore are Fraunie Fraunholtz, Marcia Harris, George Burton and Harry Lee.

"A Rough House" is the third of the series of Paramount Arbuckle Comedies in which "Fatty" Arbuckle will appear, and which will be released this week.

The seventy-second edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen" released week of June 25, contains the second installment of "Unmasking the Mediums," "Scientific Stock Breeding," and the most unusual Bobby Bumps cartoon that Earl Hurd has ever drawn, under the title of "Bobby Bumps' Submarine Chaser."

Mutual Starts Off with "Upper Crust"

With Gail Kane on Program Are Helen Holmes, Ed. Lincoln, George Ovey and Weeklies.

GAIL KANE occupies the place of honor on the Mutual schedule for June 25, in her third production for Mutual, "The Upper Crust." This photoplay is an adaptation of Charles Sherman's "best seller" of the same title. Miss Kane appears as Molly O'Toole, a girl whose love of wealth, luxury and position leads her into a series of indiscretions which go to make up a story replete with tense, dramatic situations and a large portion of clean, wholesome comedy.

The twelfth chapter of the Helen Holmes serial, "The Railroad Raiders," entitled "A Fight For a Franchise," is scheduled for June 25. In this chapter the suspense is not sustained through "thrillers," but by tense situations and strong dramatic action.

The fifteenth chapter of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series, "The Tapped Wires," is scheduled for June 29. In this story the Grey Seal is defeated at his own game.

"Discords in 'A' Flat" is the La Salle comedy for June 26. Jean Otto is featured in this play, which deals with a composer competing for a prize of $10,000 offered for the best opera score.

The Cub comedy, ready June 28, is "Jerry's Hopeless Tangle." George Ovey, as Jerry, resents father's interference to his lovemaking and so puts him in the water barrel on the roof where father is forced to stay while Jerry and daughter have a fine time.

"Mutual Weekly" No. 130 will come to the screen on June 27.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," ready June 26, show Naples, the largest city of Italy, and Buenos Aires, the capital of Argentine.

"Reel Life," scheduled for June 28, is made up of five subjects—Marketing Raw Tobacco, Launching a Life Boat, The Life of a Bee, As They Looked in the Beginning, and Butterfly Jewelry.

"Fantomas" Running in Newspapers.

"Fantomas" on the screen bids fair to become a perennial favorite. With the continuous publicity which this Gaumont series is receiving there is every reason to believe it will break all records for a detective picture. It was produced with all that attention to detail which is characteristic of the great French house of Gaumont. A new "Fantomas" story is starting in many American Sunday newspapers, and exhibitors in territories reached by the papers will again find "Fantomas" a gold mine.

"The Road Between" Completed.

"The Road Between," the Erbograph-Art Drama starring Marian Swayne, has been completed by Director Joseph Levering. Those who have viewed it in its unfinished form pronounce it to be a masterpiece of story, acting and direction.

SEASIDE ROMEOS (Kalem).—A Ham and Bud comedy. Ham has a Welsh rabbit dream of buried treasure on the island of Silken Seaweed. On the island they find a girls' class in aesthetic dancing. Their scenes with these six barefoot girls are very funny. The homely one chases Ham, and he escapes only by hiding his head in the sand. This is a good reel.

THE TRACKING OF STINGAREE (Kalem).—This is the third episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree." Interest is well kept up throughout. Stingaree saves a young Irish girl from what promises to be an unfortunate elopement, and teaches Howie a temperance lesson. Edythe Sterling, True Boardman and Paul C. Hurst are in the cast.

THE LITTLE ORPHAN, June 18.—Ella Hall gives another of her clever child impersonations in this five-reel photoplay. The entire picture is entertaining. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE BROADWAY SPORT (Fox), June 10.—A five-reel comedy, with Stuart Holmes in a character comedy part, this picture will prove entertaining to the not over-critical. It has been given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE MAELSTROM, June 18.—A five-part melodrama of ordinary quality, which has been reviewed at length elsewhere. Earle Williams is featured in the production, which tells of various incidents which follow the mysterious presentation of a parcel of papers to a wealthy young man as he stands one evening lighting his cigarette by a lamp post.

K-E-S-E, Inc.

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER (Edison), June 10.—A three-reel photoplay full of genuine, unadulterated patriotism. A regiment of the United States Marine Corps takes part. The action takes place at the marine barracks in time of peace. An excellent picture for everyone, especially for children of all ages.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL TOURS NO. 32 (Gaumont), June 12.—The subjects on this reel are "Versailles, a Royal Residence of France"; "Capri, an Island of Italy," and "Antigua, British West Indies." Well illustrated and photographed.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 128 (Gaumont), June 13.—Interesting things in this reel are scenes of a fire at Sapulpa, Okla.; millions of shells being sent to Russia; latest footwear; Harvard Corps reviewed; garden party at Governor's Island, and an animated cartoon—"The Come-Back."

JERRY'S GETAWAY (Cub), June 14.—George Ovey is seen in a comedy of doubtful moral effect that contains a few laughs. It is the old stuff of the policeman and the servant girl, but this time with a few new comedy situations. George is always being pursued, but the cops finally get him. A fair number.

REEL LIFE NO. 59 (Gaumont), June 14.—In this reel we see how a magazine is printed. Pictures covering a publishing plant from the birth of an issue until it is mailed are seen. The reel also contains pictures of a Koala Eucalyptis Bear, a strange animal, indeed. Other titles are: "How Big Guns are Made," and "The Hemp Industry of Rural Rumania."

A DESPERATE DEED (Signal), June 18.—Chapter eleven of "The Railroad Raiders." Helen Holmes performs several hair-raising stunts. She furnishes thrills when a floating freight car imprisoning her is split by a boat; when she leaps from the boat to an elevating draw bridge; when she jump from the drawbridge onto a train, and later by spanning in a running jump the distance between two parts of a train. The story progresses with its usual speed.

THE IMMIGRANT (Lone Star), June 22.—Charlie Chaplin's latest. The offering contains about five big splashes of laughter and a whole tidal wave of giggles. We get a new line on the Chaplin walk. Charlie comes across in a steamer with other immigrants. He meets a girl whom he later drags to the marriage license bureau. The release is reviewed in full in the review columns.

THE UPPER CRUST (American), June 25.—A five-part comedy of more than ordinary merit, featuring Gail Kane. Playing opposite her is Douglas McLean, who also does excellent work. The picture treats of the indiscretion of a young woman who is employed as housekeeper by a rich widow, and upon being sent to the widow's country home alone to care for it takes advantage of the fact that the villagers have mistaken her for her mistress whom they have never seen. The picture has been reviewed elsewhere.

DISCORD IN A FLAT (LaSalle), June 26.—A farce comedy in which a composer, whose wife and daughter earn the bread and butter for the family, mistakes a piano tuner sent by one of the neighbors for the conveyer of a $10,000 prize which he has won. When the right man arrives he is met with a storm of abuse, which soon changes to a different key when his identity is discovered.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

CATTLE RAISING (Pathe-Combitone), June 24.—A one-reel subject giving an accurate and vivid description on the screen of dairy ranches as they are today in Texas. Modernity in methods is seen everywhere. We see some prize-winning Jersey cattle; also viewing them as they are put through a tank bath to rid them of disease-carrying ticks. Scenes of Corpus Christi Bay complete the reel.

THE KAMA GAWO CANAL (International), July 1.—A split-reel embracing scenic-educational, with a Katzenjammer Kids cartoon. The educational section shows scenes along a Japanese canal. Interesting shots showing how canal boats are lifted over elevations by an incline railway have been obtained. The cartoon is quite funny.

A RELENTLESS FATE (Balboa), July 1.—Eighth episode of "The Neglected Wife" serial. The chapter contains several thrilling fight scenes. Kennedy separates from Margaret. He is kidnapped when he is nominated for the Senate, and, after being thrown from an automobile, is knocked unconscious. He wakes up in the arms of Margaret, who, with Norwood, has followed the kidnappers' car. Reviewed in this issue.

MAX, THE HEARTBREAKER (Pathe), July 1.—Max Linder is seen in a two-reel comedy that combines the scenic beauty of the Riveria with the sort of humor that has made Max famous. The story tells of two girls crazy over Max who later fight a duel. But Max is the one who is shot. Some scenes in a doctor's office are quite funny.

HERE AND THERE IN TEXAS (Pathe-Combitone), July 1.—A comprehensive and interesting reel. The film embraces scenes of San Antonio, including the Alamo and other interesting spots. We also see San Jose Mission and other spots in the surrounding country. There are pictures of Medina Dam, Neuva Laredo and Corpus Christi. Considerable footage is devoted to pictures of Texas' native wild animals.

THE CIGARETTE GIRL (Astra), July 7.—Probably the best five-reel picture ever done by Gladys Hulette, the featured player. The story is absorbing, and the picture is an almost ideal combination of star and story. The story tells much of New York's cabaret life. Miss Hulette is seen as a cigarette girl whose honesty leads her into novel situations and finally love. William Parke, Jr., plays opposite Miss Hulette. Reviewed in the review columns of this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE HEIR OF AGES (Pallas), June 21.—Doesn't mount markedly out of the class of ordinary pictures, but it has good selling points like a fierce fisticuff fight and a charming heroine. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

HER STRANGE WEDDING (Lasky), June 25.—Has the big situation when the heroine (Fannie Ward) finds on the first day of the honeymoon that her husband is a thief. Some wholly melodramatic thrills go with this situation. It should make an excellent offering. See elsewhere in this issue for a more elaborate account.

ROUGH HOUSE (Arbuckle), June 25.—Two reels well named. It has new humor and plenty of old gags. Made much laughter when shown in the Paramount projection rooms. Is a sure offering; but probably won't cause any special furore. Other notice elsewhere in this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

PAWS OF THE BEAR (Ince-Kay Bee), June 17.—A melodramatic spy story of active adventure on sea and land, with William Desmond and Clara Williams at the head of an excellent cast. Of lively interest.

MADCAP MADGE (Ince-Kay Bee), June 24.—A comedy of American social life, with Olive Thomas in a creditable performance as the lead. Fairly satisfactory, with some bright, amusing spots.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

HIGH FINANCE (Universal Special), May 6.—No. 8 of "The Voice on the Wire" series. This installment is given up largely to fights between the police and the Red Warren gang. Polly overhears a plot in the house where she is imprisoned. She escapes and attempts to give an alarm but is recaptured. Some of the gang are rounded up and one is shot in a dramatic manner at the close while making a confession. This has not the suspense of previous numbers, but is full of exciting action.

A STERN CHASE (Universal Special), May 13.—No. 9 of "The Voice on the Wire" series. James Welsh is threatened in this number by the mysterious voice. A general expedition to Woodlawn, his country home, occurs, Shirley endeavoring to reach Welsh in time to prevent the tragedy. The railroad trip and attempted train wreck are interesting. The number continues the interest well.

THE GUARDED HEART (Universal Special), May 20.—No. 10 of "The Voice on the Wire" series. James Welsh has been threatened with death and Shirley races across country to save him. Polly Marion, in the hands of the gang, is forced to call Welsh up by telephone and lure him to a restaurant, where the crime is to be committed. The action is mysterious as usual throughout and the installment winds up with an exciting fight between the gang and the police.

THE FIFTH VICTIM (Universal Special), May 28.—No. 12 of "The Voice on the Wire" series. This number is melodramatic and exciting in its incidents. Shirley breaks the hypnotic spell, under which Polly has been laboring, in a dramatic manner. The gang, after being outwitted, resolves again to "get" Shirley. The installment closes with a hand-to-hand conflict.

THE FIELD OF HONOR (Butterfly), June 11.—A strong five-reel number, produced by Allen Holubar from a story by Brand Whitlock, U. S. Minister to Belgium. This deals entertainingly and at times dramatically with our Civil War period. Two men love the same girl as the conflict breaks out. She marries George, who proves a coward in battle. Wade, the unsuccessful suitor, protects the husband's name, thinking he has been killed. Later the wife promises her hand to Wade, the husband unexpectedly reappears and interesting complications follow. The battle scenes are produced on a large scale and the whole production is unusually artistic. Allen Holubar, M. K. Wilson, Louise Lovely and others appear.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 76 (Universal), June 15.—Carlisle Indian graduates, girl athletes at Nebraska University, Indiana pageant, New York Alley fete and various features of the great war are pictured in this number.

A PIRATE BOLD, OR, A JUNGLE JAM (Victor), Week of June 18.—A comedy number, by Harry Wulze, featuring Pat Rooney as a pirate cast upon a desert shore with a companion. Their adventures with wild animals and natives are funny and will probably appeal particularly to children.

PUPPY LOVE (Victor), Week of June 18.—A number which features Ruth Stonehouse, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Dave Kershaw. A youth, tempted by a siren, finds a pocketbook and keeps it in order to buy candy for the girl. His real sweetheart saves him from disgrace and imprisonment. A thin plot, furnishing only moderate entertainment, though the cast is pleasing.

JILTED IN JAIL (Nestor), Week of June 18.—A comedy subject, by Frederick A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts and Fred Gamble. Eddie plays the reporter and Lee a brave police officer. A frustrated elopement is a feature. This puts the observer in good humor and brings out repeated chuckles.

THE DOUBLE-TOPPED TRUNK (Imp), Week of June 25.—A good story of the customs house, from a tale by George Bronson Howard. The inspectors discover a package of jewels in the false top of a steamer trunk. A clue is followed up cleverly and leads to the apprehension of the smugglers. The number is well constructed and holds the interest strongly. Alan Holubar and Gretchen Lederer are in the cast.

HER CITY BEAU (Victor), Week of June 25.—This number, by Mae Havey, features Edith Roberts and Millard K. Wilson. The country girl has always wanted to go to a dance. When her opportunity comes, she dresses in some of her mother's old finery, but this is so old-fashioned that her city beau and the other girls laugh at her. She finds consolation in the compliments of her country lover. This is a simple, but appealing, little number. The rural scenes are pleasing.

THE GOLDEN BULLET (Gold Seal), Week of June 25.—A well-constructed, smooth-running three-reel number, by T. Shelley Sutton. Harry Carey, Vester Pegg, Fritzi Ridgway and others are featured. The plot is built round a gold nugget, shaped like a bullet, which is stolen from a young miner and his partner by a bandit. The hero shoots the latter with the gold bullet at the close. Picturesque scenery, rapid horseback riding and other features lift this somewhat above the average Western subject.

THE WAR BRIDEGROOM (Nestor), Rel. Wk. of June 25.—A comedy number, by Fred. A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. The groom and best man take a joy ride just before the wedding and are sent up for sixty days. They pretend to be fighting "in the trenches" at the front, but are really doing road work. This is a little rough in the opening scenes, but has a good humorous idea in it and will amuse.

DAMAGED GOODNESS (Victor), Rel. Wk. of June 25.—A comedy number, featuring Orien Jackson, Yvette Mitchell and Ernie Shield. A father with an unruly daughter encourages her flirtation with a young neighbor. The latter starts to elope with the girl, but repents after getting wise to her disposition. The idea is amusing, but is not handled very well. The action tends too strongly to farce to carry conviction. A fair subject.

SWEDE-HEARTS (Victor), Rel. Wk. of June 25.—A three-reel character subject, by George E. Marshall, featuring Neal Hart, Janet Eastman, Dick La Rena, Joe Rickson and George Berrill. The story begins in Sweden and then comes to America, where Ole and his sweetheart meet after a long separation. He saves her from an unhappy fate at the hands of a scheming immigration agent. This is quite novel in presentation and holds the interest well. Neal Hart gets some good comedy and a fair amount of pathos out of the lead part. This characterization is particularly pleasing.

HIS FATAL BEAUTY (Joker), Rel. Wk. of June 25.—A character comedy, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Milbure Moranti, Zasu Pitts, William Franey and Lillian Peacock. Franey escapes from the woman-who-would-be-his-wife and becomes janitor in a bank. His knockabout antics in this capacity brings numerous laughs. He says the bank's money and wins the president's daughter. A successful number of the type.

HER DARING, TEARING WAYS (L-KO), Rel. Wk. of June 25.—A two-reel comic, with a ranch setting, featuring Merta Sterling, Lucille Hutton and others. The love affairs of two women and two men, the latter named Chili Ted and Con Carne, are featured. A burro and a black bear furnish part of the humor, which gets up a number of laughable incidents. Two people down a well, a kidnapping, a bridge blown up and a train and auto chase are pictured. The number is characteristic and entertaining.

MONEY AND MYSTERY (Bison), Rel. Wk. of June 25.—A two-reel subject, featuring Eileen Sedgwick, William Dyer, L. W. Lawrence, Kingsley Benedict and others. This has a plot that differs agreeably from the average Western. It tells of a man in the West, employed by a mining company. Two men, one of them in love with his daughter, make him the scapegoat for their crooked work, but the hero comes to the rescue and saves the situation. He also wins the girl. A stage runaway and other melodramatic events are pictured. The number has considerable plot and is quite enjoyable.

THE CROSS-EYED SUBMARINE (Universal State Rights).—A three-reel comic, featuring William Franey, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock and Milburne Moranti. This deals with the adventures of Prince Ducker and his family. The daughter is cast adrift by a villain and lands on a desert island. The father invents a submarine and explores the briny deep, in later years meeting again with his wife and daughter. The first reel is vague in development but the last two reels become decidedly amusing in places. The undersea adventures are the best feature of this and will appeal to children.

THE BANK MYSTERY (Universal Special), June 25.—Installment No. 1 of the new serial, "The Gray Ghost," adapted from a well-known story by Arthur Somers Roche and produced by Stuart Paton. The observer is introduced to a strong cast of characters, portrayed by Eddie Polo, Priscilla Dean, Harry Carter, J. Morris Foster, Emory Johnson and numerous others, all important to the story. The action begins with a bank robbery, a murder mystery and the kidnapping of the bank president's son, who is charged with both murder and embezzlement. The photography and settings are attractive and the serial leads off in a promising way. An exciting combination of melodrama and mystery, strongly presented.

World Pictures.

THE DIVORCE GAME, June 25.—Alice Brady is the star of this five-reel photoplay made from a French comedy. There is plenty of lively action, and the acting and production are of excellent quality. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE GOLDEN LOTUS (Brady-International)—June 25.—This five-reel foreign made photoplay is equal in merit to the first picture of the Brady-International brand. Regina Baudet is again the star and the same all-around good production has been given the play. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE BLOOD OF THE ARENA (Cosmos-Kinema).—Founded on a Spanish novel based on first hand material, this five-reel photoplay tells the life story of a toreador, his rise to the heights of popular favor, his decline, and his ignominous death in the bull ring. The cast and the backgrounds are Spanish. Authentic scenes in Seville, Madrid, Cordova, and Granada and the Alhambra.

NEPTUNE'S NAUGHTY DAUGHTER (Century Comedies).—A two-reel number, featuring Alice Howell as a fisher maiden, daughter of a family which worships the cuckoo clock. This is a comic with some very funny spots running through it. Some of the humor is a little rough, but it is generally acceptable. The characterizations are of a burlesque, eccentric type. Alice is shanghaied as the story proceeds and finally rescued from the leaking vessel by her lover, in a rowboat. There is plenty of action of the knockabout sort.

AUTOMANIACS (Century Comedy).—A two-reel comic, featuring Alice Howell and Fatty Voss. The opening scenes occur in a garage, where Fatty and the girl do repair work on autos. Some of the incidents, which are of a knockabout type, are funny and others are too vulgar. Both of these comedians get better effects when they perform with more restraint than is shown here. They have been seen to much greater advantage than in this number. The chase scenes at the close are entertaining.

TODAY (June), (Harry Rapf).—The five-reel screen version of the Broadhurst-Schomer stage play is well acted and produced. It follows the original story, except that it has a dream finish. A longer review is printed on page 1950 of the June 23 issue.

ON TRIAL (First Nat. Exhibitors' Circuit), June.—The screen version of this well-known stage success makes an excellent feature picture. It has been finely produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE GREAT WHITE TRAIL (Whartons, Inc.), June—The seven-reel state-rights photoplay made by the Whartons contains some admirable scenic effects and has a story of considerable heart interest. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

State Rights Department

Conducted by BEN H. GRIMM.

To Our Readers

We want to make this department the kind of a department YOU want. To do this we need information as to what you like and what you don't like and what you would like to have. Will you, no matter what end of the state rights field you are in, instead of telling someone else what you think we should do, or what producers or exchanges or buyers or anyone else should do, tell us, so that in turn we can, through publicity, carry the information to the branch of the state rights field it is directed to?

HALL MAKES BIG SALES OF "BAR SINISTER."

Frank Hall, Longacre Building, New York, announces the disposition of the following territorial rights to Edgar Lewis' production, "The Bar Sinister":

Magner, for his San Francisco exchange at 288 Golden Gate avenue.

Negotiations are pending for several other territories, and foreign buyers are showing a keen interest in the picture because it appeals so strongly to all nationalities. Australia, New Zealand and the adjacent islands in the Pacific, including Java, have been bought by the Australasian Film Company, while J. R. Nerlein Company, Ltd., of Christiana, Norway, have obtained the rights for Scandinavia.

BIG PURCHASES FOR NEW ENGLAND.

Harry Segal, manager of the Globe Film Exchange has secured for New England the rights to "On Trial" and "God's Man."

K. Company, entitled "Some Barrier" and "Golden Spoon Mary." Mr. Rifkin reports a brisk Spring business at his office and the prospects for the summer and fall are brighter than ever.

GAINSBURG HEADS FOURSQUARE EXCHANGE.

Mr. Gainsburg is well known among the exhibitors of New York, and has an enviable record for fair and square dealing. Moreover, he is able to render the exhibitors who book Foursquare pictures splendid assistance and co-operation in putting over their productions for the best possible profit.

"Hate" To Be State-Righted

Negotiations to Be Handled by Gus Mohme, of the Biograph Studios—Passes Review Board in Toto.

SELDOM has a producer come into New York City, advertised his production on about 250 of the best 24-sheet stands in the city, planted large electric display signs in Times Square, and in a general way do much in the way of advance advertising for a production. This is what the Fairmount Film Corporation, controlled by William A. Mooney and Robert Bolling, has done for "Hate," its first production to be offered to state right buyers.

To insure the production of the best distribution and aiming to place it only in the hands of the most dependable state right buyers, Gus Mohme of the Biograph Laboratories has been appointed as special representative.

In speaking of the production Mr. Mohme said: "In our experience at the laboratory we come in contact with perhaps more independent productions that any laboratory or studio in the world. Naturally we are in a position to know how one production measures up with the other, and also their chances for success. At the first showing we were surprised at the detail of the story, the simple direct appeal it has to the masses. It is a vital problem, broad in its scope, and while the truth hits hard at times it will make people think; by so doing it is bound to create interest. The story is by J. Walter Meade, a successful newspaper man and author, and the treatment it has received at the hands of Director Walter Richard Stahl speaks well of his ability to send home facts on the screen. The acting of the cast, sets, photography, etc., is of high level. The advertising matter contains two styles each of five color ones, threes and six sheets, a compelling twenty-four-sheet, 8 by 10 black and white photos, 9 by 11 colored photos, 20 by 30 colored photos, three-colored window cards, two-colored heralds, press sheets, slides, cuts, etc."

"Hate" was shown privately in Philadelphia to a group of interested parties invited by William A. Mooney, president of the corporation. The showing took place in the auditorium of the Columbia Club. Upon the return of Mr. Bolling on Wednesday, a showing before the National Board of Review was arranged for. Both showings were greeted with enthusiasm. The picture was passed by the National Board without a single cut and it is reported that individual members of the Board commented favorably upon the unusual quality of the play. It is expected that the picture will be given another showing in Philadelphia within a few days.

SAVINI BUYS "MOTHER GOOSE" FOR SOUTH.

R. M. Savini of the United Film Service, Atlanta, has purchased from the Lea Beall Company, of Chicago, the rights to "A Modern Mother Goose" for Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina and Louisiana.

"WHAT OF YOUR BOY?" EXPLAINS UNIVERSAL SERVICE.

As a visual answer to the million and one questions asked ourselves and others about universal service, the Cameragraph Film Manufacturing Company has produced a picture titled "What of Your Boy?" The picture was made under the direct supervision of Col. Sebastian C. Jones, U. S. A., one of the foremost experts in methods of military training for the youth, and at present supervising such training at an important military school. Colonel Jones was persuaded to supervise the making of "What of Your Boy?" by Frank R. Abrams, general manager of the Cameragraph Company.

"What of Your Boy?" was produced in seven reels, and what happened to the boy under training was "caught" from every angle, so that the picture might be shown conveniently by every exhibitor, regardless of whether or not a feature was also on the day's bill, the Cameragraph Company reduced the seven reels to three. The three reels cover the universal service subject from start to finish.

Mr. Abrams is booking the picture for New York State direct from his offices at 140 West Forty-fourth street, New York. State rights for the remainder of the country and world are being disposed of by the Victoria Feature Films, 220 West Forty-second street New York.

HENLEY PRAISED FOR "PARENTAGE."

One of the distinctive phases of "Parentage" that caused a great deal of comment at the trade showing at the Rialto theater was the manner in which the child acting and type characters were portrayed and directed in Hobart Henley's thought film of real life. At no time intruding on the smooth-running action of the story, rather building it into a fine dramatic suspense, colored with humor and pathos, the delightful bits of child play and the human flavor of the type characters have been pronounced by those well versed in film matters to be the best yet delineated on the screen.

Everyone who saw the film recognized in the "kid stuff" the incidents of their own school days. The childhood love affair that hits home, and the incidents of the shanty gang are those of which we are all familiar. The scene of the tough boy in the schoolroom shooting the rubber band at the teacher shows the handling of a boy and a situation that is truly remarkable. The amount of poise, the fine repose in the face of Matty Roubert is singularly effective, because it registers so true to life, so humanly, with the reminiscent touch of boy life to it.

What one reviewer has said hits the nail on the head: "Hobart Henley has kept his characters human to the core throughout. Their portrayals are forceful and the incidents are supreme entertainment from the fade-in to the flash-out."

BILLY WEST SUITS DISMISSED.

Suits begun against Billy West, the young King-Bee comedian, seeking to enjoin him from appearing in any pictures except those produced by the company with whom he made an allegedly invalid contract, have been dismissed, according to an announcement from the officers of the King-Bee Film Corporation.

The Billy West Company arrived in New York from Jacksonville a few days ago. They are at present at work under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom at the Frohman Studios, Flushing, L. I. The company includes Billy West, Ethel Clayton, Babe Hardy, Leo White, Ethlyn Gibson and Bud Ross.

"COME THROUGH" OPENS AT BROADWAY THEATER.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company's latest state rights picture, "Come Through," auspiciously opened at the Broadway theater, New York, on Sunday, June 17. The picture is said to be a seven-reel epic of the underworld. It was written by George Bronson Howard and stars Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Alice Lake and a large cast. It was directed by Jack Conway.

Announcements state that the picture introduces most effective dance numbers. The dances are participated in by Miss Lake who, with Franklyn Farnum, Bluebird player, recently was awarded a prize for dancing in a contest. She is widely known as a dancer both here and abroad.

FRIEDER TO MAKE BIG FEATURES.

The Frieder Film Corporation of Chicago, which is now marketing its first big feature, "A Bit o' Heaven," founded on Kate Douglas Wiggin's celebrated story, "The Birds' Christmas Carol," announces that a long list of copyrighted novels will soon be filmed at the Lankershim (Cal.) studios.

This, it is understood, is due to the splendid success which greeted its first feature throughout the country. Contracts were signed last week with three different Eastern publishing houses, calling for film rights to a number of widely known stories similar to "The Birds' Christmas Carol." Activities are now under way at the Lankershim studios looking toward the completion of the first of the new series.

NETTER OPENS NEW CLEVELAND OFFICE.

Leon D. Netter, head of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, announces the opening of his new offices at Suite 404, Sincere building, Cleveland, from which he will operate through the Ohio territory.

In addition to "The Garden of Allah," which is meeting with unprecedented success in Ohio, Mr. Netter will exploit such features as "Beware of Strangers," "Purity," "The Libertine" and a number of other feature productions. Mr. Netter will continue to add to his present extensive list productions of such merit as the Masterpiece has been identified with in the past.

TOBIAS CLOSES WITH SUNSHINE COMPANY.

M. F. Tobias has returned to New York from Chicago, where he completed arrangements whereby he will control the state rights sale for the entire United States and Canada of ten super-productions to be produced in the West by the Sunshine Film Corporation, of Chicago. The productions will be of seven-reel lengths, and will have as their stars well known artists of both stage and screen. The first of these will be ready for the trade on or about September 15.

SCHLAIFER FORMS SEATTLE PARTNERSHIP.

L. J. Schlaifer of 216 Central Building Seattle controlling a large and attractive list of state rights features has taken into copartnership with him Melvin G. Winstock, widely and favorably known throughout the Northwest, with A. Bloom as office director.

The concern has two prints of "The Unborn" and "Idle Wives" working all the time, as well as quite a number of one-reel feature fillers. The new combination also has options on several additional features and will be in the field from now on for every attraction that can be handled with profit to Northwest exhibitors.

BUYS "HER FIGHTING CHANCE" FOR JERSEY.

The New Jersey rights for the latest A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., production, "Her Fighting Chance," with Jane Grey, have been bought by A. L. Messer, of Newark, N. J.

Frank Hall, who controls the world rights for the new Jane Grey feature, has also started to dispose of foreign territory.

Norway, Sweden, Denmark and South America have all been taken by Aragon & Carlton through their New York office in the Times Building, while Australia, New Zealand, Java and adjacent islands were bought by William A. Vogel.

The New Jersey territory will be booked by Mr. Messer through his Newark exchange in the Proctor Theater building.

M. & R. HANDLING "THE CRISIS" IN THE WEST.

The M. & R. Film Exchange, of San Francisco, has secured the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to "The Crisis," formerly handled by the Warner Film Attractions, and is meeting with marked success in booking this big Selig production. Charles Rosenthal, Jr., of the firm, recently returned from a trip to Los Angeles, where he succeeded in placing the Flora Finch comedies, and while there opened a branch office at 223 Los Angeles Investment Building, placing this in charge of H. W. Stubbins, formerly with the General Film Company. Arrangements have also been made to handle "Tillie's Punctured Romance" in the Los Angeles territory.

UNIQUE PRE-SHOWING OF "A BIT O' HEAVEN."

The Frieder Film Corporation of Chicago found a novel and altogether unique method of showing its feature, "A Bit o' Heaven," founded on Kate Douglas Wiggin's "The Birds' Christmas Carol," to state right buyers, last week. Instead of adhering to the customary method of a morning showing to an invited audience, general manager Omer F. Doud decided to give it the acid test before a regular audience. Accordingly the subject was added to the regular program of the Olympia theater, Chicago, and prospective buyers invited to see just how it "got over" with an everyday crowd of unbiased fans. The results more than justified the experiment.

"INTOLERANCE" ON RENTAL BASIS IN CALIFORNIA.

The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, which controls "Intolerance" in the California territory, has adopted the policy of renting this production to exhibitors, instead of insisting on putting it out on a percentage basis, as is the case in most other parts of the country. Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch of this concern, was a recent visitor in San Francisco, coming up to spend a short time with his brother, Sol L. Lesser.

MO-TOY COMEDIES GOING STRONG.

The Peter Pan Film Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, announces that its "Mo-toy" animated doll comedies are in such demand through every territory in which they are being distributed that extra prints have been ordered by almost every exchange. The comedies are in half-reel lengths, and are being released one a week.

BIG CAST FOR ILIODOR PICTURE.

As his big state rights picture, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," nears completion, Herbert Brenon, who is producing the picture for the Iliodor Picture Corporation, announces that a cast of box office stars will be seen in the film. Iliodor, the Mad Monk, acts his own role. Nance O'Neil plays the Czarina, Alfred Hickman is seen as the Czar, Edward Connelly as Rasputin, Mlle. E. Katerina Galanta as Anna, the girl who was the immediate cause of Rasputin's downfall and death, and Conway Tearle as the young Prince. William E. Shay and Mlle. Marcelle complete the cast of principals. Mr. Brenon believes that in the cast he has assembled he has the most remarkable group of players ever obtained.

Mlle. Galanta, the only member of the cast who is not well known in this country, is a young Russian girl who came to this country two years ago with the Russian ballet. Mr. Brenon expects her to create a sensation on the screen. He was attracted by her work in "The Wanderer," with which show she was engaged after her season with the Ballet. She has talent both as a dancer and an actress. She is a beautiful girl, tall and slim, and with features peculiarly suited to the screen. She is said to have a most remarkable power of facial expression.

EAST CLOSED FOR "THE WOMAN AND THE BEAST."

The latest Marie Shotwell feature, "The Woman and the Beast," has been sold for all territory east of the Mississippi, with the exception of Pennsylvania. The announcement is made by the Graphic Features, 220 W. Forty-second street, New York, who are distributing the feature.

"Negotiations are also pending for Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Russia. The fact that his is a clean picture, and the added fact that Miss Shotwell's previous features—"Enlighten Thy Daughter" and "The Witching Hour"—were huge successes, enables us to dispose of Eastern territory rapidly," said a Graphic official.

"Practically one sales trip last week closed up Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to Schwartz Films, Inc., Schiller Bldg., Chicago; Michigan to Warren and Palley Film Company, Campau Bldg., Detroit, Michigan; Ohio to Exclusive Features Co., Inc., Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio, and New England to Eastern Feature Film Co., Inc., 57 Church street, Boston."

A. KAY COMPANY TO DOUBLE RELEASES.

The A. Kay Company, distributors of the Terry Human Interest Reel, will in the future put out two releases of this new type of pictures instead of one a month as originally announced. The new arrangement is the result of many requests from state right buyers that this novel type of film be released more frequently. The demand for the Terry Human Interest Reel has been great after a showing of the first of the series and the disposing of state rights has been so rapid that it has even surprised the most skeptical. Critics and reviewers of nearly every trade journal have unanimously declared that this new picture is a pronounced success.

Harold Edel, manager of the Strand of New York, will run the entire series of the Terry Human Interest Reel on the merits of the first of the series released.

The first of the series is entitled "How Character is Revealed in the Nose" and is based upon the life studies of Jessie Allen Fowler, the eminent delineator of character.

MAYFAIR COMPANY AT NIAGARA FALLS.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, and his company of Mayfair artists are at present at Niagara Falls, where a number of scenes are being taken depicting "the honeymoon episode," one of the many portrayed in "Persuasive Peggy." Mr. Schlesinger is leaving nothing undone in his efforts to make the first of the Mayfair productions "the film success of the season" and one which will insure substantial profits to both state rights buyers and exhibitors.

Charles J. Brabin is in charge of the direction of the inimitable Peggy Hyland, who is supported by an excellent cast including William Davidson, Mary Cecil Parker, Arthur Housman, Jules Cowles and others.

The story by Maravene Thompson has appeared serially in McClure's Magazine and is now running in the foremost newspapers throughout this country and Canada.

COHAN RUN OF "REDEMPTION" EXTENDED.

Because of the overflow audiences drawn to the Cohan Theater, New York, the run at that house of "Redemption" has been indefinitely extended. The picture, in which Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, are featured, is at present in its fourth week. It was originally intended to remain for only two weeks.

It is said that some of the biggest and best known state rights buyers in the country are negotiating for the purchase of the film. Announcement is made of the probability of shortly closing some of the richest territory.

"Redemption" is Julius Steger's production and was directed by him and Joseph A. Golden.

Rothapfel Books "Parentage"

Rialto's Managing Director to Give Henley-Seng Feature Week's Run—Colonial, Chicago, Also to Show Thought Film.

MANAGING DIRECTOR Samuel Rothapfel, of the Rialto theater, New York, who has been highly enthusiastic regarding Hobart Henley's "Parentage" since he first saw it screened, has booked that feature for his theater for the week of July 8. This showing will take the place of a run on Broadway, as Mr. Seng, who is presenting "Parentage," believes that these so called runs have lost their significance. The producers lose money on these forced runs and intelligent buyers and exhibitors no longer consider them a mark of quality, he believes.

Mr. Seng has implicit confidence in "Parentage" as a picture for the masses and the classes, for the largest of cities and the smallest of towns, and says it can be shown successfully anywhere in the United States at from ten to fifty cents.

Mr. Rothapfel frankly stated that he booked "Parentage" because he considered it one of the most human character portrayals that he has ever seen screened, and a feature in which the types are most distinctive and realistic.

He will place his stamp of personal guarantee upon "Parentage" in his own daily newspaper advertising presenting it to his patrons. Supplementing Mr. Rothapfel's own campaign in the greater city, Mr. Seng will depart from the usual custom of marketing state rights by continuing his advertising to the public after the Rialto showing. This publicity will be of great aid to exhibitors who book "Parentage" in and around New York, through the Selznick exchange.

Mr. Aaron Jones, who is just as enthusiastic about "Parentage," will parallel Mr. Rothapfel's showing, as far as advertising goes, when he opens a run of "Parentage" at his beautiful Colonial theater, Chicago, during convention week, July 15.

Mr. Jones stated that, with the exception of one or two massive spectacles, he considered "Parentage" the best combination of entertainment value and advertising possibilities he had ever seen. He classed it as the best box-office value of the ten to fifty-cent class he has ever presented.

STILES SECURES "TROOPER 44."

James A. Stiles, of 220 West Forty-second street, New York, has acquired from the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation the New York State and Northern New Jersey rights to "Trooper 44." It is understood that the deal was negotiated through Joseph Miles. Mr. Stiles says that he is going to make a strong drive with "Trooper 44" and back it up with advertising that will be sure to make it go big.

"AUTOMANIACS" (Century).

One of the new Alice Howell comedies, prepared for distribution on the state rights plan, is "Automaniacs," a merry-maker that proves how many laughs may be extracted from the mismanagement of an automobile and attendant consequences. "Balloonatics" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" are other Century comedies ready for the market. "Alice of the Sawdust" is in the making, under the personal direction of J. G. Blystone, who is presenting Miss Howell in all of her starring features. In these comedies Miss Howell is being brought into direct competition with comedians of the screen, an enterprise that is engaging the best efforts of President Julius Stern of Century Comedies in promoting to a successful issue. Distribution is made from the Mecca Building, New York, where Mr. Stern has headquarters, while Mr. Blystone is in personal charge of productions at Hollywood, Cal., where the Century studio is located.

FURTHER SALES OF "GOD'S MAN."

It is announced by President William L. Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, that negotiations have been completed and contracts entered into for the exclusive rights to "God's Man" in thirty-two States. Among the recent purchasers are Samuel Van Ronkel, of Chicago, who has chosen "God's Man" as the leader for his newly-organized exchange enterprise. Mr. Van Ronkel acquires the exclusive booking privileges for the States of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. "God's Man" will receive its first presentation for an indefinite run at a leading downtown theater. Simultaneously with the Chicago premier, Mr. Van Ronkel plans the opening at four other cities within the States controlled by him.

Another important contract entered into by President Sherrill is with George F. Perkins, who, acting for his Independent Film & Theater Supply Company, of Montreal, has acquired the rights to "God's Man" for Canada. Mr. Perkins' organization will also exploit this Frohman production as a distinct theatrical attraction, having arranged for the simultaneous presentation with complete traveling company in four Canadian centres.

MUCH TERRITORY CLOSED FOR "THE DEEMSTER."

"The Deemster," with Derwent Hall Caine, son of the great Manx author in the star role, has been sold in several foreign countries within the past fortnight. Mr. Jury, of London, bought it for England and the United Kingdom, while J. L. Nerlien, Ltd., of Christiana, Norway, bought the rights to Norway, Sweden and Denmark. The Commonwealth of Australia and New Zealand were the buyers for their countries, and Regal Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, through N. L. Nathanson and A. S. Aronson, managing director and secretary, respectively, secured the rights to Canada.

Negotiations are pending through J. Frank Brockliss and W. E. Shallenberger with buyers for several other countries where Hall Caine's name is a most potent drawing power for any theatre.

During the same period a number of States have been purchased. Mention was made last week of Warren and Clarke, the famous circus people, getting the rights to Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Immediately after that sale Walter S. Butterfield, of the State Film Company, Battle Creek, Mich., bought the Michigan rights. Mr. Butterfield will be remembered as the buyer of "Civilization" for his State.

EDGAR LEWIS STARTS NEW PICTURE.

Armed with a new story by Anthony P. Kelly, and accompanied by many of the same actors and actresses who appeared in "The Barrier" and "The Bar Sinister," Edgar Lewis left New York a few days ago and is now staging the first scenes of his next special production among the beautiful hills of Ticonderoga, New York.

Before beginning the actual making of the picture Mr. Lewis spent several weeks working upon the script and selecting the cast and locations. No title has been announced for the picture, and no hint is being given of the subject, but as Edgar Lewis has an enviable record as a producer of pictures on live topics, and Anthony P. Kelly is responsible for the scenario, an interesting production is expected.

HIRSH PROMOTES MERGER; GETS "REDEMPTION."

The Civilization Feature Company and the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, both of New York, have merged into the Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation. The leading mover in the merger was Nathan Hirsh, who owns interests in both concerns. Quarters for the new concern are being sought at the present time.

The first release of the Civilization-Pioneer Corporation, which, according to Mr. Hirsh, will acquire the New York State and Northern New Jersey rights to only the most meritorious productions, will be Julius Stegers' "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw.

Associated with Mr. Hirsh are Louis Hass and Morris Rose, who were identified with the Civilization Feature Company.

"HANS UND FRITZ" FOR THE SCREEN.

The Short Features Exchange, the offices of which are on the seventeenth floor of the Godfrey Building, announces it has added a series of cartoon pictures to its program. The company, which takes its name from the type of pictures it handles, announced recently that it had secured the New York rights to the Terry Feature Burlesques and the Terry Human Interest Reel—both picture series of the first magnitude; and now it announces it has closed the New York rights for the "Hans und Fritz" cartoon pictures drawn by Rudolph Dirks.

The Short Features Exchange, which has been negotiating for the New York rights to the "Hans und Fritz" comedies for a time, announces to the exhibitors of New York that it has finally got these pictures on its program. The "Hans und Fritz" pictures have met with great success in the Sunday World, and the new film version of this popular series will meet with even a far greater degree of success on the screen.

KLOTZ DOESN'T WANT MILLION.

According to the statement made to a prominent state rights buyer by Joseph Klotz, of Klotz and Streimer, he is one of the few men who does not want to make a million out of one picture. Having heard that some rights had been disposed of on the Klotz and Streimer feature, "Whither Thou Goest," a prominent buyer called and supplemented an offer for his territory with a remark that the feature, while well above the average and a good, strong state rights proposition, was not a "Million Dollar" picture.

Jos. H. Klotz.

Mr. Koltz agreed that the feature was not in the "Million Dollar" class and said that he did not expect to make a million dollars on any picture that his company might handle.

"The mania to make a million in a hurry has hurt not only the industry as a whole but has been the main cause of many failures of state rights producers," said Mr. Klotz, "and my company intends to steer clear of this form of business insanity. We intend to sell our features at prices based entirely upon cost, for we believe that the only way to make money and keep on making money is to sell pictures at prices that do not put them in the catagory of gambling ventures and the state rights buyer in the position of a gambling speculator.

"If the state rights operator makes money he will come back and buy more. He will continue to be a customer and he will naturally come to the company where he can buy pictures at fair prices."

PATHE'S "TANKS OF ANCRE" BIG ATTRACTION.

Actual figures continue to point to Pathe's five-reel Official British War Picture, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," as the greatest box-office attraction of the year. After breaking all records at the special showing at Carnegie Hall, New York; in Chicago, St. Louis and other cities and at the Strand theater engagement, during which ninety thousand people saw them, these pictures are playing three weeks solid at Tremont Temple, Boston.

Other important bookings at big theaters for long runs at high rentals which have come in during the last few days and which have been accepted, since they do not interfere with state rights buyers, are the following: Circle Theater, Indianapolis, one week, which may be increased to two; Strand Theater, Birmingham, one week; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, one week; Valentine Theater, Toledo, one week, under the auspices of the Red Cross; Strand Theater, Spokane, one week.

Following almost exactly the advertising campaign instituted during the Strand Theater run, Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo played the "Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" to enormous business, announcing as "two extraordinary attractions" this picture and Baby Marie Osborne in "Sunshine and Gold."

HERALD BUYS SUPERLATIVE FRANCHISE.

Leo Rosengarten, president of the Herald Film Corporation, has purchased the New York State and Northern New Jersey franchise for the output of the newly-formed Superlative Pictures Corporation. The franchise is for the six pictures to be made by Irving Cummings Pictures, Inc., and the six to be made by Lois Meredith Pictures, Inc.

The Herald Corporation is also exploiting "The Prima Donna's Husband," "The Melting Pot" and "Around the World in Eighty Days."

BILLY WEST AS A MILLIONAIRE.

Billy West, the young King Bee star, is rapidly adding to the list of impersonations which is making him popular with exhibitors and fans alike. In King-Bee sixth comedy, now approaching completion at the Flushing Studios, Billy plays the part of a young millionaire whose wealth and social position involve him in all sorts of difficulties with all sorts of people. "The Millionaire" is a comedy of contrasts in which Billy is splendidly supported by the members of the King-Bee Company, which includes Babe Hardy, Leo White, Bud Ross, etc.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Moore to Increase His Klever Komedies

Comedian Returns to New York From Jacksonville to Add to Studio Facilities Here.

VICTOR MOORE, the well known comedian, has returned to New York from his motion picture studio in Jacksonville, Fla., to establish another studio in the metropolis, and to make his plans for the producing of his future single reel Klever Komedies, which are released by Paramount Pictures Corporation to all exhibitors.

It has taken Mr. Moore, who was a favorite in five reel comedies, having starred in some of the most successful Lasky productions, less than six months to realize that the greatest demand in the motion picture industry today from the exhibitors' standpoint is feature single reel pictures. When he originally entered the short feature field, with the sole intention of raising the standard of single reel comedies, his friends were decidedly dubious as to the success of the venture, but in less than half a year, he has not only proved that single reel comedies are not "fillers" but are actually "added attractions" to the five or six reelers on the bill, are what the exhibitors want and is now planning to erect a second studio and to increase his output by 100 per cent.

Mr. Moore will add another director to his staff and is also picking a number of new players to appear in support with him in his future pictures. Thomas J. Gray has also been added to the sceneric department and is now preparing a number of clever scripts which Mr. Moore will produce in his new studio this summer.

"My one ambition is to make one reel features," said Mr. Moore in speaking of his new plans, "and to that end I am enlarging my producing, executive and scenerio departments.

"It is perfectly natural for everyone to prefer to make and appear in five or six reel features, but when you look over the field from the exhibitors' standpoint, and analyze the situation you will find that the greatest need today is the single reel feature.

"I have studied the proposition carefully, and I know that it is the one best bet for the exhibitor, and I have but one ambition and that is to give them this material. My additional studio will be equipped with the best of everything."

"IN THE TALONS OF AN EAGLE" (Selig).

"The Right of Might" is the title of the Selig two-reel drama released in General Film Service, Monday, June 18. Some people go through life fondly imagining that "Right is Might" and that power and riches are the essentialities in this world. The drama tells of how John Willis, worthy and powerful, learns that the race is not always to the swift nor the battle to the strong.

Worthy of more than ordinary mention is the Selig one-reel drama, "In the Talons of an Eagle," released Saturday, June 23, in General Film Service. The drama is from the pen of Gibson Willets, and one climax shows a gigantic eagle carrying away an unfortunate child in its talons. There is also an unusual ending to this story, which features an exceptional cast of players, including Lafayette McKee and Edith Johnson.

BABY MARIE AS "MISS CAPTAIN KIDDO."

Baby Marie Osborne's company is nearing the completion of her latest picture, "Miss Captain Kiddo," made for the Pathe exchange by the Lasalida Films, Inc.

In this picture, little Marie has some splendid opportunities to display her remarkable versatility. The story, which cleverly blends a serious case of smuggling with "play piracy," in which the childish mind takes some wonderful flights of imagination, is both pleasing and absorbing and contains some moments of intense suspense. The little star in her make-up as a juvenile female "Captain Kidd" is one of the "cunningest" sights imaginable, while her acting of the part is bound to score another big "hit" for her.

W. A. S. Douglas, general manager of the Lasalida company, was so delighted with the little lady's appearance as the "blood-thirsty" pirate, that he snapped some kodak pictures of her, one of which is shown herewith.

DREW AND FIGMAN IN METRO COMEDIES.

Early Metro comedy releases are "Monomania," with Max Figman as star, released June 18, and "The Hypochondriac," starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, released June 25.

"Monomania" is a Metro-Rolma comedy by W. H. Hannon. It tells the story of Dicky, who loves Doris Gray.

"The Hypochondriac," by Stella Cowen, is a typical Drew comedy, with plenty of opportunity for the talents of both Mr. and Mrs. Drew. Mrs. Brooks is a woman who craves sympathy. She "enjoys poor health." In the end she throws her medicines away, dismisses nurse and doctors, and makes up her mind to ask for no more sympathy.

$200,000 FILM WITH WILLIAM FARNUM.

William Fox announces as a future release, "When a Man Sees Red," William Farnum's greatest picture. This is a $200,000 special film de luxe from the novel, "The Painted Lady," by Larry Evans, which ran in the Saturday Evening Post. There are scenes in Honolulu, San Francisco and the South Sea Islands.

Bluebirds Fill Program Till September

Nine Players Are Featured in the List of Subjects Now Ready for Placing on the Schedule.

BLUEBIRDS to fill the program until late in September have been completed by West Coast directors, and now await the formality of being fixed on the schedule. Violet Mersereau, Dorothy Phillips, Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, Ella Hall, Louise Lovely, Myrtle Gonzalez and Neva Gerber and George Hernandez are the stars involved, comprising a list of Bluebird's most popular attractions.

Rex Ingram's production with Violet Mersereau was lately completed at Bluebird's Leonia, N. J., studio and has been fixed for release July 23 as "The Little Terror." Miss Mersereau plays the role of a circus rider, and to get the proper surroundings a travelling show was leased and operated by Director Ingram, while the circus scenes were being filmed.

Two productions by Lynn F. Reynolds, Bluebird's "nature study" director, are ready for August and September release, supplementing "The Greater Law," set for July 16, with Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez starring. These two favorites will lead the Reynolds company in "The Show-Down" (previously referred to as "Back to the Primitive"), but Neva Gerber will replace Miss Gonzalez when Alice Heagan Rice's story, "Mr. Opp," is subsequently shown.

Dorothy Phillips, directed by Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, will maintain her average of once-a-month in presentations of "The Rescue" (July 30), produced by Miss Park, and "Triumph," directed by Mr. De Grasse. During the past week "The Rescue" was shown to Bluebird executives in the Mecca Building and stirred every man-jack on the job to enthusiastic praise, not alone of Miss Phillips' acting, but for the Hugh Kahler story, so cleverly contrived and skillfully directed.

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon have completed a brace of comedy-dramas in succession to the clever series they have previously advanced among Bluebirds. "The Clean-Up," to be shown Aug. 6, was the last William Worthington contributed to the series. Elmer Clifton, new director of the Farnum-Vernon combine, produced Jack Cunningham's "The Fourth Glove," from Waldemar Young's scenario, and the result will appear among September offerings.

Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford, in "My Mother," directed by Mr. Julian, and featuring Ruby Le Fayette in the mother role; Louise Lovely, directed by Allan Holubar, in "Sirens of the Sea," suggested by Grace Helen Bailey's story, and Ella Hall in "Little Miss Fix-It," written by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Mynton, and directed by Jack Conway, complete the list of completed Bluebirds, ready to take wings on dates to be determined during August and September.

NEW MARY PICKFORD PICTURE FINISHED.

What is expected to score the greatest dramatic triumph ever experienced by Mary Pickford in addition to presenting a particularly timely film production has just been completed at the Lasky studios, Hollywood. The new picture, to be released by Artcraft on July 2, has been aptly titled "The Little American" and discloses a story of powerful patriotic appeal staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

As a result of combining the two arts of Mary Pickford and Cecil B. De Mille in the presentation of this spectacular subject, the producers feel they have achieved a distinct advance in the present photoplay standard. In the production of the film various well known authorities on conditions affecting the war conditions abroad, with which the story deals, have collaborated with Mr. De Mille, with the result that even the most minute detail has been pronounced perfect. Captain Ian Hay Beith, author of "The First Hundred Thousand" and British army officer, was among those whose assistance proved invaluable to the director.

In keeping with the work of the star is that of an exceptional cast including such well known players as Hobart Bosworth, Jack Holt, James Neill, Raymond Hatton, Guy Oliver, Edythe Chapman, Lillian Leighton, Walter Long, Dewitt Jennings and little Ben Alexander.

MISS TALMADGE USES HOME AS LOCATION.

In the filming of "The Moth," the Selznick subject, it was necessary to have a country estate as the background for some of the important scenes. While Director Edward Jose was cogitating about a "location" that would answer the purpose, Norma Talmadge, the featured player in the picture, came to the rescue with a suggestion that her summer residence be thus employed.

Accordingly the star and company climbed into motors and whizzed out to Beechurst. Mr. Jose was delighted when he saw how ideally fitted to the requirements was Miss Talmadge's home. As the scenes they were to take were those of a house party, Miss Talmadge proposed that the company pass the week-end there as her guests, so that they might live the parts of the play at least to that extent, and sent a car back to town to pick up their baggage.

As a result when film devotees see depicted on the screen Lucy Gillam's country home showing many interesting scenes in the development of the plot of "The Moth," they will be admiring the beauties of Miss Talmadge's own summer home at Beechurst.

Wilkes-Barre Company Enlarging

Black Diamond Comedies Engage More Players and Secure Additional Property.

THE United States Motion Picture Corporation is enlarging its studio in Wilkes-Barre, Penn. and has engaged a number of new players for the future single reel Black Diamond Comedies, which will be released by Paramount Pictures Corporation to all exhibitors.

So successful have been the Black Diamond comedies since they have been taken over by the Paramount organization that it has become necessary to enlarge the plant and studio, making it possible to present more elaborate productions and to keep more than one company busy at a time. The new studio will be a daylight studio twice as large as the present one, and will contain every possible modern equipment, and much material that is not used in the great majority of picture plants, by reason of the fact, that the Black Diamond Comedies contain a large amount of uniquely interesting and clever bits of trick photography. An entire section of the new place will be used solely for this work.

Additional property has been secured by the company in the vicinity of Wilkes-Barre, where the outdoor material will be made. The company has purchased a large tract of land where every phase of outdoor pictures can be "shot."

During the past week additional players have been secured who will surround Miss Latrice Joy, the leading woman of the company. A scenario department was recently established by the company and their offer to pay $5 a word for all acceptable ideas of fifty words has brought to them hundreds of clever suggestions which are rapidly being turned into script for the company.

President J. O. Walsh in speaking of the future work of his company, stated that nothing would be left undone to make these single reel comedies big features.

WUXTRY! AUTHOR WELCOMES CUTS IN FILM.

He has been found. An author who didn't care—who calmly saw his filmed effort sliced into and said: "Good boy! Go to it!"

Lloyd Lonergan is his name and the Thanhouser studio his habitat. His adaptation of Wilkie Collins' "Woman in White" was the filmed effort in mention. Lonergan wrote it for eight reels. This week the first print was projected at the studio.

Then did happen that Author Lonergan broke all precedents.

"I like it," he told Edwin Thanhouser, "but I'd like it better in just a reel or two less. So chop and fear no one. A good eight-reeler, no doubt, but a perfect six-reeler—so I will turn my back, and you may hew away. Strange for an author to talk so, I know—but then it is a day of evolution and revolution."

The picture, which stars Florence La Badie, is released as a Pathe Gold Rooster Play on July 1.

ESSANAY MAKING ONLY TWO AND FIVE REELS.

For the present the Essanay Company is confining its output to two and five reel subjects. The program of today is so arranged that these two lengths are more in demand that any other lengths it has been found.

Much care has been taken with the Black Cat and "Do Children Count?" subjects so that many exhibitors who are devoting one or two nights a week to short subjects or variety programs may use one of these pictures as the chief attraction. This plan is proving especially successful where a daily change policy is still adhered to and the patrons have tired of too many long features.

The combination of the five and two reel picture is being made in many instances where theatre managers desire an exceptionally strong program which will justify an advance in admission prices.

VIOLA DANA RETURNS FROM NEW ENGLAND.

Viola Dana has returned to New York after a picture-making trip to New England. "I gained six pounds while I was away, caught sixty fish, made six public appearances in Boston, sold $60,000 worth of Liberty bonds, led a parade with six hundred people in the line, saw six companies of sailors at drill every day in the naval station at Marblehead, Mass., watched sixteen flights in navy aeroplanes, and have returned to begin work on my sixth picture for the Metro Pictures Corporation." So spoke Miss Dana, her face tanned from working in the sun. "Marblehead treated us royally," she continued, "and I enjoyed every minute of my visit there. The trip up and back we made by auto, so that was really a vacation."

ROCKLAND AWAITS MAXINE ELLIOTT PICTURES.

Perhaps no city in the United States is so balanced on the tiptoe of expectancy over the coming screen debut of Maxine Elliott as Rockland, Me., the famous beauty's birthplace. Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Miss Elliott's managers, have received applications from virtually all the Rockland picture houses for advance bookings of the two pictures thus far completed by the star.

Jungle Story Leads Universal June 25

"Man and Beast" Is a Story of South Africa—Varied Complementary Program.

JUNGLE life with all its vivid picturesqueness and thrilling adventures is portrayed in the Butterfly five-act drama, "Man and Beast," which tops the universal program for the week of June 25. The settings for this exciting photodrama are laid in the South African veldt and the story tells of the hatred of the Boers for their English neighbors. Wells, Harry Clifton, Park Jones and Mrs. Witting.

An unusual two-part comedy drama is offered under the Victor brand on Friday, entitled, "Swede Hearts," with Neal Hart and Janet Eastman in the leading roles. This photoplay was written and produced by George Marshall. Dick La Reno and George Berrill have important roles in the production. Issue No. 25 of the Universal Screen Magazine is the other Friday release.

The Bison two-act Western drama, "Money and Mystery," with Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict, is the feature for Saturday. The Joker comedy, "His Fatal Beauty," with William Franey, and the weekly issue of the Universal Current Events will be released on this date.

On Sunday the Imp drama, "The Double Topped Trunk," starring Allen Holubar, is presented. The other releases for Sunday are the Powers split reel, "Duke Doolittle's Jungle Fizzle," a comedy cartoon, and "In the Land of Many Temples," a Dorsey educational, and the Big U drama, "Love's Turmoil," featuring Edna Maison.

During the week the first episode of the latest and greatest of Universal serials, "The Gray Ghost," will be released. The serial will run for fifteen consecutive weeks.

"THE NAULAHKA." (Pathe).

In line with Pathe's policy to secure the best stories, best authors and best productions for the motion picture public of the world, contracts have been signed with the Astra Film Corporation for the production of "The Naulahka," one of Rudyard Kipling's famous stories.

Work on this production will begin shortly. Antonio Moreno, who recently signed with Astra, will be one of the regular stars on the Pathe program, and will take the part of Nick Garvin, the western hero of the story. Helene Chadwick, who was featured in "The Challenge," and has done good work in "Blind Man's Luck" and other Gold Roosters, will play the part of Kate, the girl in the story who dreams it her mission to uplift the Oriental women.

Warner Oland, who has achieved screen fame by his portrayal of Baron Hubroki in "Patria" and who takes the part of Richard Carslake, the villain in "The Fatal Ring," will play the Rajah. Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra, will secure the services of a well-known dancer to play the part of Sitabhai, the Gypsy Queen, who from the harem of the Rajah rules the kingdom.

George Fitzmaurice, who spent much of his life in the Orient and whose knowledge of all Eastern people and customs has been acquired first hand, will direct the picture.

FIRST STORY SELECTED FOR LOIS MEREDITH.

The scenario department of Lois Meredith Pictures, Inc., announces that it has selected a story for the first of six seven-reel productions starring Miss Meredith, to be released by Superlative Pictures, Corporation.

The story is a timely subject, written by Miss Winnifred Dunn. The cast is being rapidly assembled. William Robert Coleman will direct the picture, with Marcel Morhange as technical director. Mr. Morhange is a French director of the old school. The producing and laboratory work will be supervised by A. J. Danziger.

The working title of the picture will be "A Voice From the Mist."

ARBUCKLE GIVES 'EM ALL A CHANCE.

In preparing the scenario before starting to "shoot" the scenes, Roscoe Arbuckle carefully figures on the fitness and personality of his two mainstays, Al St. John and "Buster" Keaton, writing parts which will give their comedy propensities fullest scope. Then during the making of the picture, when it frequently happens that the situation takes a twist unanticipated by the scenario writer, instead of eliminating it or reconstructing it so that he may "hog" the scene, "Fatty" allows the incident to work itself out to the logical conclusion, the glory going to whoever is entitled to it.

Scene from "A Rough House" (Paramount).

The result is that in Arbuckle comedies the others of the company do not appear merely as foils to the chief comedian. When the other day a visitor to the studio commented on Mr. Arbuckle's generosity in this respect, he merely remarked, "I am interested in making good pictures, not pictures good only for self-exploitation."

Additional evidence of Mr. Arbuckle's policy of giving everybody a chance will be supplied when the newest Paramount-Arbuckle two-reeler, "The Rough House," is released to all exhibitors on June 25.

"JACK AND THE BEANSTALK" IN SEPTEMBER.

Nothing in the motion picture world has created so much interest as William Fox's announcement of the "Fox Kiddie Features," to be inaugurated in September with the magnificent photoplay spectacle of "Jack and the Beanstalk." C. M. and S. A. Franklin directed it.

Mr. Fox will carry the people back to the "Once upon a time" period, when all the good fairy tales began. "Jack and the Beanstalk" has been a heritage of joy for all—grown-ups and children alike. Mr. Fox has modernized the story somewhat, making it even more delightful.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" is a forerunner of other children's pictures which will follow in regular order, not too far apart to satiate the public. Children's pictures by children for children is the newest Fox slogan. And it is anticipated that there will be just as much charm, just as much interest for the grown-ups as well, for who among them do not delight in going back, at least, in reminiscence, to childhood days?

BABY MARIE STARTS NEW PICTURE

"Miss Captain Kiddo," the second Baby Marie Osborne picture made by the Lasalida Films, Inc., for the Pathe Exchange, has just been completed. Besides showing the little star at her best, being filled with situations bringing out her inimitable gifts of comedy and pathos, the picture contains plenty of "punch" and suspense.

The next production is entitled "Baby Pulls the Strings." The scenario was written by Marc Edmund Jones.

It is Mr. Douglas's intention to alternate two directors in the making of the Baby Marie pictures, in order to economize in the matter of time between productions.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN JOYOUS PICTURE.

Constance Talmadge is having an out and out vacation time in making her first Selznick Picture. This latest and youngest of the Selznick group of stars is already nearly finished with the production of "The Lesson," a photodrama based upon a story by Virginia Terhune Van De Water, and she says it has been more like play than work.

The result of the spirit of play that pervaded the company at all times, Director Giblyn says, is that this will be a real joy picture. It will not aim to be one of the "sex best sellers," but will be a pretty story of real people in human circumstances.

Much Publicity for Pearl White Serial

Hearst and Other Papers Will Carry Big Display "Ads." and Small Towns Will Not Be Overlooked.

PEARL WHITE, surrounded by one of the best supporting casts she has ever had, plus a story replete with thrills and dramatic situations, plus one of the biggest publicity drives ever made on any motion picture or serial in the history of the business, plus production and camera work of the kind ordinarily seen in the best feature, equal "The Fatal Ring," the latest Pathe serial, which will be released July 8.

"The Fatal Ring" publicity campaign has been planned with a view to reaching every motion picture fan in the United States. The Hearst papers throughout the country with their immense circulation will carry large display ads on this serial, together with news stories and reviews of the various episodes of the serial, in addition to pictures of the stars and a novelization of the serial. Other newspapers in the large cities in the United States and the newspapers in the smaller towns will also carry large display ads and considerable publicity on the stories. Many of them will print the novelization of the film story.

The release date on "The Fatal Ring" was advanced from September to July 8 at the earnest request of exhibitors, who wanted Pearl White as a box office tonic for the summer months and insisted they be allowed to capitalize on the reputation she has built up among motion picture fans for giving them the best film entertainment.

In "The Fatal Ring" Pearl White plays the part of Pearl Standish, a rich girl who has so much money she does not appreciate what money can buy for her. She is bored with life until a demand is made on her at the point of a gun by a man named Nicholas Knox, for the violet diamond which he claimed her father had bought after it had been stolen from the Sacred Order of the Violet God.

In the supporting cast of "The Fatal Ring" are Warner Oland, Ruby Hoffman, Earle Fox, Henry Gsell and others who have made names for themselves in serials and features.

Ruby Hoffman is well known from the many features in which she has been starred. This is her first serial.

GOLDWYN EMPLOYS ARDEN STUDIO ARTISTS.

Arrangements have just been concluded between Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Arden Studios of 559 Fifth Avenue, New York, whereby that splendid group of artists and decorators henceforth will lend their skill to the artistic preparation of all Goldwyn Pictures.

"THE LITTLE TERROR" (Bluebird).

Violet Mersereau returns to the Bluebird program, after an absence of three months, to present on July 23, "The Little Terror," a Rex Ingram production lately completed at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) Studios.

The difficulty in securing scenarios that are suited to Miss Mersereau's distinctive style of screen artistry serves to limit her appearances among Bluebirds, but there comes with this announcement the assurance that it is worth while to wait for the splendid opportunities this offering affords in presenting the dainty star to extreme advantage.

The life of a circus rider is disclosed in the early scenes, and to secure the proper settings a complete show was detained in its travels long enough for Director Ingram to secure the incidents involved. Numerous surprises and sensations have been introduced to give the play a proper proportion of "thrills" to insure sustained interest. Miss Mersereau's leading man will be Sidney Mason, who has filled a similar position in her recent pictures.

"THE FLAME OF THE YUKON" (Triangle).

Dorothy Dalton and Bessie Barriscale are the stars of the Triangle plays to be released July 1.

"The Flame of the Yukon" is the title of the drama in which Dorothy Dalton will make her ninth stellar appearance. It was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, directed by Charles Miller and photographed by Clyde De Vinna.

Bessie Barriscale will be seen in a comedy of the eternal feminine from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, known as "Hater of Men." Charles Miller also directed this production.

The scene of Dorothy Dalton's vehicle is Alaska during the early days of the gold rush. "The Flame" was a well-known character in the country between Nome and Dawson. She was the ruling spirit of the Midas Cafe, where she lured the nuggets from her victims one day, only to stake the unlucky to a new start when her mercurial sympathies were touched. Scenically the play has many striking qualities. A tribe of twenty Eskimos were brought from Alaska to lend realism to the production, together with several malamut dog-teams.

As the leading figure of "Hater of Men," Bessie Barriscale takes the part of Janice Salsbury, a special writer on one of the big city newspapers. She is engaged to a reporter, Billy Williams, but becomes convinced that marriage is only another name for slavery. She breaks off relations with Williams forwith. Miss Barriscale is capably supported by Charles K. French and Jack Gilbert.

INTERNATIONAL SHOWS JAPAN'S ACTIVITIES.

Motion pictures are now being shown which throw an interesting light on the activity of Japan in the present world conflict. A cameraman of the International Film Service recently visited Yokohama and secured many remarkable pictures of the rapidly expanding Asano shipyards. It is here that Japan builds her battleships.

In October, 1916, the site of the present shipyard was a waste swamp. Four months later the construction of the yard had been completed and keels laid for three battleships. Now several additional ships are in the course of construction.

This is but one of the many remarkably interesting pictures of Japan, China and Korea which are now being shown by the International Film Service, and released through Pathe. Together they afford a splendid survey of the eastern countries.

GENERAL FILM URGING VARIETY DAY.

Novel yet attractive has been the suggestion made by General Film Company in a circular to exhibitors urging them to devote one or two days a week to what is termed a Variety Day. The plan is meeting with excellent response and the response is growing. A new kind of motion picture exhibition has been inaugurated, causing somewhat of a revolution in the established methods of motion picture entertainment.

In its circular letter General Film urges the variety day, which in other words is a day given to a complete program of good, snappy one-reel, two-reel and three-reel pictures. This leaves out entirely the traditional five-reel feature.

"Our six-reel Pathe Gold Rooster Play, 'The Woman In White,' is a good story, well acted," remarked Edwin Thanhouser, whose work even in the early days was notable for photographic results, "but it also shines in another department—photography. I have been making motion pictures for eight years now, but I have never seen a Thanhouser production that surpassed the present one in steady photographic effectiveness. At times this effectiveness reaches the startling plan, and I must publicly commend Director Warde and Cameraman Zollinger on what they have attained in this direction."

Change Release Dates of World-Bradys

"Jerry-for-Short" Will Be Issued August 13—Calendar Completed to October 1.

THERE has been a rearrangement of the release sheet of World-Pictures Brady-Made. The new photoplay, "Jerry-for-Short," in which little Madge Evans makes her first appearance as a star, will be published August 13, throwing several kinks into the previous arrangement of later releases.

"Jerry-for-Short" will be followed August 20 by Ethel Clayton in "Souls Adrift"; August 27, Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "The Guardian"; September 3, Alexandra Carlisle in a dramatization of a very popular novel; September 10, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "The Marriage Market"; September 17, Ethel Clayton in "The Woman Beneath"; September 24, Kitty Gordon in "The Divine Sacrifice."

This keeps the schedule of practically ready plays up to the minimum of three months ahead, with an ever increasing flock of pictures in the immediate offing. Six directors are always working in the World's studio, and it is a fixed rule of the Brady direction that the actual making of any World play shall not take up more than three weeks' time.

This stated process under which six directors are completing as many photoplays every three weeks makes a regular output of two productions weekly, so that no intricate process of computation is required to indicate the steady accumulation of Brady-Made motion pictures as time passes.

When Mr. Brady first made formal alliance with the World Film Corporation as director general it was freely predicted that he would not "stay hitched" for any great length of time—that the studio conditions then prevailing throughout the manufacturing end of the motion picture business would either dishearten or disgust him, to the end that he would quit.

"But," as a member of the staff of World Pictures said in discussing this matter, "the prophets either were unfamiliar with Brady's career or had him sized wrong. Otherwise they would have known he had been all his life either kicking obstacles out of his path or climbing over them, until this has become second nature to him."

What's Doing in the Fox Studios

Release Advanced to June 17 for "Some Boy."—June Caprice Completes "Patsy."

A CHANGE in the William Fox program of releases for June results in advancing George Walsh's "Some Boy!" from the week of the 24th to the 17th. On June 24, Valeska Suratt's production, "The Siren," will be issued.

Mr. Walsh's newest photoplay has just the verve, the dash and the snap that the title indicates. As the mysterious widow of this screen drama, "Smiling George" is positively bewitching, and gives a great female impersonation. In his supporting cast there appear Doris Pawn, Herschel Mayall, Velma Whitman, Hector V. Sarno, Caroline Rankin and N. A. Myles. Otis Turner was in charge of the direction.

Principals have already been selected for Virginia Pearson's new picture, which Carl Harbaugh will make. Mr. Harbaugh will be remembered as the man who staged the Fox cinema version of Hawthorne's classic, "The Scarlet Letter." For Miss Pearson's film he has chosen Hardie Kirkland, Claire Whitney and William Meehan. Mr. Meehan is now playing a leading part in the big Broadway success, "Turn to the Right."

The subject which June Caprice has just finished under the direction of John G. Adolfi will be called "Patsy." It is one of the brightest screen plays the "Sunshine Maid" has had yet. A title has also been determined on for the picture recently begun by Gladys Brockwell. This will be released as "To Honor and Obey?" The story is unusually tense and it is expected that the production will prove the dramatic sensation of New York.

WILLIAM FARNUM CAST ANNOUNCED.

Frank Lloyd, who is directing William Farnum's new super de luxe play for William Fox, has selected these principals to support the star: Mary Martin, Wanda Petit, Walter Law, William Courtleigh, Jr., and Marc Robbins.

Miss Martin has appeared in a dozen Fox dramas, and Walter Law has an almost equally long record. Miss Petit was in "The Derelict," and had an important role in "The Broadway Sport," the current Fox release.

Mr. Courtleigh is a newcomer to William Fox pictures, but he has been on the stage and in photoplays for years. He was in the original cast of "Under Cover." Marc Robbins is well known to followers of the silent drama.

THRILLING PROLOGUE TO "PAWS OF THE BEAR."

In what might be called the prologue to the latest Triangle drama, "Paws of the Bear," by J. G. Hawks, in which William Desmond is starred, a glimpse of the Belgian frontier is given, where the Uhlans are brought sharply into conflict with the Allies. There are scenes of startling actuality, with the explosion of big guns and the circling aeroplanes. And yet this is not a war story.

The opening scene, or prologue, is purely episodic, and in a flash the audience is started on an exciting detective story, a story that picks up stray clews in Belgium, Russia, France and on the ocean. It is finally unraveled in the peaceful surroundings of an American country house.

"Paws of the Bear" is full of tricks and surprises, keeping the mind on a keen edge lest one incident be overlooked. At the very last flicker the mystery is solved.

ELSIE FERGUSON VISITS ARTCRAFT STUDIO.

Elsie Ferguson, Artcraft's newest recruit, was a recent visitor at the Artcraft studios. There she was shown about the "lot" by George M. Cohan, who is working on his second motion picture, "The Seven Keys to Baldpate," and given her initial lesson in film technique. Miss Ferguson will shortly commence activities on her initial photoplay, "Barbary Sheep."

MME. PETROVA FIVE YEARS IN AMERICA.

June 20 will mark the fifth aniversary of Madame Petrova's arrival in the United States. Up to that time the Russian actress had won an enviable reputation on the continent and in England as a vaudeville artist of remarkable skill and versatility. Her beautiful soprano voice, and her notable imitation of birds have made her one of the most popular stars in vaudeville. She had also gained prominence as an interviewer and dramatic writer on the London Tribune when her remarkable performance upon the stage attracted the attention of Jesse L. Lasky, who was visiting Europe. Mr. Lasky engaged Madame Petrova, she making her appearance shortly after that time at the "Folies Bergeres." Madame Petrova is truly an international character, having been born in Warsaw, educated in Paris, London and Brussels.

VICTOR MOORE IN "COMMUTING."

Victor Moore offers for his next release a one-reeler that is full of the laughs that makes your sides ache. It is called Scene from "Commuting" (Klever).

"Commuting," and we again see Vic and his family in "the dollar down and dollar when they catch you" bungalow.

"Commuting" speeds along with the laughs coming thick and fast and adds much to the success already made by the previous pictures of the "family" series that Moore has released. The subject will be issued June 18.

Artcraft Announces New Productions

Pickford, Fairbanks, Ferguson, Cohan and Farrar in Master Picture for Early Release.

AT the New York headquarters of Artcraft its new productions for release in the near future—actual work on most of which has already been commenced—were announced last week. The new schedule includes the production for early release of subjects presenting Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson, George M. Cohan and Geraldine Farrar.

Following the completion of Mary Pickford's patriotic picture, "The Little American," staged under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, Miss Pickford will start on her newest vehicle, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," within the next few days. This will be produced at the Lasky-Hollywood studio by Marshall Neilan. The cast is now being assembled. After "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" Miss Pickford will appear in an adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's well known book, "The Little Princess."

As his third Artcraft picture Douglas Fairbanks will present a story written by himself, the temporary title of which is "The Optimist." This subject will offer a typical Fairbanks photoplay staged by John Emerson. Eileen Percy will head the supporting cast.

George M. Cohan's next picture for Artcraft, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," is now being produced at the Famous Players-New York studio. This is under the direction of Hugh Ford. Although originally scheduled for production at a later date, the repeated requests from exhibitors for another Cohan picture in the near future, as a result of the sensational success of "Broadway Jones," prompted Mr. Cohan and Artcraft to do this film immediately.

At the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee, Elsie Ferguson will start her initial photoplay, "Barbary Sheep," the well known book by Robert Hichens, as soon as Maurice Tourneur finishes the picture on which he is now working.

Geraldine Farrar, who arrived in Los Angeles recently to appear in a series of photodramas for Artcraft under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, has contracted a severe case of tonsilitis, which has delayed her activities at the Lasky studio. It is thought the star will have fully recovered so as to start work soon. It is understood the story will present a big theme befitting the talents of the famous favorite.

"MRS. RAFFLES' CAREER" FOR ELTINGE.

Following the announcement that Julian Eltinge, the celebrated feminine impersonator, is to make his motion picture debut as a member of the Famous Players-Lasky stellar forces, Jesse L. Lasky announces that the first production in which Mr. Eltinge will star upon the screen will be "Mrs. Raffles' Career."

THE GREY SEAL COMES TO TOCSIN'S AID.

The strange and almost supernatural influence which a woman he has never seen exerts over Jimmie Dale is further emphasized in the fourteenth story of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series entitled "A Sheep Among Wolves."

For a long time the Grey Seal's movements have been entirely governed by this mysterious Tocsin who communicates with him only over the telephone or by letter and never personally. Now Jimmie Dale has a chance to do a good turn for the Tocsin. The Pretender finds a ring belonging to the Tocsin and getting Jimmie Dale into his power tries to make him tell who the mysterious woman is and where she can be found. But not even threats of torture and death can make Jimmie Dale disclose the knowledge which he possesses.

GROUP BOOKINGS FOR "POKES AND JABS."

In presenting the new "Pokes and Jabs" one-reel comedies General Film, their distributor, inaugurates a service calculated to be of outstanding value to the exhibitor. These comedies, with Burns and Stull the features, are being marketed in groups of six subjects at a time, so that the exhibitor can know definitely in advance just what and how much he is going to get.

The plan is insured of success by the efficient co-operation of the Jaxon Film Company, which produces these comedies.. The prints have gone to all the General Film exchanges weeks ahead of release. Later on the second group of six "Pokes and Jabs" comedies will be distributed in the same forehanded manner, and in fact is already being assembled for that purpose.

The first series of "Pokes and Jabs" include "Are Actors People?" "A Ride for Life," "Military Madness," "The Rest Cure," "The Pearls of Pauline," and "Ploughing the Clouds."

Other General Film groups are being handled in the same manner and proving a great convenience to the company's patrons.

GAIL KANE IN "THE UPPER CRUST."

Gail Kane has an excellent medium for display of her effective genius in "The Upper Crust," her latest American-Mutual production which contains a strong dramatic plot and a vein of comedy. "The Upper Crust" is released June 25. Miss Kane is at her best in a role that has a touch of the rogue in it. She is at her prettiest when "putting one over" in some prank that involves her in complications, and she always manages to smile her way out with ease and grace.

"The Upper Crust," developed from Charles Sherman's amusing novel of the same title, furnishes Miss Kane with just the opportunities she requires. There are complications through which Miss Kane, as the pretty Molly O'Toole, the young Irish housekeeper, makes her way with fascinating dash and good humor, landing, in the finale, just as she always does, completely vindicated and victorious.

In this play, Miss Kane has a chance to wear a dazzling array of pretty clothes.

PATHE INTERNATIONAL CARTOONS FIND FAVOR.

In line with action of a large number of wideawake exhibitors in tying up to the large amount of newspaper space occupied by Pathe-International cartoons in newspapers throughout the country, it is reported by Pathe Exchanges that business on these films is increasing and that they are showing up strong as fillers on well balanced programs.

In the three hundred odd cities in which these cartoons are running in the newspapers, Pathe Exchange men point out that many exhibitors are either running them or hastening to book them, while in other cities exhibitors and exchange men are successful in co-operating with the newspapers and getting them to run the cartoons in connection with their showing at local theaters. It is stated that full details as to cost of the newspaper service, etc., can be obtained from Theodore Deitrich at International Film Service, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

GAUMONT WEEKLY SHOWS THE PRESIDENT.

The outstanding picture of Gaumont's Mutual Weekly No. 129, the current issue, is that of President Wilson making his historic Flag Day address. The timeliness of this picture is well reflected in the importance of the occasion, the president voicing the sentiments of America in the world war. President Wilson is seen again in these pictures, reviewing the Confederates' parade. This picture, too, is historic, showing the first reunion of the Southern veterans in Washington. It is such pictures as these which make a news weekly valuable to an exhibitor. They give him just what his patrons are most anxious to see.

The fair sex come in for a large share of attention in this issue of the Mutual Weekly. From France come pictures of German prisoners as they are brought back from the front, and an amusing cartoon which gives the French view of America's German spy problem.

"THE WOMAN IN WHITE" (Thanhouser).

Florence LaBadie is announced as the star of a six-reel Pathe Gold Rooster Play, produced by Thanhouser from Wilkie Collins' famous novel, "The Woman in White." The adaptation was made by Lloyd Lonergan and the picture directed by Ernest Warde. The release date is July 1.

"The Woman in White" offers one of the most famous novels in the English language. The support is by a splendid cast, including Richard R. Neill, Arthur Bower, J. H. Gilmour, Gertrude Dallas, Wayne Arey and Claude Cooper.

EXCHANGE MAN IN TOWN.

Mayer Silverman, president of Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh, which distributes Art Dramas for that territory, was in New York last week for several days. Most of his time was spent in consultation with Harry Raver, president of Art Dramas. Mr. Silverman is one of the best known of exchangemen.

Ben Blumenthal

WHEN the list of big men who make and have made film history is finally written there will be one man near the top who up to this minute is very little or not at all known. That the man who first showed Europe how to exploit pictures on a big scale, who first conceived the chain idea of theaters for the films and who is directly responsible for the world-renown of "Quo Vadis" is among us is not generally known. But behind the exploitation of "Robespierre" and "Ivan the Terrible," the two new spectacles announced in last week's World, may be found a truly big man, with truly big ideals, in the person of Ben Blumenthal. Modestly choosing to hide under the corporate name of Export and Import Film Company, the World found him to be one of the kind of men of whom more should be known.

Ben Blumenthal.

Although a comparatively young man, Mr. Blumenthal boasts an enviable business career which stamps him as one of the kind of men whose foresight is responsible for the great commercial institutions whose product is a world's by-word. It is easy to gather that nothing of small or ordinary proportions can occupy the Blumenthal hours; in fact, even now while he is very busy with the big spectacles he is exploiting here, almost every steamer that sails for Europe carries in its cargo some purchases for the Blumenthal European interests. After ten years spent in the film centers of Europe, during which time he has speculated with literally thousands of pictures to an aggregate of millions of dollars, there is no questioning the Blumenthal decision on picture quality.

Which makes doubly interesting the fact that "Robespierre," the seven-reel spectacular drama which Mr. Blumenthal is selling to state rights men, is the realization of an ideal. It is more with him than the mere sale of a picture, for in "Robespierre" he finds the fulfillment of a long-cherished desire to be here in person guiding the exploitation of a bigger picture than his own "Quo Vadis."

"'Robespierre' is my idea of a truly great production," said Mr. Blumenthal. "In a spectacle of this size there is no consideration of financial saving in the making. The American audience hates faking; they want the real thing. In 'Robespierre' a number of sensational historic facts have been reproduced from description, much as a painter would work on his canvas. Surely, nobody ever accused the painter of a mural group of economizing in the size of the group for financial reasons. The same broad strokes, the same idea of employing every detail necessary for convincing portrayal, was the motif in the making of 'Robespierre.'

"Of course, I am proud of it, and I am planning things for it on a scale in keeping with its magnificent scope. It has been very gratifying to me to have heard immediately from the very select of the country's buyers, and I am quickly arranging for the various territories. It is a peculiarly satisfactory thing not to be forced to reams of rhetoric in order to convince the trade that one has an article of real merit. Once a man sees 'Robespierre' there is no talk on my part necessary. It is also a peculiarity of note that while I planned over a year ago to introduce this picture on the market, now the war events seem to have set a sort of historic frame for 'Robespierre' so that it fits perfectly into the very life of today. Its patriotic appeal will be very great, aside from its artistic magnificence."

FANS COMPETE FOR "NEGLECTED WIFE" PRIZES.

That the "Neglected Wife," the Pathe serial, founded on the two famous novels by Mabel Herbert Urner, is holding the attention of thousands of motion picture fans throughout the United States, is evidenced by the large number of letters which have been received at the Pathe offices giving solutions of the problem presented in the film and by the fact that well over 50 per cent. of the bookings on this serial are for from two days to a week.

Exhibitors from all sections report that the interest in this serial is holding up well, and that the contest in connection with it is one of the most popular advertising features used in a long time.

The universal appeal of the "Neglected Wife" and the fact that it touches the life of every individual at some point is evidenced by the reviews in the newspapers.

Paralta Players Begin Work

Kerrigan, Supported by Lois Wilson, Starts in on "A Man's Man"—Miss Barriscale in "Rose o' Paradise."

J. WARREN KERRIGAN made his first visit to his new studio in Hollywood on June 6. He arrived home the day before after making a five months' tour of the leading moving picture theaters of the United States, completing a journey of over 12,000 miles. His tour was undoubtedly the most extended ever made by any screen player. Mr. Kerrigan complimented Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Plays, and Robert Brunton, art and technical director, for their splendid work in organizing his studio, executive and dramatic staffs during his absence.

Lois Wilson, well known for her excellent work in many special feature productions, is Mr. Kerrigan's leading woman, and will play the role of Delores Ruey in Peter B. Kyne's "A Man's Man." Other leading roles will be played by Eugene Pallette as Captain Benivede, Harry Von Meter as Ricardo Ruey, Edward Coxen, as Tom Cafferty, alias Don Juan Caferter, Ida Lewis as Mother Jenks, John Stepping as Noddy Jerome, Ernest Pasque as Lieutenant Arrodondo and Kenneth Howland as Billy Geary.

Lois Wilson.

Two days after his return to Los Angeles, Mr. Kerrigan plunged into the work of his production..

Bessie Barriscale is working rapidly in the making of her first independent production, "Rose o' Paradise," a screen version of Grace Miller White's widely read novel. She is confident that she will have it ready for release in August. James Young is directing the dramatic action and Clyde De Vinna is handling the camera.

During the past week important railroad scenes were completed. The other features of the production, both exteriors and interiors, will be photographed at Miss Barriscale's studio in Hollywood.

David M. Hartford is playing the role of Jordan Morse. Howard Hickman is playing the role of Theodore King.

STARTS HALF YEAR WITH THREE SINGLES.

Gaumont starts the second half of the year with three of its popular single reels. The first July release through Mutual is "Tours Around the World," No. 35, July 3. The pictures on this reel show Bizerta, Tunis, and Sydney, Australia.

The second release of the week is the Mutual Weekly, July 4. It will be a patriotic number. This year July Fourth is more important than it has been in all the history of motion pictures, and the Gaumont Company will make proper recognition of the date.

July 5 Gaumont will release the sixty-second issue of its Mutual Magazine in Film, "Reel Life." The most novel section is the new one devoted to humor. On the same reel are "Making Jewelry at Home," "Berry Pickers of the South," "Toys of Wartime," and "Making Real Men," pictures of the Government's disciplinary barracks.

COLEMAN TO DIRECT FIRST MEREDITH PICTURE.

William Robert Coleman, formerly connected with Biograph, Selig, and other organizations, has been engaged to direct the first of six productions starring Lois Meredith and bearing the star's name as the brand of release.

Mr. Coleman will be remembered as having staged the Selig special in 1915, and also "The Mariner's Compass" and "Evangeline." His more recent endeavors have been for the London Features, London. The story for Miss Meredith has been selected and together with Marcel Morhange they will start work soon.

JULIETTE DAY IN PIRATE PICTURE.

"Betty and the Buccaneers," which will be Juliette Day's first production for Mutual, is a story of hidden treasure, pirates bold, thrilling adventure and romance.

Rollin S. Sturgeon is directing this production at the American studio, and Joe King is playing opposite her. Charles Marriott, Tote Du Crow, William Kyle, Gordon Russell and Harold Wilson are in the cast.

La Badie Heads Pathe for July 1

Max Linder and Ruth Roland Are Other Featured Players for the Week.

FEATURES of Pathe's program for the week of July 1 are the photodramatization of one of the most famous novels in the English language and a new Max Linder two-reel comedy. The program contains but one serial episode, "Neglected Wife" No. 8, the reason for this being that "Mystery of the Double Cross" ends on June 24 and Pearl White's new serial, "The Fatal Ring," begins on July 8.

Florence La Badie is starred in "The Woman In White," a six-reel Gold Rooster Play produced by Thanhouser under the direction of Ernest Warde, and adapted by Lloyd Lonergan from Wilkie Collins' famous novel.

Ruth Roland is starred in "The Neglected Wife," No. 8, entitled "A Relentless Fate." There are thrills and an intense dramatic interest in this episode, which shows Horace Kennedy's campaign for Congress and ends with Norwood's discovery of the secret relations between Kennedy and Margaret Warner, the girl Norwood loves.

Max Linder appears for the first time in "Max the Heart Breaker," a splendid two-reel comedy, never before released. This is probably one of the best Max Linder comedies ever seen in this country.

The eleventh release of the "Know America," comitone scenics is entitled "Here and There in Texas," and many of the most unusual and picturesque spots in this great state are shown, including the Alamo, San Jose Mission and Medina Dam, also a panorama depicting the interesting phenomenon of a city located both in Mexico and the United States.

An International cartoon and scenic split reel release and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 54 and 55 complete the program.

FAWCETT SHINES IN "CALEB CONOVER."

George Fawcett, the stage and screen star, perhaps does his finest motion picture acting in the forthcoming Selig drama founded on the book and play "Caleb Conover," written by Albert Payson Terhune. The story was produced in motion pictures by Colin Campbell from the scenario by Gilson Willets. In the drama Mr. Fawcett has many opportunities for artistic character delineation and he takes full advantage of them all.

Those who have seen preliminary showings of the drama pronounce it wonderful in many details. A capable cast supports Mr. Fawcett, including Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Frank Clark and Eugenie Besserer. Mr. Fawcett won success both in Europe and America in the character part of Caleb Conover, which story was very popular on the stage.

MRS. CASTLE WORKING IN SECOND PICTURE.

Mrs. Vernon Castle is now finishing her second Pathe feature produced at her studio. That newspapers, exhibitors and public are eager for news of her activities can be seen by the great number of inquiries received at the Pathe executive offices. Theater men from all sections of the United States express their belief in Mrs. Castle's drawing power as a screen star.

A splendid cast supports Mrs. Vernon Castle in her second Pathe picture. Because of his fine work in the first production, Elliott Dexter was again engaged as leading man. The cast includes Edwin Hoyt, Frank Sheridan, Reginald Mason, Fred Teden, Ethel Grey Terry, Frank Monroe and Julia Stewart. Such a cast is typical of the organization which has been built under Supervising Director George Fitzmaurice for the production of all the Castle pictures. Frank Crane is the director.

It is stated that the size and beauty of the stage settings are remarkable. Vincent Collins, formerly with one of the biggest art decorators of Fifth avenue, has given his personal attention to the furnishing and making of these settings.

Mrs. Castle has many opportunities to wear beautiful clothes in this picture, which is described as a strong drama of society and high finance. Like all the Astra pictures, it has also many thrills.

"THE LONE WOLF" GOES TO BROADWAY.

Herbert Brenon announces that he will present his third Selznick-Picture, "The Lone Wolf" by Louis Joseph Vance, at the Broadway theater for an indefinite engagement commencing Sunday evening, July 1. Mr. Brenon has been working on this production for months and it gives promise of equaling if not excelling any of his previous screen triumphs. The novel on which "The Lone Wolf" was founded created a sensation at the time of its appearance.

The unusually strong cast of the picture is headed by Hazel Dawn, screen and stage star, and Bert Lytell, one of the best known of the younger players of the modern stage. Others in the cast are Auriol Lee, Edward Abeles, Alfred Hickman, William E. Shay, Stephen Grattan, Joseph Chailles, Ben Grahamn, Edna Chase, William Riley Hatch, Wilfred Lytell, Juliet Brenon, Robert Fischer, Florence Ashbrooke, Cornish Beck and George Edwards Hall.

The story ranges from Tryon's hotel in Paris, where Marcel, the tiny lad who is later to develop into the Lone Wolf, is first revealed, to America, where the lad is taken by a master crook and becomes involved in his first escapade which ends in his being sent to a reformatory for ten years.

Mr. Brenon wishes it to be thoroughly understood that "The Lone Wolf" goes into the Broadway as a big picture production for an indefinite run. There will be no advance showing for either trade press or exhibitors. "The Lone Wolf" is to stand on its merits in competition with regular theatrical attractions.

HAYAKAWA AND VIVIAN MARTIN CO-STAR.

"Forbidden Paths," an original story by Eve Unsell, adapted by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun, presents Vivian Martin and Sessue Hayakawa on the screen together for the first time. For this Paramount picture Miss Martin was transferred from the Morosco studio to the Lasky studio, where the picture was staged under the direction of Robert Thornby. Important members of the cast are Tom Forman, James Neill, Paul Weigel, Ernest Joy and Carmen Phillips.

"THE PEDDLER" TAKING SHAPE.

Work on "The Peddler," the U. S. Amusement Corporation six reel production starring Joe Welch, is rapidly taking shape under the direction of Herbert Blache at the Fort Lee studios. Although this is Mr. Welch's first important screen work, he has had no difficulty in adapting himself to the requirements of the camera, and it is said that he acts like a finished picture star.

Ten-year old John Carr and his brother Stephen, who is two years his senior, are both playing important parts in the third Mae March picture which is now rapidly taking shape at the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee. These two boys, who play really important parts in the opening reels of the picture, are already veterans of the screen, having more roles to their credit than many older actors. These include "The Barrier," "The House of Fear," "The Great Divide," "The Stowaway" and many comedies.

The fourth episode of "The Mystery of the Gray Ghost" is being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Stuart Paton, who also prepared the screen version from Arthur Somers Roche's book, "Loots." Harry Carter and Priscilla Dean are featured in the serial, with Emory Johnson and Eddie Polo as their principal supporting players.

Strong Fox Program for July

June Caprice, Miriam Cooper, the Lees and Gladys Brockwell Are Featured.

WILLIAM FOX'S schedule of photoplays for July release, announcement of which has just been made, includes some of the most brilliant stars on the Fox program. The list for the coming month is well balanced and particularly attractive. The films will be issued in this order:

July 1, June Caprice in "Patsy," a dainty story of thrills and adventure; July 8, R. A. Walsh's drama, "The Innocent Sinner," with Miriam Cooper; July 15, Jane and Katherine Lee in a novelty surprise drama, "Two Little Imps"; July 22, Gladys Brockwell in "To Honor and Obey," a screen drama of vigorous action.

Virginia Pearson's present production, which Director Carl Harbaugh now has in work, will probably be the release for the week of July 29. This picture has not yet been titled, but the principals in the star's supporting cast consist of Hardie Kirkland, Claire Whitney and William Meehan.

In "Patsy," her eighth William Fox picture, Miss Caprice has another story full of charm and sunshine—the kind that gives her the opportunity to present her naive little self to best advantage. Harry Hilliard is the leading man. Others are Ethyle Cooke, John Smiley, Fred Hearn, Jane Lee, Alma Muller and Edna Munsey.

R. A. Walsh has produced in "The Innocent Sinner," featuring Miriam Cooper, another of the remarkably human photodramas for which he is famous.

Picturegoers the country over are eagerly awaiting the coming of "Two Little Imps," the Lee children's starring vehicle, which will be sent out on July 15. Kenean Buel, the director, has chosen for others in the company Edna Hunter, Edwin Holt, Stuart Sage, W. Harvey and Leslie Austen.

The last announced photoplay, "To Honor and Obey," for July 22, has an unusually gripping story and a cast of exceptional ability. The drama is Gladys Brockwell's initial production under the direction of Otis Turner. Bertram Grassby, as the social parasite, plays opposite the star.

Jewel Carmen has an important play in "To Honor and Obey." Charles Clary, Josef Swickard and Willard Louis are others in the cast.

APPLEGATE SOME WRESTLER HIMSELF.

Roy Applegate, playing the heavy-lead in the first Irving Cummings picture, now in course of production at Port Henry, N. Y., and which is to be released through Superlative Pictures Corporation, has found a newer means of keeping off fat and developing muscle. Applegate is a stockily built fellow measuring six foot in his stocking feet, and between scenes at the camp challenged one of the local so-called champions of wrestling. The actor showed himself a master in the art, and threw his opponent. Mr. Applegate has been affiliated with Fox, World, Metro, Famous and others.

"THE YELLOW UMBRELLA" (Essanay).

This is a unit of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series, and presents little Mary McAlister, the winsome child star, in one of the most appealing characterizations of her career. Through her childish efforts in this production, the petty scruples of two "grown-ups" are overcome and a wrecked love affair righted.

Scene from "The Yellow Umbrella" (Essanay).

This series provides excellent entertainment for both children and adults, and goes further in setting forth a cycle of problems growing out of the rearing of children which is of vital interest to all. Little Miss McAlister's supporting company is ideally balanced, and the photography is perfect. Each unit of the series presents a story complete in itself, and has a screen time of approximately 25 minutes.

MADGE KENNEDY COMPLETES FIRST PICTURE.

The steady and satisfying progress that has been made in the screening of the first of the farce comedies in which Madge Kennedy is to be starred has added another to the list of Goldwyn Pictures which have been finished on the pledge of that organization to complete twelve pictures to be ready for exhibition by the first of September.

There has been no hurry in the work which Miss Kennedy and her screen associates have done in the filming of this farce by Margaret Mayo, which will be the medium through which Miss Kennedy makes her first screen appearance.

Under the co-direction of Hugo Ballin and John Steuart Robertson, the fun-making in the farce has been even heightened in the process of transferring the story to the screen, with the result that laugh follows laugh just as quickly as will be good for the health of picture fans and the safety of buttons.

Miss Kennedy is already at work preparing for the second of her productions, which, in all likelihood, will be a comedy by Edgar Selwyn which enjoyed a long run in New York and a highly successful life on the road extending over three seasons.

ESSANAY'S SECOND WESTERN IN THE MAKING.

"The Range Boss" will be the second of Essanay's series of Westerns. This series, which was inaugurated with the release of "Land of Long Shadows" June 18, presents a new and novel screen interpretation of red-blooded life in the wilds of the West. It features Jack Gardner, the musical comedy star, who made his first appearance in pictures last month in Essanay's "The Night Workers."

"The Range Boss" has to do with the haps and mishaps of a prim and conventional party from New England in the untamed West. The manuscript, which was written by W. S. VanDyke, who also is producing the picture, promises to work into a rapid-fire thriller.

"The Range Boss" will have a screen time of approximately sixty-five minutes.

MANY OLD MEN WORK IN METRO SUBJECT.

The combined ages of thirty supers who took part in the Irish tavern scene in "Peggy, The Will o' the Wisp," a forthcoming Metro subject in which Mabel Taliaferro is starred, totals 2,800 years. The youngest man in the scene aside from the principals, was 74 years old, the oldest man was 94.

It taxed the genius of Ben Weiss to find characters for the part. The scene is a typical Irish tavern. In making the set Technical Director Edward J. Shulter had the assistance of Robert Farrell, an Irish artist, who has seen duty in France and who has just received word that his brother had met a hero's death on the battlefield, and his sister, a Red Cross nurse, had been wounded.

All of the old men who took part in the big scene were Irishmen. A genuine Irish bagpipe, different from a Scotch bagpipe, was played and the old fellows danced and sang.

ETHEL CLAYTON IN "THE STOLEN PARADISE."

Ethel Clayton in "The Stolen Paradise" plays her last engagement for some time with Edward Langford as her leading support, Mr. Langford having gone off to the war. For some time to come Miss Clayton will have the assistance of Milton Sills as leading man, Mr. Sills making his first appearance in this capacity when "Chasms" is thrown upon the screen for World-Pictures Brady-Made.

Metro Planning for Big Productions

Emily Stevens and Frank Mills in "A Sleeping Memory" Will Be Featured in First Subject.

THE first of the special productions de luxe to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation will be a picturization of "A Sleeping Memory," E. Phillips Oppenheim's popular novel, which has been adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino. Emily Stevens will be the star in this special release, and her leading man will be Frank Mills.

"A Sleeping Memory" is being photographed at the Quality studio, which will henceforth be given over to the making of special Metro wonderplays under the general supervision of Maxwell Karger. George D. Baker and Edwin Carewe will be the directors of the special releases. The former, assisted by Charles Hunt, will direct "A Sleeping Memory."

Assisting Mr. Karger in the Quality studio will be Dave Thompson, who has been for many years floor manager of the Metro studio at No. 3 West 151st street. Mr. Thompson will be general manager of the Quality studio. William H. Stevens will be the technical director, a position he has held at the Quality studio for some time.

In a short time Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will also begin work at this studio on a special release. Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will be directed by Edwin Carewe, who is now directing Emmy Wehlen in "The Trail of the Shadow."

These special productions for the Metro program will be released as super-features. They will be more than five reels and are being made for runs of a week or more.

Well known stars will appear in these productions, and their support will be very carefully selected. Mr. Karger believes in detail and the pictures will be made under his personal supervision.

Miss Stevens, who is the first star selected for Metro special productions, is still working in "The Slacker," which will be completed within a few days. George D. Baker, who is directing Miss Stevens, has just completed "The Lifted Veil" in which Ethel Barrymore appears. Prior to that picture, he directed Miss Barrymore in "The Greatest Power."

GAUMONT TO ANIMATE JOKES FROM "LIFE."

By special arrangement with Life, America's leading weekly of wit, humor and satire, the Gaumont Company will present jokes from the pages of this periodical in animated form. This arrangement marks the beginning of a new epoch for the lighter side of motion pictures. It is also worthy of note that it indicates what may be called a consolidation of interests, between the most popular magazine of its class and America's foremost producer of single-reel pictures.

The first animated contributions from Life will appear in Gaumont's magazine in film, "Reel Life" No. 62. This will be released through Mutual July 5. The first jokes to reach the screen are entitled "Hands Up!" and "A Saving Grace." To aid exhibitors in preparing their printed forecast of Gaumont pictures a single reel bulletin is issued. This may be had by writing the Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y.

"HEARTS AND FLOUR" (L-Ko).

Arriving at a happy ending, via the "slap-stick" route, continues to be the L-Ko method of merrymaking, and "Hearts and Flour," the release for July 13, goes to the extreme of happiness and the ultimate in "rough house" to attain the desired end. Eva Novak is the heroine, with Bob McKenzie and Chester Ryckman doing the "heavy work" in the comedy department. Director Dick Smith operated under the general supervision of J. G. Blystone in producing "Hearts and Flour," and the groceryman who rented his premises for their purposes vowed "Never again" when they had finished off their job.

Kalem's New "Stingaree" Series Shown

First Three Episodes of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" Cordially Received.

THE return of "Stingaree," that lovable character of E. W. Hornung, was acclaimed when the Kalem Company showed the first three episodes of their new series, "The Fugitive Passenger," "The Jackaroo" and "The Tracking of Stingaree," which promised to the old friends and admirers of the "gentlemen bushranger" fifteen weeks of pleasing entertainment. When the Kalem officials announced that E. W. Hornung, the author of "Raffles," had written for them fifteen new "Stingaree" stories which surpassed even the remarkably interesting stories of the old series, there were many unbelievers.

But after viewing the first three episodes of the "Further Adventures of Stingaree," even the most skeptical admitted that for pure entertainment, for originality of plot and delicacy of treatment, the new stories of that talented writer overshadowed the charmingly human stories that made the first series of "Stingaree" so phenomenally successful. They were delighted at what they called "the wonderfully human touches;" they praised the light touches of comedy in the quaint characteristics of the bushranger who wears a monocle and plays soulfully on the violin, and above all, they commended the thrilling dramatic action in the climax of each episode. Each picture contained, it was said, a "typical Kalem finish."

E. W. Hornung showed his skill as a master plot-weaver in the initial episode, "The Fugitive Passenger." At the conclusion of the original "Stingaree" series the character of Stingaree was left in his London home. So before Mr. Hornung could write his further adventures in the bush country of Australia it was up to him to get Stingaree back to Australia. This theme presented little inspiration for the plot of a two-reel story, but Mr. Hornung surprised the Kalem authorities by weaving it into one of the most interesting and thrilling stories of the series.

S-M COMPANY GOES TO CAMP GORDON.

Romaine Fielding, who is directing "For Liberty," the patriotic S-M Films Corporation feature founded on the exploits of the famous American Legion of Canada, is in Quebec, where, with the co-operation of the military authorities, he is making scenes requiring a large number of British soldiers. Last week the company proceeded to Camp Borden, Ontario, Canada's largest training camp, to make additional scenes, and will then return to Betzwood, Pa., where the picture will be finished on the old Lubin estate.

The Cub Comedy Company are working on a picture in which Jerry (George Ovey) drives a flivver in his sleep. "There and Back" is the title of the picture, with the accent on the getting "there."

The next Selig feature production to be made under direction of Colin Campbell will be "The City of Purple Dreams," adapted by Gilson Willets from the book of the same name. The cast will be headed by Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette and Bessie Eyton.

The Cub Comedy Company are starting work on a one reel picture entitled "Jerry's Eugenic Marriage," in which the subject of eugenics is most exhaustively treated from the humorous standpoint.

Maine League's Success Waits on Exhibitors

Newly Formed Association Will Be a Power in the Pine Tree State if Exhibitors Will Stick Together—All Are Urged to Attend Meetings.

By J. P. Flanagan, 151 Park View Ave., Bangor, Me.

BANGOR, ME.—The general opinion among the exhibitors of Maine is that if the newly organized Exhibitors' Association shows staying powers during the first year of organization—if its members manifest a tendency to stick together through thick and thin, success for that organization is as sure as the rising of the sun. Maine exhibitors have become a bit sceptical about joining associations, but once they are convinced that a real organization is here they will all flock to it. The benefits of a union to working men are no greater than are those of an exhibitors' association to moving picture managers, a fact that is now beginning to be generally realized. All exhibitors are urged to attend the meetlings of the newly formed associations and pay their initiation fee. It will be money well invested. The Moving Picture World is glad to do all in its power to aid the new association.

New Hampshire Company Gets Maine Charter.

Lewiston, Me.—A new theatrical corporation has filed papers at the Androscoggin registry of deeds, but that has nothing to do with the amusement houses in Lewiston, according to a statement made by the local management.

The appearance in the papers filed of the name of William P. Gray, of Lewiston, treasurer of the Albert Theater Corporation, as the new company is named, gave rise to the rumor that a new theater deal was on in this city.

The Albert Theater Corporation, however, does business in Berlin, N. H. Four business men of that city, William G. Dupont, Joseph A. Wagner, E. O. Gilbert and Edward A. Steady, are owners of the Albert theater building. The formation of the corporation came about as the result of an agreement among the partners, and had nothing to do with direct theater management either in Lewiston or Berlin.

To take advantage of Maine corporation laws, which are easier than those of most states, the new company was formed in this commonwealth. In compliance with the law the clerk must be a resident of Maine, and Mr. Gray, of Lewiston, already interested in the theater business in Berlin, fills this position. This explains the filing of the papers at the Androscoggin county registry of deeds. Mr. Gray holds no stock in the Albert Theater Corporation.

The corporatoion is capitalized at $50,000 common stock. The par value of the shares is $100 and the stockholders are the four owners of the Albert theater mentioned.

Each holds 100 shares. The stock in the treasury amounts to $6,000. As to the building of another theater in Lewiston or Auburn, to compete with the present consolidation there seems to be little foundation to the rumor.

No Riverside Park This Summer.

Bangor, Me.—Announcement has just been made by the Bangor Railway & Electric Co. that Riverside Park will not open this summer. The reasons are not given, but it is understood that the park has not been extremely profitable for the electric railway company, and as a war economy measure it has been decided not to open it this summer. In the past few years moving pictures have been shown there Sunday evenings and vaudeville and musical comedies on week days.

Manager Bogrett of the Bijou theater has not decided whether or not the Bijou will remain open this summer.

Two Friends of Paramount Declare Themselves.

Livermore Falls, Me.—In talking to the World correspondent Fred Mason, manager of the Dreamland theater, said: "Paramount pictures saved my life last winter. I don't see how I could have made a cent without them. At least they were by far the best money makers I had and I can't say too much for them.

Paul P. Peakes, Milo, manager of the Chic theater, who was standing by, joined in the conversation and added his praise to that of Mr. Mason, declaring that Paramount pictures always drew the crowds to his house.

S. Schultz Pleased With Maine.

Bangor, Me.—S. Schultz, representative of Bluebird and Metro in Maine, now has headquarters at the Colonial hotel, Union street, Bangor. He reports that Maine exhibitors are using him fine.

Lee Ferguson Stands Ready.

Presque Isle, Me.—Lee Ferguson, proprietor of the Golden Horseshoe theater, is one of Maine's youthful exhibitors—in fact he had to go before the registrars on June 5 and sign his name to one of Uncle Sam's military cards. If the lightning should strike him he may be in the trenches a year from now. Until that time he's attending to business in helping to keep the people of Presque Isle entertained.

Boston News Letter.

From J. J. Phillips, Photoplay Editor, Boston Journal.

Harry Campbell Will Be Goldwyn Manager.

BOSTON, MASS.—Harry Campbell has resigned as the manager of the Boston Fox Film exchange and will assume the managership of the Goldwyn Boston office about the 1st of July. William Shapiro, who has been in the employ of the Fox company in Boston for the past eighteen months, acting in the capacity of assistant manager to Mr. Campbell, has been appointed manager of this office.

Mr. Campbell's acceptance of the management of the Goldwyn exchange in this territory came as a surprise to his friends in the film game here. He has been connected with the Fox people for the past two years. He made his first appearance in the film business about ten years ago at Lexington park, where he conducted a shooting gallery, slot machine and picture novelties, shortly after he became manager of the Star theater, when that house first opened on Scollay square, Boston. He managed this house for the next three years and it did a tremendous success under his guidance. Mr. Campbell next managed the Princess theater in Marlboro, Mass., and now controls the sole interest in that house.

Coincident with his ownership of the Princess he accepted a position of assistant manager of the Universal Film Co., working with Harry Asher, the present manager of the Famous Players Company of New England, who was at that time head of the Universal. In company with Samuel Grant, former secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and now operating the Peerless exchange on Pleasant street, Boston, opened a feature exchange in the Gaiety building, Boston, where burlesque shows are now run. Mr. Campbell was the first man to open an exchange in "Filmland City," as this section of Boston is familiarly called, and his exchange was located at 208 Pleasant street. This new exchange was called the Warner Brothers' film exchange. Mr. Campbell was with this company up to two years ago, when he joined the Fox forces and took charge of the Boston office of the Fox Film Corporation.

During the past ten years Mr. Campbell and Mr. Grant were in business together and they jointly controlled the Olympia theater in Cambridge, Mass.; Dreamland theater, Lynn, Mass.; Plaza theater, Salem, Mass.; Princess theater, Marlboro, Mass.; also picture houses in Bellows Falls, Vt., and Keene, N. H.

Much of the success of the Fox exchange in New England has been due to the efforts of Harry Campbell in the past two years and he has won many friends among the exhibitors in New England. Mr. William Shapiro, who succeeds Mr. Campbell, has been with the Fox company at the Boston office for the past eighteen months, and recently was made assistant manager by Mr. Campbell. Prior to that time his film experience had been in the exhibitors' field, having managed the Shawmut theater, in Roxbury, Mass., also on the road for the Fox company as traveling representative in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, where he achieved tremendous success.

"Womanhood" Doing Well in New England.

Boston, Mass.—L. H. Watrous, the New England manager of the Vitagraph, reports heavy bookings on "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." In Boston it has been shown at the Park theater and the Gordon houses, where it met with great success. For the first time in the history of Boston an advertising billboard was placed on Boston Common. This sign was an eight sheet advertising "Womanhood" and was placed in a conspicuous place near the recruiting booths and attracted considerable attention.

All One Week's Receipts Went Into Bonds.

Boston, Mass.—The motion picture and vaudeville theaters of Boston demonstrated good sense last week by turning over their entire week's receipts to the purchase of Liberty Bonds. This fact is announced by lobby displays of a patriotic nature and a beautiful float drawn by four horses that draw it through the streets of Boston. Seated on the moving platform were soldiers and sailors of the different branches of the service, and in the center seated on a throng was a beautiful girl representing Columbia. On each side of the float was a sign bearing the following legend: "The moving picture and vaudeville theaters will devote their entire week's receipts to the purchase of Liberty Bonds. Buy a Liberty Bond to-day." Every house in Boston ran slides urging its patrons either to enlist or purchase Liberty Bonds. In some theaters a speaker addressed audiences on the subject of the Liberty Bond. The Loew theaters granted free admissions to those who have purchased Liberty Bonds on the showing of the bond at the box office.

Sam Grant Boosts Chicago Convention.

Boston, Mass.—Sam Grant, the manager of the Peerless Film Corporation, one of the busiest boosters of the "Boosters Boosting Boston" association, is urging his friends and business associates to hie themselves to the Seventh National Convention and Exposition of the Motion Picture League of America, in Chicago, where it is expected that the Boston contingent will be able to bear pressure enough to bring this convention to Boston next.

NOTES FROM NEWARK, N. J.

By Jacob J. Kalter.

Louis D. Lyon, of "Civilization."

Newark, N. J.—Herewith is reproduced a likeness of Louis D. Lyon, who, as announced in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World, has assumed the managerial reins of the Civilization Film Corporation, Strand theater building, 118 Market street. This exchange ranks to-day as the biggest and busiest film exchange in the city and it is no easy task that confronts Mr. Lyon in managing it. Mr Lyon has advanced rapidly during the short while that he has been a member of Newark's film circles, but his rise has not been without the expenditure of much effort and meritorious work. Mr. Lyon entered the game via the exhibiting end, but forsook that branch after several months to enter the exchange field with the Newark branch of Pathe. He then joined the Mutual Film Ex hange as assistant to Lynn S. Card, and when the latter became manager of the Civilization, he took Mr. Lyon with him. Mr. Lyon now supercedes Mr. Card, who has started on a tour of the continent in behalf of the Frank Hall Productions, Inc.

Hearing on Proposed Pennsylvania State Tax

Film Men Protest at Levy of One Cent a Foot Tax on Film—Arguments by M. J. Speiser Before Sub-committee at Philadelphia—Producers to Show Books.

By F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., W. Phila., Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Contending that the proposed State tax of one cent a foot upon moving picture films was confiscatory and would result in driving many producers out of business, Maurice J. Speiser arranged, on June 12, for a hearing of the film interests before a sub-committee of the Legislature House Judiciary Committee at City Hall, in Philadelphia. The proposed tax is embodied in a bill introduced by Representative Beyer. Mr. Speiser, who argued the case for Harry Irwin Miller, of Pittsburgh, counsel for the F. I. L. M. Club, of Philadelphia, asserted that the four taxes already imposed upon film men ought to be sufficient for the state; that the moving pictures had passed beyond the mere purpose of giving pleasure, and were part of a general scheme of education and of the dissemination of news, like schools and the newspapers, and, like them, ought to be exempt from special tax.

"The movies differ from periodicals in that they give fact, not opinion. It should be against public policy to over-tax them. The amount necessary to stage one picture is frequently more than would set up a large industrial establishment, and there is no certainty that the producer will get back his original investment, let alone make a profit.

"A producing plant is costly. In addition, the theaters must pay a municipal license tax, a State tax, a mercantile tax and a censorship fee; the latter, however, is a trifle. But they may also be compelled to pay a corporation tax, with the possibility of an excess tax should such a thing as excess profits be possible. And their individual owners, like every one else, may be subject to the normal income tax."

Mr. Speiser, in reply to inquires of Mr. Beyer, pointed out that if the tax of one cent per foot were placed on every reel it would have to be paid over again every month or so, the life of the average reel ranging from twenty-five to forty-five days. He spoke of one company which released 132 reels a week, which, upon an average of 1,000 feet to the reel, would impose an initial tax of $1,330, which would have to be renewed once a month upon all reels continuing in service. The producers, including representatives of the Paramount, Metro, Stanley Booking Corporation, National Motion Picture Industry, and other interests, declared they were willing to submit to an examination of their books to show that their actual profits were far less than the "millions" commonly attributed to them.

Wedding Bells Around Pathe Office.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. W. Pierce, assistant manager of Pathe exchange, was married on the 28th of May to Mrs. M. F. Jordan, formerly of Scranton, Pa., who is well known in the society circles of that town. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, after spending their honeymoon in New York last week, have returned here, and will reside at 2033 N. 13th St. L. Berman, salesman of Pathe, who was married a short time ago to a girl from Washington, has been transferred from his up-state territory to the local office. He is now covering the local district in a brand new Pullman car. B. Stober, cashier of Pathe, making up the third happy pair of newly weds of the local Pathe exchange. A total of 36 Liberty Bonds have been purchased by the Pathe employees. Manager Osborne has arranged the payments so as to come within the reach of all.

G. W. Higgins to Rebuild Burned Theater.

Shamokin, Pa.—The new Majestic theater, owned by G. W. Higgins, was reduced to ashes by a fire Saturday, June 9. Undaunted by the loss, Mr. Higgins immediately leased the Family theater and continued business without losing a day. It is reported that in so doing, he has maintained all of his film contracts without any loss to the exchanges. Mr. Higgins has at present under construction a new theater which will represent an investment of $100,000 when completed. It will be a thoroughly modern house and contain all of the very latest of equipments, including a $15,000 organ. Another theater which is being built here by the Chamberlain Amusement Co. will be located alongside of the Higgins house, and is also expected to come up to the mark for modern theater construction.

District of Columbia Taxes Keep Coming Due

Blanks on Intangible Property Must Now Be Filled Out—Three-Tenths of One Per Cent. Levied for Expense of District Government.

By Clarence L. Lenz, 622 Riggs Bldg, Washington, D. C.

ASHINGTON, D. C.—Local moving picture men are wondering just when they will escape the assessment of new taxes for they are beginning to believe that they cannot turn around without meeting up with something they had not heretofore thought of. The latest style in taxes is what is known as levies on intangible personal property in the District of Columbia. That means if you are an exhibitor and at some time in the dim, dim past you have made a few dollars which now repose in the bank or are tied up in nice green and gold stock certificates, you will be asked to pay a new contribution to the support of the District Government.

Blanks for listing this class of property will be ready for distribution late this month and all individuals must make their returns not later than August 1. These taxes are due next May, and the penalty for nonpayment at that time is one per cent. to be added on June 1, and one per cent. additional each month thereafter until payment is made.

The law provides that every person, firm, association or corporation, resident or engaged in business in the District of Columbia, owning money and credits including moneys loaned and invested, taxable bonds and stocks must make returns in July. The savings of individuals in a sum not in excess of $500 deposited in any banking institution, subject to notice of withdrawal and not subject to check, is exempt. The tax is three-tenths of one per cent.

Loew's Columbia Gave a Liberty Bond Compliment.

Washington, D. C.—Every man, woman, and child who bought a Liberty bond last Monday or Tuesday, as well as all of the thirteen thousand Washingtonians who had previously made such an investment were invited to become the guests of the management of Loew's Columbia theater for any performance on Tuesday or Wednesday. This announcement was made by Lawrence Beatus, manager of the theatet, before he left for New York City to complete booking arrangements for big stars for the coming season's showing.

All these patriots had to do in order to obtain admission to the Columbia was to show a Liberty Bond badge. This same plan was followed in each of Mr. Loew's eighty theaters and there were many who took advantage of this invitation. In Washington the theater men have been very helpful to the Government loaning their theaters to various speakers who traveled all over the city boosting bonds.

Not So Much Danger of Plague This Summer

Medical Men Look for No Marked Recrudescence of Infantile Paralysis This Summer—Can Handle It Better.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Exhibitors in this and other sections of New York State were hit hard financially a year ago on account of poor business resulting from infantile paralysis, and they are wondering if their box office receipts will be lessened by a similar epidemic during the next three months of hot weather. In some of the towns of moving picture theaters were closed for a long time on account of the plague. Even the summer resorts, which have open air screens, saw a falling off of attendance, because many preferred to keep their families at home to escape the diseases. The exhibitors of some of the towns state that many physicians of their neighborhoods were ignorant of the proper course in either treating or preventing the peril, so that for a time all efforts to get the crowds back to the theaters proved unavailing. Hope for a marked improvement in the suppression of the epidemic this year is based on a report received by the theatrical men that the American Medical Association has formulated improved plans for fighting an outbreak of the disease this season. This summer the period of isolation will be three weeks. Many other precautions will be taken by the physicians who have profited by their investigation of the plague a year ago.

Avon, N. Y.—W. W. Farnum, proprietor of the Park theater, Avon, N. Y., recently gave his entire receipts of an evening for Red Cross work.

Advanced Street Car Fares Will Help Neighborhood Houses.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Street care fares on city lines throughout New York State are likely to be advanced from five to six cents, and if the proposition goes through, the increase, no matter how nominal it may seem, will have a tendency, it is said, to increase patronage at the neighborhood film houses. The crowds who are accustomed to travel to the big theaters downtown will be lessened, because many, at least during the experimental stage of the advanced fares, will want to dodge every chance to put extra money into the coffers of the street car companies. Instead they will prefer to save time and expense by attending the houses nearest their homes. It is said that extra business, therefore, is in sight for the neighborhood exhibitor if he is wise enough to maintain a high standard of shows. A petition for permission to increase fares will be filed at Albany soon.

Rochester, N. Y.—The Official British War Pictures will be shown at the Temple theater, Rochester, from June 20 to 23 for the benefit of the Red Cross. Brewster, of the committee in charge of the exhibition in Rochester, wrote regarding the films has been read before 42,000 school children of that city. Boy Scouts will act as ushers.

L. A. Dehoff Will Handle "Birth."

BALTIMORE, MD.—L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, and secretary of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, has just recently received a communication from the Eugenics Film Company, appointing him their direct representative to handle the entire Maryland territory for their production entitled "Birth." Mr. DeHoff has accepted the offer and expects to make great headway with the film. He will handle all this business from his office at the New theater. He states that the Maryland Censor Board has examined the picture and has placed its stamp of approval on it with the edict that it be shown to "women only." This company has done a wise thing in selecting Mr. DeHoff to represent them in this territory, as he is widely known and very popular in film circles of this city and in Maryland. He has also had wide experience in the exchange line.

Opera House Becomes Picture Theater Under Supervision of A. J. Small—Will Show Metro, Fox and a Number of Comedies—Good Music.

By W. M. Galdish, 1263 Gerrard St., East Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The Grand opera house at London, Ont., has been reopened as a moving picture theater under the management of John R. Minhinnick and with the supervision of A. J. Small. The house has been redecorated and refurnished, one of the new accessories being a gold fibre screen. A brand new ventilation system has been installed to make the place attractive during the hot months.

Contracts have been made for Metro and Fox features, and a number of comedies, including Chaplins, Linders and Lonesome Lukes.

A large orchestra, directed by Maurice Poure, has been engaged for the Grand.

The house was dark for one week, during which time revolutionary changes were made in its interior appearance.

Regent Theater Appoints a Treasurer.

Toronto, Ont.—The Regent theater, Toronto, must be making money, because Manager Roberts announces that he has secured Mr. Mitchell, formerly assistant manager of the Toronto Strand, to take care of its all. Mr. Mitchell has become the treasurer of the Regent.

The Regent Orchestra has been increased to sixteen pieces, and the music furnished is one main reason for the big patronage which this house enjoys. Among the artists associated with the Regent orchestra, which is directed by Mr. Arthur, are Dr. Harvey Robb, a celebrated Canadian organist, and Bruce Metcalfe, a solo pianist of note.

Manager Roberts has reorganized his house staff—right down to the doorman.

St. Denis Theater Bid In.

Montreal, Que.—The handsome St. Denis theater, Montreal, credited with being the largest theater of any kind in the Dominion, has been sold by auction to A. G. Tanner, said to have been representing a syndicate of preferred shareholders of the former controlling company. The price paid was $201,200, or just $1,200 more than the minimum bid decided upon by the liquidators. In addition to this purchase sum the new holders were required to pay a privileged claim of $12,000 on the great organ, a liquidator's fee of four per cent. on the purchase price, the Government auction fee, and $500 commission to the auctioneer, M. P. Hicks.

The bidders for the property included A. E. Westover, Mr. James E. Curren, E. Reil and A. G. Tanner, who proved to be the successful man.

Jerry Ruck Proclaimed Champion.

Toronto, Ont.—Jerry Ruck, roadman in Western Ontario for the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, has been acclaimed the "Champion Universal Salesman," as a result of his showing in a sales contest in the United States and Canada for the Universal Screen Magazine. Word his come from the Universal headquarters in New York that Ruck outsold all other rivals, thereby winning a handsome gold watch.

Ruck is the second Canadian to win the title, the other Canadian "champ" being none other than Clair Hague, general manager of the Canadian company.

Two Houses Now Dark.

Regal Films to Distribute Goldwyn.

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement is made that Regal Films, Limited, have become the Canadian distributors for the productions of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation of New York. An interested feature of this arrangement is that the release dates in Canada for Goldwyns will be identical with those of the United States. This is something quite unusual for the Dominion, as a great many subjects are not seen in Canada for weeks or months after they have been released in the U. S. A.

The Regal people have offices in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

Grand at Toronto an Out-and-Out Film Show.

Toronto, Ont.—The Grand opera house, Toronto, which was operated as the Klaw and Erlanger theater here all last winter, has become practically an out-and-out picture house. For more than a month the attractions at the Grand were big film dramas, including "The Whip," "The Crisis," "The Submarine Eye."

Few Picture Show Licenses This Year.

Toronto, Ont.—A falling off in the number of moving picture theaters within the Province of Ontario is noticed in the issuance of Provincial licenses by Chief Inspector R. C. Newman for 1917-1918. The date for the renewal of the annual licenses required by the Province was June 1st and on June 9 a scarce 300 theaters had complied with the regulations. One year ago the number of licensees was 428. According to Mr. Newman, there are yet a number of applications to be considered but the total of theaters within the Province will be somewhat less than one year ago, it is expected.

Very few large theaters have closed their doors but a number of store shows have gone by the board. In their place are several elaborate theaters of recent construction in the larger centers.

Atlas Films Puts Capital at $75,000.

New Cincinnati Screen League Elects

Organization Gathers All Factors Interested in Motion Pictures Into One Body—First Meeting—New Officers and Directors.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st National Bank, Cincinnati, O

CINCINNATI, O.—A plan which has been discussed in Cincinnati for some time, looking toward the gathering into one body of all factors interested in moving pictures, has been carried out in the organization of the Cincinnati Screen League. Film men, exhibitors, business men and club women got together a few days ago, meeting at the Chamber of Commerce, and formed the League.

The following officers were elected: President, W. C. Culkins, executive secretary of the Chamber of Commerce; first vice-president, Elmer G. Laurence; second vice-president, S. W. Hatch, manager of the Vitagraph exchange; third vice-president, Clarence Mack; fourth vice-president, A. G. Hettesheimer, manager of the Orpheum theater; corresponding secretary, Mrs. John Withrow; recording secretary and treasurer, H. Serkowich, secretary of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League and the Associated Film Exchanges.

Directors are: W. C. Bachmeyer, W. S. Wessling, Otto Dieckmann, Charles Weigel, I. W. McMahan and C. C. Hite, all prominent moving-picture men, and Mesdames L. C. Fillmore, Guy Mallon, Morris L. Buchwalter, James Hobart, Louis N. Stix and Chester Kern, leading club women.

At a meeting subsquent to the organization meeting Miss Rose Tapley, former moving-picture star and lecturer on pictures, addressed the League on "Better Films." The principal object of the organization is to further the improvement of moving pictures, and it will encourage good films and try to discourage others. Prominent moving-picture stars will be brought to Cincinnati under the auspices of the League as one means of stimulating public interest.

Empress Theater Changes Hands.

Cincinnati, O.—One of the biggest deals which has taken place in theatrical circles in Cincinnati for some time was the sale a short time ago of the Empress theater property, on Vine street, to the United Theaters Company of Chicago, to Charles F. Williams, Thomas J. Logan and John J. O'Dowd, all of Cincinnati. Mr. O'Dowd is well known as manager of the Havlin hotel, and will be president of the new company which will operate the theater. George Fish, manager of the Empress, is to continue in that capacity. So far no change will be made in the policy of the house, it is understood, combined programs of vaudeville and pictures being presented at popular prices. Many improvements are to be made, however, to make the theater one of the most attractive in the city.

Son of John H. Huss Dies.

Cincinnati, O.—John H. Huss, one of the most prominent figures in the exhibiting field in Cincinnati, has received the sympathy of his many friends on the unexpected death of his son, John C. Huss, a short time ago. Mr. Huss was 31 years of age.

Keith's at Dayton to Use Film Comedies This Summer.

Dayton, O.—During the summer months B. F. Keith's theater in this city will offer programs in which pictures will have a more prominent part than during the winter season, in combination with vaudeville acts. The Pathe Weekly, with Paramount comedies and other good material, will be presented regularly. Comedies have been found to be the best drawing cards for summer programs, as people are in no mood for serious subjects during the torrid months, and this will be more than ever true this summer, in the opinion of the management, on account of the desire for distraction from the gloomy background of the war.

With Big Films in Ohio.

Dayton, O.—The Columbia theater has had a highly successful engagement of the great Fox feature, "A Daughter of the Gods," featuring Annette Kellerman. The picture ran for a week at the popular house, at advanced prices, and drew full houses at every performance. A return engagement later in the summer is probable, but an extension of this engagement could not be managed on account of other bookings already made.

Athens, O.—The highest prices ever charged for a moving-picture attraction in Athens, equaling those prevailing at the best theatrical productions, were scheduled at the Athens opera house for the short engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," seen in Athens for the first time. Two evening performances and two matinees were given, with prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50, and the advance sales alone were nearly sufficient to take care of the seating capacity for all performances, in spite of these figures.

Dome Theater at Youngstown Does Its Bit.

Youngstown, O.—The management of the Dome theater has been "boosting" the Liberty Loan issue, like other theaters, by the use of slides urging purchases of the bonds; but it has also helped things along in a more substantial manner by buying a block of the issue itself. Several thousand dollars' worth of the bonds have been purchased.

Cincinnati Business and Personal Notes.

Manager Harris Hurst of the World Cincinnati exchange looks for big things from the new French picture, "A Naked Soul," of which he has secured one of the first prints, and which he will begin booking soon.

L. W. Greenstein, manager of the Standard Film Service Co. in Cincinnati, returning from a visit to Cleveland, is full of pride in Cincinnati's Associated Film Exchanges, as he says the Sixth City's film men are modeling an organization after that of Cincinnati.

The K-E-S-E Cincinnati exchange, under the able direction of Manager J. P. Gruwell, is going along fast. A particularly timely picture, "The Star Spangled Banner," produced by Edison, and based on life in the Marine Corps, is one of the latest and best at this exchange.

Phil Selznick, whose star-feature idea has been working out nicely in these parts, is in New York visiting his brother, L. J. Selznick, on business.

Find Plot to Burn Patriotic Picture

In Cleveland, Department of Justice Officers Take Action When Matches Are Found in Reels of "Womanhood"—Operator Said to Have Confessed.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—United States Department of Justice officers took action last week in Cleveland following the finding by Manager Fenberg of the Auditorium theater, Newark, Ohio, of matches between the reels of the patriotic feature, "Womanhood."

They took into custody three persons under the alien enemy act and stated they expected to get more.

The feature, a Vitagraph, with Alice Joyce the star, was run the day before in a Cleveland theater. It was then sent to the Vitagraph office and shipped to Newark, via Columbus. Manager Fenberg went to Columbus to get the reels as they were late, and while returning to Newark in an automobile, opened the box to see if the entire show was there. Then he found the matches. State Fire Marshal Fleming was notified at once and an immediate investigation resulted, the government officials taking a hand.

An operator was first arrested, then a film exchange employee. Both denied the charges placed against them. Later two other men were brought to the office of the Department of Justice officials. Both the manager of the theater in Cleveland and the Vitagraph officials were astonished to hear of the act and the readily assisted in the investigation.

Later the operator, George Hann, aged 18, made, it has been reported, a written confession to Tom Doreen, chief inspector of the state fire marshal's office, stating that he was told to burn the film because it was a patriotic picture, encouraging enlistment. He said also that the man who suggested his action was an Austrian and gave the officials the man's name. They expected to make another arrest soon.

Manager Johnson of the Vitagraph office said he was confident none of his employees had anything to do with the affair and that he is anxious to have the case sifted out. Mr. Johnson said he understood that this was only the beginning of a widespread plan to burn up or destroy patriotic pictures, and warned all other exchange managers to watch their patriotic films.

Consolidated Film Incorporates.

Cleveland, O.—The Consolidated Film Service, Cleveland, was incorporated recently for $10,000. S. A. Lustig is president and Ed. Cohn, secretary-treasurer.

Cleveland Screen Club's New Officers.

Cleveland, O.—The Cleveland Screen Club, at its monthly meeting for June, elected the following new officers to serve for the ensuing year:

President, Emery N. Downs, manager Knickerbocker theater; vice-president, Max Marcus, manager U S theater; treasurer, Thomas Colby, manager Union Film Company; executive secretary, William Friedman of the Metropolitan theater; corresponding secretary, Elmer Nuebler, assistant manager of the World Film Corporation's branch; sergeant-at-arms, Max Schachtel, manager Victor-Universal film exchange.

Cleveland's Big Poster Exchanges.

Cleveland, O.—It is surprising to many film folks who walk into a mounted poster exchange in Cleveland these days. This business has developed wonderfully until Cleveland now has two big poster exchanges, each occupying thousands of feet of floor space. Mounted paper is carried on all feature programs, serials, comedies and some specials.

to oppose the proposed flat tax on receipts of motion picture houses.

"Senator Smith has won the everlasting gratitude, not only of the motion picture theater people of the south, but of the entire United States," said Mr. Lucas. "It is due to the Senator's emphatic stand before the Senate finance committee that half the theaters in Georgia will be enabled to survive, since he persuaded the senators to strike out the proposed tax on all theaters charging less than, and up to 25 cents admission.

"Senator Smith made a brilliant speech to which he took the stand that motion pictures furnish probably the most democratic form of amusement of the day; it is the poor man's right and privilege to have access to such a form of amusement at the smallest possible price; that it would be unfair to the rank and file of people, those in moderate circumstances to increase the cost of such diversions, since they also will have other new obligations and the theater tax would quite naturally result in an increase in admission prices. It was also pointed out, said Mr. Lucas, that the proposed tax on gross receipts would mean the death of about fifty per cent. of the motion picture theaters."

Mr. Lucas went to Washington as a representative of the theater interests of Georgia. Another important factor in Georgia against the proposed tax was Jake Wells, who has been very active and influential not only in Georgia, but in Virgina, where he was made president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to fight the proposed tax.

Waiting to Find Where Camp Gates Will Be.

Atlanta, Ga.—The exact location of the government encampment sites in the Atlanta territory is a matter of much interest to showmen and moving picture exhibitors. They are compelled to wait in order to learn just how the buildings will be situated, at the many proposed encampment sites, and where the entrances will be. As soon as these matters are definitely settled by the authorities, many theaters will be built near the sites.

All the Atlanta moving picture theaters have been running slides this week in the interest of the "Liberty Bond Sales." These slides are furnished by the publicity department of the Federal Reserve Bank.

Douglas Fairbank's "In again—out again," crowded the Criterian theater, Atlanta, to standing room only the past week.

It is rumored that practically every exchangeman along Walton street film row, Atlanta, Ga., has invested heavily in Liberty Bonds, for patriotic purposes.

Charley Kessnich, Atlanta, manager of the Mutual, has returned from a trip to lower Florida.

IN DETROIT.

Temple Theater Manager Robbed.

Detroit, Mich.—Charles G. Williams, manager of the Temple theater, Detroit, was held up, robbed and attacked on Sunday evening, June 10, while entering the rear door of his theater with $2,500 in a small satchel. The thieves were in a motor car and drove away with all the money before the attack was discovered. The Temple plays U. B. O. vaudeville and pictures.

Big Picture Show for Shriners' Convention.

Detroit, Mich.—George W. Trendle, of the John H. Kunsky enterprises, is arranging a mammoth moving picture show in connection with the carnival to be given by the Detroit Shriners for charity at Navin Field on June 29. Mr. Trendle is endeavoring to secure one of the prominent screen stars for personal appearance at the carnival.

Detroit Film Trade Notes Last Week

New Iris Theater Opened—Goldwyn Distributing Office in Peter Smith Building—New Kunsky Managers—Joe Kaliska Heads Lair—Other Notes.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The New Iris theater, Joseph Campau and the Grand Boulevard, Detroit, was opened to the public on Saturday, June 9, with tremendous crowds on hand regardless of the heavy downpour of rain. D. Harold Fink is the manager. The opening attraction was "American Methods" (Fox feature). The policy of the Iris will be daily change, except on special big productions which will be shown two days. The iris seats around 1,000 people. A simplex projector is part of the mechanical equipment, the intallation being made by A. P. Lombard, Simplex engineer.

Goldwyn Offices at 404 Peter Smith Bldg.

Detroit, Mich.—A. J. Shapiro, the new Goldwyn manager for Michigan, arrived in Detroit on June 11, and announced having secured temporary offices at 404 Peter Smith building—the same quarters as were fomerly occupied by Artcraft. Mr. Shapiro has already received letters from leading exhibitors throughout the state inquiring as to the plans and policy of the Goldwyn corporation. Mr. Shapiro has leased space in the new film building, which will be ready about the first or fifteenth of September.

A. J. Shapiro.

Michigan welcomes back into the ranks Mr. Shapiro.

New Managers Appointed by Kunsky.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky, who operates a chain of theaters in Detroit, has reorganized his managerial staff, and announces the following permanent appointments: Washington, Harry W. Irons; Madison, M. Harlan Starr; Liberty, Alvin Smith; New Adams, R. G. McGaw; Alhambra, Thos. D. Moule; Strand, Dewitt C. Shook; Garden, Royale and Empress, L. H. Gardenr, manager; Columbia, M. W. Schoenherr.

Poor Business to Change Policy Often.

Detroit, Mich.—"Adopt a policy and stick to it" is the motto of Earl W. Hennessy, manager of the Regent theater, Detroit, seating over 3,000 people. Various policies since the opening of the Regent have been tried out, but convinced that the present policy of two changes weekly is the right one, Mr. Hennessy is sticking rigidly to it, and says he finds that business is expanding under it. "When you change your policy around too often people don't know when you change your program and the result is you lose business," he said. "We have acquainted people with our policy and now that they know just when the shows change they act accordingly."

Theaters Will Keep Open Through Summer.

Detroit, Mich.—Practically none of the Detroit theaters have announced that they will close for the summer. Owners and managers of theaters would prefer to stay open even if they do so at a slight loss rather than shut down completely. When the weather is cool, theater business picks up during the summer months. The downtown theaters do quite well throughout the summer on account of the large number of tourists and convention visitors who come to Detroit. As for the airdomes, there is none in existence in Detroit, experience having proven that there is no demand for them here.

S. R. Kent Head of Local General Sees Prosperity.

Detroit, Mich.—S. R. Kent, general sales manager of the General Film Co., was a recent Detroit visitor conferring with Dave Prince, local branch manager. Mr. Kent looks like a man who believes in the policy of doing things on a businesslike basis. He says prospects for the General look mighty fine and that the coming year will see the General on the map stronger than ever before.

Joe Kaliska Now Chief of Lair.

Detroit, Mich.—C. G. Kingsley, Detroit Fox manager, has been transferred from Detroit by the company, and has been succeeded by Joe Kaliska former manager for Fox in Cincinnati. The change took place June 16. Mr. Kingsley has been manager at Detroit for the past six months, although he formerly managed the Detroit office for Fox previous to the time he was transferred to Ohio. Michigan exhibitors while sorry to lose Mr. Kingsley wish him unlimited success at his new job and extend the same wish to Mr. Kaliska at Detroit.

Among Local Exchanges and Managers.

Detroit, Mich.—The following changes among the film offices took place within the past ten days:

W. A. Kent, formerly with Triangle and the Tri-State, has joined the sales staff of Metro.

J. P. Souder, formerly booker at Detroit for Vitagraph, has been appointed manager of the Grand Rapids office of Universal, succeeding Charles A. Stimson, who will look after the Universal exchange at Toledo.

Earl Shaw is now in Michigan for the Essanay.

Harry Trask, former road salesman for Artcraft, is now salesman and booking manager at the K-E-S-E exchange, Detroit.

Bobbie North, a former exhibitor at Baltimore, and for a number of years on the road for various film companies, is now salesman at the Detroit office of Pathe.

Joseph Horwitz, formerly with the Universal at New York, is doing splendid work as city salesman for the Universal in Detroit.

Gilligham to Drop Empire Lease.

Detroit, Mich.—A. J. Gilligham is going to give up the Empire theater, Detroit, one of the pioneer and best paying houses in town, located on Woodward right in the very heart of the shopping district. Mr. Gilligham's lease expires in 1918 and the increased rental is prohibitive for a moving picture theater, although Mr. Gilligham had a five-year option on the building which he did not take up. He may give up the theater before his present lease expires.

H. Weil Takes Another Port Huron House.

Port Huron, Mich.—Herb Weil, of Port Huron, now running the Bijou and Majestic, has also taken over the Maxine, giving him three moving picture theaters there. The present policies of the three theaters will be continued for the present—later there will likely be some changes. Mr. Weil was formerly in the newspaper business, but he is certainly proving himself a successful exhibitor.

Nashville Operators' Tax Held Unlawful

Local Operators Win Fight Against Yearly Tax for Licenses—Arrests Last Spring—Trying to Oust Examining Board as Useless.

J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Following the arrest of some fifty or more Nashville operators in the spring on a charge of not having secured their 1917 Operators' License, a test case was made of one of the men, and an appeal taken to the Circuit Court. Acting Judge Harry Luck last week held that this yearly license tax was altogether improper, as imposed by the city board, and ruled that it should be eliminated. Therefore, the operators are now compelled only to secure their license, for which a charge of $2.00 is made, and are not burdened with a yearly tax.

The Nashville operators are now working to have the examining board for operators removed from the city government, one of the union men recently stating to the World man that only one man on that board—the city electrician—has the slightest knowledge of an operating machine, and that the other two were not even competent to judge whether film was inflammable or not. A local manager took members of the board into his theater recently, and talked them into believing that celluloid film was not inflammable and therefore not dangerous, according to one of the operators, and for this reason they claim that an examining board of this nature is of no service to the city.

New Memphis House Nears Completion.

Memphis, Tenn.—Sam Zerilla's new theater for negroes, located on Beale street, is rapidly being put into shape, and will probably be in operation within a few days. The building is 40x146 feet, brick and tile, with concrete floors, with hot water heat, the latter feature alone costing $700, and built-up tar and gravel roof. An electric lighting system will be installed at a cost of $1,500 and the completed theater will run somewhere in the neighborhood of $18,000. A program will be used which will have a particular appeal to the colored race, and high class pictures furnished at all times.

Success of "Womanhood."

Nashville, Tenn.—Vitagraph's big production, "Womanhood," enjoyed one of the most successful runs of any picture shown in Nashville in many months. It was booked originally for three days by the Strand, but was held over for an entire week after the unprecedented start, and Manager Carson Bradford was enthusiatsic in his praise, stating that he would have gladly held the picture over for another week at the same price, but was unable to retain possession of the print for that length of time. Two of Vitagraph's representatives accompanied the picture to Nashville, and were much pleased with the reception accorded it. The price was 20 cents for any seat in the house, and a special orchestra greatly enhanced its presentation.

Throughout the projection prolonged applause burst forth from the audience, resembling and even surpassing the great show of patriotism accorded "The Birth of a Nation." Many comments were heard on all sides as to the clever and unusual method of sub-titling employed by Vitagraph, with the expression that this improved arrangement would remain in effect. Manager Bradford stated that all attendance records for a week's run had been smashed at the Strand.

Knickerbocker Has Feature Week.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager W. H. Wassman ran "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for a week, with a special matinee performance on the initial day. During the ladies' matinee not a man was allowed in the house (so Billy Arnold says, but we wonder who did the crank-grinding back up there in the dog-house) and the lady ticket sellers, ushers and door-keepers were instructed to keep everybody and everything that wore a pair of pants on the outside. This provision, of course, attracted the ladies like a duck takes to water, resulting in a crowded house. The picture ran at 25 cents.

Films at Chattanooga's Big Park.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Moving pictures will be a regular part of the season's summer program at Warner Park. This was the only place in Chattanooga last year where pictures were permitted on Sunday, owing to the active fight waged here against the opening of shows on that day, and there is every reason to believe that the same large crowds will be in attendance this year as were evident in 1916.

Krech's Liberty Theater Thrives.

Nashville, Tenn.—A visit to Manager John Krech's negro theater, The Liberty, gave every indication that this suburban house will enjoy a most prosperous summer season, which, by the way, is the first of its career. The building is well adapted to summer service, open on all sides through the means of wide exits, and supplied with ample circulation by a number of fans. Mr. Krech stated that business is even better during the hot weather than in the winter, and is still improving. As with the case of other negro houses, the patrons lean toward the serials, and the management does its part toward providing them with what they want. The forty-day old Universal service is used, and prices are 5 and 10 cents.

Glendale Shows Navy Films.

Nashville, Tenn.—Moving pictures of training life in the United States Navy were shown at Glendale Park Sunday night, and attracted one of the largest crowds ever assembled for an open-air exhibition in Nashville. These Sunday pictures will be given the remainder of the summer, and running in connection with the band concerts bid fair to become the most popular spot around the city.

Tennessee News Items.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Troop K Cavalry pictures, showing the famous cavalrymen on the Mexican border, made by the Lincoln Motion Picture Company, Los Angeles, were shown at the Bijou last Saturday night. Manager Starr recommends these films as a business-bringer for negro houses.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Carson Bradford, Strand, stated that his contemplated repairs, including the installation of a balcony, etc., would be held off until a later date. "Business is too good now," he said, "and I am afraid to break into the winning streak."

Nashville, Tenn.—The Princess held its doors closed for the patriotic parade to pass, when General Leonard Wood visited the city to look over plans for a military camp here. Mr. Sudekum was anxious that all the matinee crowd turn out in loyalty to the great leader, and no one was admitted to the house until an hour later than usual.

Birmingham Bijou to Remain Open.

Birmingham, Ala.—Manager Hugh Cordoza of Loew's Lyceum has been advised from headquarters that the house will remain open all summer. The large majority of the Southern combination vaudeville and picture houses close during the summer season, but after looking over the situation Marcus Loew has decided to keep his Birmingham house open. Manager Cordoza announces that Alice Brady will appear in person within a short time, which undoubtedly will prove a stimulus to Bijou and Lyceum followers.

Keith's house, the Bijou, will also remain open for the summer. It is estimated that 2,500 people are daily attending these two houses.

Birmingham Briefs.

The Triangle theater has changed hands, and is now under the management of Tom Abernathy, who formerly owned it. The present policy of offering only high class subjects will be maintained under the new arrangement.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" played for a solid week at the Alcazar, beginning May 21, and packed houses were in evidence at every performance.

Secretary McAdoo Sends Appeal to Leagues.

CINCINNATI, O.—One of the significant incidents of the visit to Cincinnati of W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of the Liberty Loan, was an appeal sent by him to the moving picture industry, as represented by various leading persons and concerns in it, to help forward the cause of the loan. The appeal was forwarded in the form of a telegram at the suggestion of H. Serkowich, secretary of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League and the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, and read as follows:

"To the National Picture Industry of the United States,

"Gentlemen:

"Your wonderful industry reaches millions of loyal Americans each day. May I not ask you to have placed on the moving picture screens of every theater in America the words: 'Help win the war—buy a United States Liberty Bond!'

"It will be a genuine service of patriotism. W. G. McADOO."

The telegram was sent to William A. Brady, Lee Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League of America; Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Lewis J. Selznick and others, with the request that it be transmitted to the entire industry.

Kansas Censorship Before Supreme Court

Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation Is Denied Injunction on Re-examination of "The Birth of a Nation" and Carries Case to Kansas Supreme Court.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—The new censorship law is going to get squarely before the Supreme Court of Kansas, through the refusal of the distributors of "Birth of a Nation" to stand for the recalling of the picture for review.

The report has already been made of the approval of the picture by the Kansas Board of Review, and the change of mind that came to the board when letters began to pour in from Topeka, the Capital of the State. The board practically rescinded its approval, by ordering the picture to be shown again. This action was in accordance with one section of the Kansas law. This section, however, was aimed to catch pictures that had been approved after eliminations were ordered, but which might be shown in the state without the eliminations having been made. The present effect of the order is to cause a stoppage of the order permitting the picture to be shown.

The board approved "The Birth of a Nation" on May 9. As then announced, the company distributing the picture prepared at once to test the power of the board to play fast and loose with film property. H. W. Glickauf, representing the Eliott & Sherman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, distributors, came to Kansas City and with Topeka attorneys instituted proceedings. A suit was filed in the district court asking that an injunction be granted to restrain the board of review or anybody from interfering with the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Kansas, and to restrain the board in its effort to cause a re-examination.

The film corporation is taking the position that the board has approved "The Birth of a Nation," and that the last word has therefore been that a permit has been issued which allows the company, and exhibitors, to show the picture in Kansas; that the law did not, and should not, provide for any interference with the operation of a permit when such a permit is once issued, if the conditions under which the approval was granted are complied with; that a re-examination will be putting the property again in jeopardy; and that the company had made arrangements, following the issuance of the permit, which will be seriously upset because of the delay incident to another examination, and the chance that the picture will be rejected.

Judge Fisher of the district court of Wyanandotte county, Kansas, denied the injunction. He said that the company had not yet suffered any damage, and that it would not suffer any damage by the delay, nor by the re-examination, that could be corrected by injunction. He did not pass on the validity of the law under which a re-examination can be ordered, and so did not indicate whether he considered the present case to be different from the case of an exhibitor or producer who showed a picture different in any way from the one the board approved.

Mr. Klickauf and his attorneys immediately took steps to carry the case to the Supreme Court of Kansas, on an appeal from Judge Fisher's decision.

Rules Theaters Not Liable on Account of Darkness.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Supreme Court of Missouri has officially and judicially declared that moving picture theaters are not responsible for injuries resulting to patrons because of the fact that the theaters are darkened for exhibitions.

The point was carried to the Supreme Court by the Yale Amusement Co. of Kansas City. It had been sued by Miss Rosa Peck, milliner, 60 years of age. Miss Peck was a frequent visitor at the exhibitions of the company; one day, while leaving the theater during a performance, she stumbled in the dark, and fell, dislocating her shoulder. She sued on the ground that the company had not provided a safe place for its patrons; in that the theater was too dark for them to move without danger of getting hurt. The Supreme Court said that in the very nature of things, a moving picture theater must be darkened, and that therefore people who go to see moving pictures are assuming the risks incident to such entertainments.

Prospective Theaters at Mercy of Petitions

New Orleans Has Ordinance by Which Plans for Theaters in Neighborhood Districts Can Easily Be Frustrated—Trying to Find a Remedy.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—New Orleans has a restrictive ordinance against motion picture theaters and some of the operators of the better class of houses declare it to be unjust. It operates in this manner: An exhibitor plans to erect a modern motion picture theater in a desirable location. He applies for a building permit and immediately someone objects to its location and circulates a petition begging the corporation council to forbid it. It is generally easy for any one locally known to get signatures. By the same token the exhibitor sometimes finds it hard to secure signatures even were he inclined to go begging for them. Along the more pretentious residential streets in New Orleans it has long been ordained that motion picture theaters are proscribed. The building of several pretentious suburban theaters in other streets has been held up through the process already outlined.

Recently the Sobel-Richards-Shear interests purchased a lot at a cost of about $5,500 and proceeded along the legal lines to erect a modern theater at a total cost of $25,000 exclusive of the real estate. Their enterprise was blocked, although there were other photoplay theaters in the same vicinity. Another location was secured and the same fate was visited upon the company—that, too, in the vicinity of other theaters which were constructed in the early days when not so much attention was paid to making attractive buildings and fitting them with up-to-date appliances.

Another firm has just experienced the same obstruction. It is not charged that exhibitors who are already entrenched had any hand in it; but it is noteworthy that they watched the proceedings in the commissioners' council very closely. Of course, objections to the erection of a new theater in an attractive neighborhood are based the example set by the miserable shacks passing as picture shows in the past, with their wheezy player pianos and the parasites which such buildings naturally attract. But in every case under present consideration, it has been the plan of the projector to erect a modern, pretentious theater which in no manner would detract from the surrounding property; on the other hand it would add to it. Nevertheless, the picture show is officially ostracised.

Attorneys are now at work to devise some plan by which what they assert to be an illegal—or, rather, unconstitutional—discrimination against the business of their clients may be overcome without the usual resort to lengthy and expensive court proceedure. The expense, rather than doubt as to the final outcome, is admitted to be the reason for delay in threshing the matter out to a final and permanent conclusion.

Xydias Holds to Wise Policy.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—The photoplay patrons of Hattiesburg have expressed their confidence in Manager A. J. Xydias of the Lomo theater. Manager Xydias recently purchased the interest of E. N. Hirsch in the Gem theater, and that gave him control of the entire field. Of course there were occasional rumors of dissatisfaction and a censorship of local citizens was at one time strongly advocated, but it did not develop. Manager Xydias has been giving his patrons a good show with frequent special features. Among those booked was "Civilization," which has been having a remarkably big run in this section. The film was booked with the contract that it should be given a private showing before the regular presentation in the Lomo. It was an advanced price production and the sale of tickets had been very large. The film failed to arrive on time, according to the representative of the booking office, who was there to collect, and it only arrived at night in time for the show. Manager Xydias refused to run the show until he had had the private screening, and the afternoon showing had been cancelled on this account. The agent demurred and the money was refunded to the patrons rather than take the chance of putting on a film that might not have been in the best of condition. The Lomo management lost money on advertising, but the value of the public sentiment created in his favor was sufficient to offset this loss.

Manager Stephens Made Trip North.

New Orleans, La.—Manager S. T. Stephens, of the Mutual film exchange, was called to Chicago on June 3 for a conference with the home office. He has been doing some exceptionally good work in this territory during the period of his management of the local exchange, and the home office appeared to appreciate the results which he has attained. He is the oldest exchange manager in this territory and has a wide and influential circle of friends.

T. O. Tuttle Gets Big Addition to Business.

New Orleans, La.—Manager T. O. Tuttle of the K-E-S-E exchange has been making a record in the selling of service since he took charge of the office. Unity Film Service Moves.

New Orleans, La.—Manager N. E. Savini of the Unity Film Service, which is handling Unity, United, E. & H. and Unicorn service has found it necessary to take larger quarters and has moved his office to 303 Carondelet street, New Orleans. Manager Savini will have a much more comfortable and more conveniently organized office space.

Rumor of Producing Company Coming to Terra Haute.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—Terre Haute is going to have a motion picture studio with facilities for the making of five and six-reel film features as well as one and two-reel comedies, it is claimed, along entirely new lines. At least that is what Al. Weston, a film producer and director, who was in the city last week, declared. James S. Royse, president of the Chamber of Commerce, talked with Mr. Weston regarding his plans for the studio, and, it is said, thinks very favorably of them.

Value of Indianapolis Neighborhood Not High.

Indianapolis, Ind.—That the moving picture business is a losing venture in Indianapolis, unless the owner possesses a downtown location, was the gist of statements made by the representatives of companies owning neighborhood theaters when they appeared last week before the Marion County Board of Review, which fixes the value of corporations for the purposes of taxation. The majority of the representatives told members of the board that there are too many theaters in the city, and that no one in the moving picture business was actually making money, except the high salaried actors and actresses.

Some contention arose among the five members of the board when the Circle Theater Company, which operates the Circle theater, but does not own the real estate, was appraised. Edward G. Sourbier, county treasurer and member of the board, as well as owner of two downtown theaters, held out for a valuation of $10,000. The company's representative thought the valuation should be fixed at $200. A compromise was finally reached when a majority of the board sustained a valuation of $6,500.

Downtown House Renamed the Lenwood.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Nu Sho, one of the oldest downtown motion picture houses in the city, reopened Saturday, June 9, under new management. It will hereafter be known as the Lenwood. The new management announced that it will cater especially to women and children. A large exhaust fan has been installed, giving patrons the assurance that the house will be at all times properly ventilated. The theater has been re-decorated with beautiful vines and a soft green lighting system, giving the interior a cooling effect. A large crowd attended the opening program.

Circle Theater Gives Free Sunday Shows in Army Camp.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Co-operating with the members of the Indianapolis war recreational-social service bureau, which was organized recently to provide recreation and pleasure for the student-officers and soldiers at the United States army officers reserve training camp at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, the management of the Circle theater has consented to give a program of motion pictures at the army post each Sunday night free of charge. A screen will be installed in one of the large Y. M. C. A. tents for the exhibition of the pictures. Colonel Edwin F. Glenn, commander at the camp, complimented the management of the Circle for its action in giving the pictures.

Film Shows How Officers Are Trained.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A special film showing the daily routine of the 6,000 prospective officers from the states of Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia at the reserve training camp at Ft. Benjamin Harrison attracted capacity crowds at the Oriental theater, 1410 East Washington street, several nights last week. A film depicting the New Albany and Richmond cyclone horrors drew similar crowds at the Talbott theater, Talbott avenue and Twenty-second street. Both are neighborhood houses.

H. T. Reynolds Goes to Chicago for Pathe.

Mishawaka, Ind.—H. T. Reynolds, manager and part owner of the Temple theater here, has disposed of his interests and has gone to Chicago to accept a position with Pathe. Mr. Reynolds' family will continue to reside in Mishawaka until autumn, when they will move to Chicago.

New Strand at Seymour Opened.

Seymour, Ind.—The New Strand, one of the latest additions to motion picturedom of this city, was formally opened to the public last week by John S. Graf, the owner. A special program was arranged, and the house was crowded for each show. The New Strand will show only the best motion pictures obtainable, and Mr. Graf is confident of the success of his undertaking. Solos by O. H. Holder featured the opening program.

Will Build New House in Terre Haute.

Terre Haute, Ind.—The Terre Haute Theaters Company, a newly organized concern, which will erect a handsome new motion picture theater in the downtown district soon, has filed incorporation papers with the secretary of state, announcing its capital stock at $200,000. The directors of the concern are F. H. Gruneberg, O. H. Olsen and A. F. Brentlinger.

Bright Spots From the Twin City Filmland.

Marie St. Germain, Minneapolis Strand cashier, has gone to Detroit, Mich., on a month's vacation. Marie denies she is to buy a Flivver.

William A. Lochren, of the Lochren Service, is still in St. Louis, Mo., watching the boats walk up and down the river.

E. Sasse, of St. Louis, has been added to the sales force of the Lochren exchange.

John Fournier has left the Lochren exchange and gone to Boston. Mr. Fournier has "bean" there before.

Owing to the recent personal appearances of W. S. Hart at the Alhambra, St. Paul, and New Gerrick, Minneapolis, both of these theaters have enjoyed tremendious business with "Wolf Lowry."

Efforts are being made to get Mary Pickford to return East via a Northwest and Minneapolis route.

So successful was the American Maid's "Deemster" at the Lyric, Minneapolis, recently, that "Glory," featuring Juanita Hansen, Kolb and Dill, controlled by the same firm, has begun a week's run at the same theater.

Manager George Law, of the Mutual exchange, has booked Chaplin's latest, "The Immigrant," in the New Aster, Minneapolis, and New Majestic, St. Paul, for first run shortly.

Weekly Changes in Minneapolis Film Offices

Local Metro Manager Resigns—Harry Cohen, Just Wed, Will Go to Vancouver—Frank Hudson to Head General Film—A. R. Nelson Retires.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Perpetual motion, long regarded as "something what ain't," has seemingly been discovered in Mill City film circles. "In Again—Out Again" must have been the outcome of Doug Fairbanks reading this column, for Minneapolis has enjoyed its weekly change of film exchange managers again as per schedule.

E. M. Ames, for six weeks manager of the Minnesota Metro Service, has resigned his position and returned East. Mr. Ames took no chances. He just missed an extremely cold winter, and left before what is expected to be an extremely warm summer arrived. Mr. Ames' successor has not as yet been appointed. We have heard that there is a bare possibility of William K. Howard, Vitagraph manager, moving next door into Mr. Ames' rooms. Mr. Howard has refused to make a statement, fearing censorship, so the readers must remain in suspense until seven days later.

Mr. Ames' leaving was not the only commotion in the Metro camp last week, for Harry J. "Metro" Cohen, the man who is said to have invented a dill pickle compass, and who is acknowledged one of the vertebrae of the national Metro organization, has taken unto himself a wife. Mrs. Cohen was previously Miss Burke, of New York City, and we must admit that Mons. Harry has a bright star now under contract. An hour after his marriage Cohen was back at the office tearing into a pile of business mail, although we doubt that he really read much. Mr. and Mrs. Cohen will go to Vancouver, B. C., shortly, and return to New York in August.

And, here's another change. Fred S. Meyer, for some time manager of the local General exchange, and also special representative for the firm in the Northwest, has resigned his position. He will be succeeded on July 1 by Frank L. Hudson, who comes to our fair city from the General in Seattle, Wash. Mr. Meyer has given no reason for his action, and would not make a statement regarding his future plans. It is not expected that Mr. Meyer will forsake the film business, however.

Also, A. R. Nelson has sold his interests in the Independent Film Corp. here to J. E. Moor, his business partner, and temporarily retired from the film business. Mr. Moor has moved the exchange from the Produce building to room 606 Film Exchange building, where business will be conducted without delay.

Change—Breeze From the Northwest.

Film Forecast.—The Saxe Brother exchange is shortly to move into the former Artcraft offices on the sixth floor of the Film building. The Artcraft doesn't care. Neither do we. Answer next week.

Champlin, Minn.—G. M. and W. P. Heesen have become owners of the Gem theater at Champlin.

Exhibitor Gets a Workhouse Sentence.

Minneapolis, Minn.—James McClenaghan, former manager of the Regent theater, has been given a ninety day sentence in the workhouse for exhibiting the "The Garden of Knowledge," a film containing some nude figures, considered too much so by exhibitors and some fans. Mr. McClenaghan has appealed for a new trial. The Regent is now a battle ground for carpenters, and upon last observation little resembled a theatre.

Manager Joe Schwartzbein, of the Pathe exchange, and his chief of staff, C. J. "Schultz" Rose, booked "The Neglected Wife" serial in the Strand, St. Paul, and New Grand, Minneapolis, for the first Twin City run, and in the Calhoun, Minneapolis, and Park, St. Paul, for second runs.

Louisville Pleased at Prospect of Camp

One of the Big Military Training Camps Will Be Near City with Thousands of Soldiers—Means Much Business for Neighborhood.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louiville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—On Monday, June 11, there was but one topic discussed in Louisville, and wherever two exhibitors met they at once went to it. This interesting discussion concerned the announcement at Washington that Louisville had received one of the cantoments or military mobilization posts, meaning that between 30,000 and 35,000 soldiers will be quartered in the barracks to be erected here. These troops will be from Kentucky and Indiana, and in addition to this large number of men a good deal of additional labor will have to be imported, hotels will be full of visitors, and business with all retail houses, supply houses, etc., greatly increased.

The demand for labor will be so great that better wages will probably result, and the big Government expenditures will result in general prosperity for Louisville, which has not been as prosperous during the war as many other cities, due to lack of war orders.

It is estimated that the Government will spend $6,000,000 in equipping the camp, while the city, county, street railway company and other concerns will spend a half million dollars in extending service to the encampment. In addition, the monthly payroll of the Government for men and supplies will run a million and a half a month after the camp is completed and the soldiers are housed. It understood that contracts for erecting the buildings, lumber contracts, etc., will shortly be placed, and the actual work started.

Shortly following the announcement a rumor sprang up to the effect that a large picture theater would be erected just outside of the 2,000 acre site selected for the camp. However, this is doubtful, as it might not be a good paying investment, as was demonstrated at Fort Thomas, Ky., where a theater was erected outside of the grounds, and was put out of business later when the Government put in a theater of its own inside of the lines.

Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement interests, and J. Johnson Mussellman, of the Star theater, who is also connected with the Princess and Majestic interests, are among the firm believers that the encampment will prove the biggest boost that the exhibitors have known since the industry sprang up in Louisville.

Louisville Exhibitors Helped Oversell Bonds.

Louisville, Ky.—The moving picture theaters deserve a goodly portion of the credit in connection with the rapid and excellent sale of the Liberty Loan Bonds in Louisville. The city's apportionment of the bonds was $5,000,000. However, within two days after the sales campaign was placed in active operation it was found that the allotment had been oversold by $2,324,305, and the sale came to a sudden close. During the campaign, and for several days prior to that time, the exhibitors ran slides in their theaters, and arranged for speakers to appear between performances and talk on the subject. By the time the campaign was started the public was on edge for it.

C. A. Hedrick to Manage Queen Theater.

Owensboro, Ky.—George Bleich, manager of the Empress, Queen and Grand theaters, recently closed negotiations with C. A. Hedrick, of Evansville, Ind., to come to Owensboro to manage the Queen theater. Mr. Hedrick has been in charge of the Savoy, of Evansville, and has made a good record. For some time past Mr. Bleich has had more than he could do in looking after the three houses.

New Association in Northern California

United Motion Picture Industries Formed—Exchange Men and Exhibitors Will Equally Divide the Directorate—Officers Chosen.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Following a series of meetings of representative exhibitors and film exchange managers a new trade organization to be known as the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California has been formed and articles of incorporation will be filed at an early date. The purposes of the new body are to promote the best interests of the industry, harmonize its various branches and combat adverse legislation. It is specifically set forth in its by-laws that it will have nothing to do with differences between exhibitors and film exchanges in regard to policies or matters of a trivial nature.

On June 8 thirty of the leading exhibitors and film exchange men of this city met at Tait's cafe during the luncheon hour and pased upon the articles of incorporation and the by-laws prepared by their attorney. It was planned to elect officers at this meeting, but the Liberty Loan matter was brought to the attention of those present by Eugene H. Roth, of the Portola theater, and the discussion on the ways and means of assisting in floating the big bond issue consumed most of the available time. Jesse Steinhart, a local financial man, spoke for a few minutes on the question and made it plain that the needed money must be forthcoming and that it was either a case of subscribing to the loan or of having high taxes imposed. J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theater, suggested that exhibitors who have cash bonds up on their leases might arrange to convert these into Liberty Loan bonds, which would be acceptable as cash.

The directors of the new organization of film men are Eugene H. Roth, of the Portola theater; Howard J. Sheehan, of the Rialto theater; E. B. Johnson, of the Turner & Dahnken circuit; Herman Wobber, of the Progressive Motion Picture company; Louis Reichert, manager of the local Metro branch, and W. O. Edmonds, manager of the Pacific Coast branches of the K-E-S-E. The directorate will be equally divided at all times between exhibiting and distributing interests.

Theaters Boost for Liberty Loan.

San Francisco, Cal.—The managers of local moving picture houses are doing everything in their power to assist in making the Liberty Loan a success and are giving the matter much publicity through the medium of slides, lobby displays and talks from the stage. A committee of moving picture men has been named to aid in the campaign and not only will exhibitors and film exchange interests be urged to make purchases of bonds, but efforts will be made to stimulate the purchase of these by the theatergoing public. This committee consists of Eugene H. Roth, chairman; Melville Marx, H. J. Gosliner, C. W. Duncan, A. B. Cleveland, C. N. White and Louis Reichert. Country theaters are following the lead of the big city houses and in many places are being made the publicity center for the bonds. The Theater Visalia, of Visalia, Cal., recently gave away a fifty dollar bond at one of its performances and permitted patriotic citizens to speak from the stage in favor of the issue.

Ralph Clark New Head of McClure Branch.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. O. Child, who has had charge of the local branch of McClure Pictures since the first releases were made by this concern, has retired to look after farming interests and has been succeeded by Ralph Clark, formerly manager of the Los Angeles branch. Mr. Clark is well known here, having been with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit and the World Film Corporation for a long time. He has been succeeded at Los Angeles by R. E. Stebbins, formerly manager of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco.

Makes First Visit to Nevada.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. O. Edmonds, manager of the Pacific Coast interests of the K-E-S-E, recently made his first trip through the Nevada territory and did a fine business, the managers of houses there receiving him with open arms. He found exhibitors securing high prices, 25 cents being the lowest admission price in some places, these rates being necessary on account of the sparseness of the population. The most noted of the mining camps were visited, including some new ones where moving pictures are just being introduced.

Nat A. Magner Visits New York.

San Francisco, Cal.—Nat A. Magner, of the company bearing his name, is making a business trip to New York and upon his return will have an announcement of more than ordinary interest to make.

Pathe Exchange News.

San Francisco, Cal.—Richard Robertson, for some time with the local Pathe Exchange, has resigned to become manager of the new Goldwyn exchange at Kansas City.

S. H. Beardslee, who enjoys the distinction of being the biggest man physically in the film exchange business, has joined the local Pathe staff and will cover the California territory north of this city.

The official British war pictures being handled by the Pathe exchange have been booked for presentation at the Tivoli theater.

"Spoilers" Booked Again at Portola Theater.

San Francisco, Cal.—The marked success that has been attained in the return engagement of "The Barrier" at the Portola theater has induced Manager Eugene H. Roth to book the other great picture from a Rex Beach book, "The Spoilers," for an early presentation. This will make the fifth engagement of this production at this house.

Motiograph Demonstrator Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. L. Loudy, special traveling demonstrator for the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, is here making his headquarters with Edward H. Kemp and will remain for some time. He has just received the silver medal awarded him by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition for his work in connection with moving picture projection at the San Francisco fair.

Fox Happenings.

San Francisco, Cal.—George Walsh, the William Fox star, was here recently and visited the local exchange, having come in company with Doris Pawn, Ralph Lewis, Director Powell, and fifteen other members of his company. The party has since left by boat for Los Angeles and pictures will be taken on the way down the coast.

The employes of this exchange have all made purchases of Liberty bonds, $600 having been subscribed in a few minutes following a visit of a soliciting committee.

William Hart Ends Tour.

San Francisco, Cal.—William S Hart, the Triangle star, brought his country wide tour to an end this week when he appeared at the Portola theater in person, leaving later for Los Angeles to resume his work before the camera. He made a brief talk at this house on his experiences and his recent tour of the country. Dorothy Dalton, Triangle-Ince star, also visited this city recently en route home from a vacation spent in the East.

Turner & Dahnken Notes.

San Francisco, Cal.—Fred Dahnken Jr., president of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, has returned home from an extended Eastern trip, well satisfied with the launching of the First Exhibitors' Circuit.

Construction work is being rushed on the office building being erected for this concern on Golden Gate avenue and pending its completion quarters are being occupied on the second floor at 942 Market street, a change having just been made from the fourth floor on account of remodeling operations.

A number of improvements are being made at the Berkeley house of this circuit, including the installation of a Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones Unit organ, a tea and rest room and new decorations.

M. A. Miller, of the Hanford House, has gone to Reno, Nev. to take charge during the absence of A. E. Northey, and J. R. Wilson of Richmond is in charge at Hanford.

Seattle News Letter

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

Goldwyn Seattle Office to Be Opened by C. F. Hill.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The Seattle Goldwyn office will be opened by the middle of June by C. F. Hill, as manager. Mr. Hill, now manager of the local Triangle office, is not a stranger to WORLD readers, his swift rise from Paramount salesman to his present position in less than a year and a half, has already been chronicled in the these columns. He will establish Goldwyn headquarters in some temporary location until the exchange building soon to be erected at the corner of Third avenue and Virginia street is completed.

To help him celebrate his advance in filmdom his daughter, Mrs. Rice Simpson and her young son, have come to Seattle from Kansas City to spend a few weeks.

Coliseum Claims Greatest Success With "Joan, the Woman."

Seattle, Wash.—Manager E. D. Tate, of the Coliseum theater, puts forward the claim that his showing of "Joan, the Woman" during the week of May 20, was the most successful that the Farrar film had had in any theater in the country up that date. The decoration in the great arch above the marquee was most effective and attracted attention from several blocks distance. The figures of Joan and her warriors stood out striking against a background of rainbow colors arranged in fan shape after the effect of the aurora borealis.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

IN PORTLAND, ORE.

New Entrance for the Strand.

Portland, Ore.—The Strand Theater, Portland's big combination picture and vaudeville theater, will finally have an entrance on Washington street. It will be at the location of the old Bohemian restaurant, recently moved, and will extend through the Columbia building for some distance. This will give an entrance to the big showhouse from three streets.

W. A. Crank, road man for Metro, has been ill for some time and is in Portland recuperating.

Former Showman Is Mayor of Portland

Local Film Fraternity Rejoices at Election to Mayoralty Seat of George L. Baker, Former Theater Owner—Record of Censorship Shows Fairmindedness.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—A new era promises to begin in the moving picture industry in Portland on July 1. On that date George L. Baker, ex-showman, becomes mayor of Portland by election, replacing H. R. Albee, whose term of office expires.

It is a matter of common sentiment among the showmen of the Pacific Northwest and in the eastern offices of film producing concerns wherever trade journals are read that the regulation of the picture industry in Portland during the regime of Mayor Albee has been mighty narrow and unduly restrictive. Local members of the film fraternity have laid the loss of the film exchanges that have one by one moved to Seattle to this unduly narrow regulation of the industry by Mayor Albee as head of the department of public safety directly exercised through the censor board acting under Portland's now notorious no-appeal censor ordinance. It will be remembered that a year ago Mayor Albee turned a deaf ear to 30,000 petitioners who supported the exhibitors in their plea for an amendment to this ordinance whereby an appeal to the courts could be had.

Mayor Albee was not a candidate for re-election, but Will Warren, his secretary and right-hand bower, who sought to become mayor this time on the indigo platform, was overwhelmingly defeated.

When interviewed by the World correspondent on his views on the photoplay industry in Portland, Mr. Baker said:

"As Mayor of the city of Portland I will apply to all of the city's industries, the motion picture industry included, those policies of fairness and equity that I have followed during my term of office as city commissioner. Portland exhibitors know what those policies are by my stand on censorship and other vital issues that have time and again come before the city council and upon which my vote is a matter of public record.

"Those in Portland who have invested the several million dollars that comprises the valuation of the Rose City's photoplay houses and exchange facilities need have no fear of unfair treatment during my administration as mayor. At the same time I shall do my utmost to protect the public and the conscientious exhibitor against the unscrupulous showman who fails to respect the laws of decency and propriety in the conduct of his entertainment. I will make every effort to encourage industry and I hope to see Portland again the film distributing center of the territory which our showmen claim it should be by reason of its central location."

New Liberty Being Remodeled.

Portland, Ore.—The Liberty Theater, the new Jensen and Von Herberg house, is undergoing most extensive alterations which, when completed, will make it difficult to recognize the big show house as the former Orpheum, Empress, T & D, or James' Broadway. Jensen and Von Herberg are spending $38,500 for general alterations and $50,000 in addition for an organ, which will make their Portland Liberty the grandest of their chain of splendid theaters in the Pacific Northwest.

An incline set with French mirror windows is being built to the balcony, the spacious mezzanine is being walled in for ladies' rooms, Italian garden sets, replete with fountains and myriads of lights are being built on each side of the proscenium, comfortable loges are being arranged across the middle of the theater, the lobby is being entirely changed over and at this writing the Liberty can hardly be recognized as a theater at all. It is scheduled to open in about 60 days

The Liberty will be operated by the Liberty Theater Corporation, a Jensen and Von Herberg company, and E. J. Myrick, now manager at the Columbia, is the secretary and managing director of the new corporation.

Stars Have Great Drawing Power.

Portland, Ore.—The business results from the personal visits of photoplay stars is evidenced by the attendance at the Sunset theater for Triangle's "The Weaker Sex," featuring Miss Dorothy Dalton, the week after Miss Dalton's appearance in person at the Grand Ball that concluded the Oregon exhibitors' convention. Frank A. Dacey, manager of the Sunset, reports S. R. O. business during the entire run of the picture.

William S. Hart appeared in person at the Columbia June 6 and of course the crowd couldn't be accommodated at all. The exhibitors' league planned some entertainment for Mr. Hart which he could not accept by reason of his cramped itinerary.

Boosting Liberty Bonds.

Portland, Ore.—Sol Baum, manager for Bluebirds in the Pacific Northwest, reports that Universal employees in Portland, Seattle and Spokane are rapidly responding to their country's call and are buying Liberty bonds along the general plan outlined by Universal for its employees all over the country.

The Exhibitors League has responded to the call of J. C. Ainsworth, president of the United States National Bank, for Liberty bond slides on the screens.

Vancouver Orpheum Lottery Is for Soldiers

"Con" Jones, a Local Character, Takes Theater and Will Hand Over All the Profits to Returned Soldiers' Club—Prizes for Lucky Tickets.

By C. S. Thomson, 641 Burrard St., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B C.—Quite a flutter of surprise has been occasioned in theatrical circles in Vancouver over the fact that "Con" Jones, of cigar stand, pool room and bowling alley fame, has decided to add to his other activities by becoming a motion picture exhibitor. The surprise is really unnecessary, for versatile hustlers like Con are liable to do anything. The unusual feature of the proceeding, however, is the fact that Mr. Jones is going to hand over all the profits to the Returned Soldiers' Club, and a committee appointed by Mayor McBeath will supervise the financial arrangements of the project. As a special inducement to the public, prizes to the extent of two hundred and fifty dollars will be awarded every week to the holders of certain lucky numbers. Mr. Jones has taken the Orpheum theater, which has the largest seating capacity in the city, and hopes by means of his prizes to draw record crowds throughout the summer months, that is provided the regular exhibitors do not retaliate by offering similar inducements.

As was only natural, Mr. Jones had to face certain objections when arranging his project, but he smilingly waved them all aside. Anyone who has been within a hundred miles of Vancouver must be familiar with certain hoarding bearing a picture of a man giving another man a severe push in the face, and having underneath the words, "Don't argue! Con Jones sells good tobacco!" When it was suggested to Con that his incursions into the motion picture business, and particularly his lottery stunt, might be considered somewhat unfair to legitimate exhibitors, he merely gave the objectors, figuratively speaking, a push in the face and said, "Don't argue, Con Jones is going to run the Orpheum!" He started operations on Monday. So far business has been all that Mr. Jones could most confidently expect, and shows beyond a doubt that whether his prize giving be right or wrong, it certainly draws the crowds.

Dominion Film Agreement Still Unsigned.

Burnaby, B. C.—Although the citizens of Burnaby have by their votes decided in favor of an agreement with the Dominion Film Corporation, the document in question is still unsigned. A council meeting was held on Monday, June 4, in reference to the agreement, but there seemed to be certain technical difficulties in connection with trustees fees and other items of expense, in regard to which a definite understanding seemed very hard to get at. The bone of contention was whether these expenses should be borne by the municipality or the film corporation. Both sides of the question had vigorous champions, and for a whole evening the fight raged fast and furious.

After three hours of verbal fireworks and oratorical fisticuffs, the issue was still undecided, and the tired and perspiring councillors decided to call it a drawn battle. Realizing, however, that some decision must be arrived at, a special meeting was called for Thursday, June 14, when it is hoped that the difficulties between the Council and the Film Corporation will be disposed of to the satisfaction of all concerned. The promoters of the new company are very anxious to get to work as soon as possible, so that operations on pictures can commence before the fine summer weather has gone.

Mary O'Brien and her daughter, Kate, live on a selector's homestead in the bush country of Australia. Kate has fallen in love with Jack Connors, a worthless scamp. Stingaree, the gentleman bushranger, and his partner, Howie, stop at the O'Brien cabin. Stingaree finds a photograph of Jack, which he recognizes as a picture of a former gamekeeper on his father's estate in England, a man who had fled the country after the murder of a fellow gamekeeper. He determines to save Kate from the man. But failing to disillusion the girl, he learns that she is going to leave with Connors on the afternoon stage.

Stingaree and Howie learn of an opportunity to hold up the stage, carrying a shipment of gold. Stingaree refuses to go after the gold, as he must save Kate from Connors. Howie becomes enraged at this, and, riding to town, drowns his woes in a grog shop, and returns to Stingaree the worse for too much liquor. When Stingaree shoots to pieces the bottle of whiskey which Howie carries Howie becomes wild and again rides off, this time to set the troopers on Stingaree's track.

Howie, however, becomes remorseful when he returns with the troopers, and finally refuses flatly to go any further. He is placed under arrest, but, by means of a trick, succeeds in escaping from the one trooper left to guard him and, appropriating this trooper's clothes, sets out to find Stingaree and warn him of his danger. When Stingaree, hiding in a tree, sees Howie approaching in a trooper's uniform, he does not recognize him, and a battle ensues until the old friends find that they are fighting together.

A whole-hearted profession of contrition on the part of Howie follows, and the bushrangers forget their quarrel. Howie reminds Stingaree of his determination to save Kate from Jack Connors. They see the troopers approaching in quest of them, and, waylaying two of them, Stingaree appropriates the uniform of one of them. Then, both dressed as troopers, the two bushrangers stop the stage which is carrying Jack and Kate and place Jack under arrest "for the murder of John Bates, an English gamekeeper." Kate, whose conscience has proved just as troublesome as Howie's, now realizes her folly. Stingaree purposely allows Jack to escape, and offers to take Kate back to her home.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Nightfalls finds Kate reunited to her mother, and Stingaree and Howie riding back to their camp, well satisfied with their day's work.

Elephant Hunting.—Perhaps the most hazardous occupation is that of elephant hunting. These elephants are very ferocious when hunted in their native jungle. They must be approached head on to wind; a sudden change in air currents will give them the scent and their charge is terrific. Unless a bullet is well placed, the hunter is in a dangerous predicament. Elephants are the beasts of burden in India, and show almost human intelligence while supplanting the derrick in the government shipyards.

Historic Independence Hall.—The first Continental Congress assambled here on Sept. 5, 1774, and during most of the Revolutionary War, Philadelphia was the Congressional meeting place. This city was the seat of the U. S. Government from 1790-1800. In this historical hall was born our Independence, July 4, 1776. In this house in 1776 Betsy Ross fashioned OLD GLORY.

Famous Architecture.—Piazza del Duomo of Pisa, Italy, and famous marble Cathedral built in the 11th century, with a beautiful dome said to be one of the world's masterpices of architecture. Beaupere comes upon the love making of the young people, and makes Roger understand that he must wed the girl. Roger and Celeste disappear into the wilderness, telling no one of their marriage.

Later a son is born to them. Roger, in response to a letter from his mother, leaves for the states, planning to return soon. Beaupere is glad that Celeste is so happy, but that happiness soon turns to grief, for Roger, upon his return to the wilderness, meets death.

Beaupere writes to Roger's aristocratic mother, telling of her son's death, and also stating that he had left a wife and a fine baby boy. Urged by her family solicitor, Mrs. Lynn vows to take the child from its mother. She goes into the North and separates the mother from her infant by the aid of the law. Celeste never recovers from the loss of her baby. She pines away and dies.

Time elapses and Mrs. Lynn, on her deathbed, becomes remorseful, and tells Roger, her grandson, the story of his mother. Mrs. Lynn tells him that she cannot meet her Maker until Roger has found Celeste. Roger and his young bride go into the North in search of Celeste, his mother. They come upon Beaupere, now an old man, who sees in the boy the picture of his mother, Celeste, and he leads Roger to his mother's grave.

THE HEART OF JULES CARSON.—The cast: Jules Carson (Robyn Adair); Nan (Virginia Kirtley); Bob Stanley (Leo Pierson). Written by T. E. McAuliffe. Produced by Burton L. King.

Jules Carson and Bob Stanley both love Nan. Jules proposes to Nan, who accepts him, but her father says that young folks often change their minds, and that they should wait a year before they marry. Then it is that Jules leaves on a mining trip.

Bob Stanley does not give up hope, but continues his courting of Nan, and finally wins her love from Jules and marries her. Jules returns and vows to be revenged.

Two years later in a cabin in the hills, Bob is stricken with typhoid fever. Nan attends him, and there is no one to make the long ride to the settlement for the doctor. Jules comes upon the cabin by an accident. He enters, and tells Nan: "I will get the doctor and save his life if you swear you will leave him and come with me." In order to save the life of her husband Nan agrees.

Jules returns later with the doctor, whose prompt coming saves Bob's life. Nan is about to make the sacrifice, when Jules enters, lays a note on the table and leaves. The note reads: "I saw the kid's clothes on the table. I release you from your promise. Jules."

MONEY AND MYSTERY (Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 25).—The cast: Mary (Eileen Sedgwick); Charlie Terrill (W. E. Lawrence); Jim Dempster (George Pearce); Ben Jessen (William Dyer); Dawes (Kingsley Benedict); Marion Dempster (Martha Mattox); Agatha Dempster (Mrs. G. Hernandez). Scenario by Jack Cunningham. Produced by Henry McRae.

Mary Dempster, who has lived all her life with her two maiden aunts, comes of age, and into control of her property. She hears her aunts talking with the old man about her father, Jim Dempster, who was cast adrift by his family, and who now works in his sisters' employ as bookkeeper at the "Mary" Mine in the West. This is owned by Mary and the spinsters, and Ben Jessen has just been appointed manager. She goes to her father.

Mary is seen by Charlie Terrill, the sheriff, and by Ben Jessen as she alights from the old stage at the mine. Terrill leads her to Jim Dempster's cabin. Jessen is attracted to Mary and begins to plan. Jessen has for some time been robbing the owners of the mine, diverting carloads of ore, and having Dawes, his assistant, forge Dempster's name to the bills of lading. Dempster has been no hindrance to this work for his brain is dulled by whiskey.

Under Mary's influence her father begins soon to see that something is wrong with the books at the mine. Dawes warns Jessen, but he refuses to be alarmed. Mary and Terrill have become friends, while Jessen still tries to find favor in her eyes.

Meantime, the aunts decide to go to the mine. Emboldened by successful thefts, Jessen diverts more cars of ore, and Dempster informs him of the error. Jessen is furious. He orders Dawes to fasten suspicion on Dempster, and the assistant immediately begins by making insinuating charges against Dempster before the working men. One of the men reproaches Dawes for talking about a man behind his back. Dawes pulls a gun and fires; the man falls, and Dawes flees, followed by a number of men. Terrill arrives to find the man uninjured, but nevertheless pursues Dawes to Mary's cabin, where he has sought refuge, swearing that he is innocent. Terrill warns him to leave the town.

Jessen accuses Dempster, but agrees to keep silent if Mary will marry him. She repulses him, and he gives her a week in which to decide. At the end of that time Dempster is taken prisoner, but Terrill goes his bail. Jessen arrives at the cabin while Mary is alone. He attacks her; they struggle.

The aunts arrive and follow Terrill and Dempster to the cabin. Terrill rushes into the cabin and grabs Jessen. Jessen tries to slink from the room. Mary points out to her aunts the change in her father. Dawes, having ridden frantically to the cabin, dashes into the scene. He reveals Jessen's crime and his own duplicity, while Terrill quickly covers Jessen with his revolver. Mary introduces Terrill to her aunts. All are happy; the brother and sisters in their reconciliation, and Mary and Terrill in their love.

dreth, for he wishes to get the necklace and the check.

Banker Olmstead is at dinner with his wife and son who is employed in the bank with him. His father is anxious that the books shall be in order, as the auditor is coming to examine them. He decides to go down to the bank. Young Olmstead is in the power of the Gray Ghost, to whom he has lost at cards. He goes to him to say that the game is up, and asks for mercy. Instead of helping him, the man plans to get him further into his power.

Morn Light, a musical comedy star, whose connection with the Ghost is mysterious, arrives during their discussion. The Ghost asks her to retire, but she listens and watches. GOLD SEAL.

THE GOLDEN BULLET (Three Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 25).—The cast: Red (George Berrell); Jack (Harry Carey); Dick Henderson (Vester Pegg); Sheriff (Bill Gettinger); Mattie (Fritzi Ridgeway); "Red" Johnson (Ed. Gibson). Scenario by George Hively. Produced by Fred A. Kelsey.

Dad and Jack are working on their placer mine in the mountains when Dick Henderson calls on them one morning on his way back to Crazy Creek after a marauding expedition. Dick goes on to Crazy Creek, where he meets the sheriff and his daughter. The sheriff shows him a letter from the sheriff of the adjoining county offering a reward of $1,000 for "Rogue River" Charley, Dick's alias. Dick offers to assist the sheriff in capturing the bandit.

"Red" Johnson, a bum, is thrown out of the saloon drunk. The cowboys, to sober him up, place him on a bucking horse. The horse carries Red out of town. Dick happens along and offers to go and bring Red back. Red, in the meantime, has gained control of the horse, and, seeing his opportunity, decides to get away with it.

Dick, following Red, comes upon Jack and Dad. He tells them it isn't much wonder that they couldn't buy the horse which was offered to them by Red, as they could never make enough out of their mine to buy one. Dad resents this and shows Dick their savings of nuggets. Dick finds Red and tells him of the gold. They plan to rob Dad and Jack. That night Red and Dick rob Dad and Jack. Jack hears the noise, and is shot by Dick. The robbers escape. Jack goes to town to have his wound dressed and to find the robbers. He becomes exhausted and falls from his horse in town. The sheriff and Mattie, his daughter, find him and take him to their home. In the meantime Dick has tried to get the sheriff to arrest Jack, as he fits the description of "Rogue River" Charley. The sheriff decides to go to the other county and get the sheriff to come over and identify Jack.

Jack recovers and meets Dick, demanding the return of the nuggets. Previously, Mattie has shown him a peculiar bullet-shaped nugget, which was formerly with their savings, telling him that Dick had given it to her. Dick tries to argue with Jack, but is forced to return the nuggets. Jack notes the missing nugget and gives Dick until a certain time to return it. Dick goes to the sheriff's home, steals the nuggets from Mattie's room and leaves evidence incriminating Jack. He then schemes with Red to have Jack accused of the robbery.

Red inflames the cowboys against Jack, while Dick is telling the girl about it. Mattie discovers her loss and thinks Jack is guilty. Jack goes to his cabin. Dick and the cowboys pursue Jack to his cabin, where a fight starts. In the meantime, the two sheriffs show up at Crazy Creek, learn of the trouble and also go to the cabin, where they arrive at the right time to prevent serious trouble. Jack is exonerated, and Dick is pointed out as the real "Rogue River" Charley, and is arrested.

BUTTERFLY.

MAN AND BEAST (Five Parts—Rel. Wk. of June 25).—The cast: Carl von Haagen (Harry Clifton); Gretel von Haagen (Elleen Sedgwick); Townsend (L. M. Wells); Mrs. Townsend (Mrs. Witting); Ned Townsend (Parks Jones); Eitel von Haagen (Kingsley Benedict); The Elephant (Charlie); The Orang-Outang (Joe Martin); The Lion (Sam); The Leopard (Tom). Scenario written by Reed Heustis. Produced by Henry McRae.

Carl von Haagen permits the water in the cattle spring belonging to his enemy, Henry Townsend, to run out. Gretel, von Haagen's daughter, loves Ned, son of Townsend. Townsend learns of the dastardly trick of Von Haagen, and goes to the springs, followed by Mrs. Townsend, Gretel and Ned. A fight between the two men takes place, but it is brought to a quick end by the appearance of the big elephant. On the way home the Townsend family come upon a number of natives who tell Townsend that lions are prowling around.

Ned writes a note to Gretel, asking her to meet him at the spring. He calls Charlie, the elephant, and gives him the note. Von Haagen forbids Gretel to see the Townsends; she tells him that she has promised to marry Ned. He strikes the girl, who goes to her room. The elephant comes up to the window and feels around the room with his trunk. Gretel sees the note, and with the help of the elephant she escapes.

Eitel, brother of Gretel, returns home and asks his father what has happened. In Gretel's room he finds a note from Ned; he gets a gun and starts for the spring.

Gretel sees a lion ready to spring. The beast jumps upon Eitel, who is following his sister. Ned fires at the lion, which leaps from Eitel and makes a spring at Gretel, who climbs a tree. Ned takes Eitel's gun and fires at the lion. The lion runs, and Gretel falls from the tree. Eitel reluctantly shakes Ned's hand, after which Ned takes Gretel to his home.

Three years pass. Happiness comes to the Townsend family, but Von Haagen sits alone in his home and broods. Ned decides to go into the interior, and leaves with his wife, Gretel, and their little son, Bobby. A horseman tells Von Haagen of their departure for the Cape. Von Haagen, stunned, holds out his arms as if asking his daughter's forgiveness. He has a bag of gold for the little grandson, whom he has never seen. He tells Eitel that he will take a short cut and head them off. Gretel puts Bobby to bed in the wagon. Shortly after the axle breaks and the wagon turns over. Ned unharnesses the horse and turns back, leaving Gretel and Bobby in the wagon. Von Haagen comes up to the wagon. He and Gretel walk down the road, so their talk will not disturb Bobby. Bobby awakens and crawls into the road. Suddenly a lion leaps into the wagon and seizes a leg of pork.

Gretel forgives her father, and they return to the wagon. The lion springs from the wagon. Gretel and Von Haagen start on its trail. Bobby comes upon a monkey, which he follows into the jungle. Ned and his father arrive at the wagon with Charlie, the elephant. They call. Gretel hears them and answers. Ned leaves Gretel with his father, while he goes after the lion. Ned, finding no trace of the lion, returns to the wagon, and he and his father take Gretel home. The elephant finds Bobby and brings him home. Von Haagen, giving up his search, appears at the Townsend home, where he sees his grandson. The family comes in, and a reconciliation follows.

Unable to persuade him, Chug leaves, and Armstrong, discovering an advertisement for a bookkeeper, goes out again.

Armstrong frankly bares his past to Allison, the general manager, who informs him he has nothing for him. At this moment Mrs. Allison happens to enter her husband's office, and pleads with him to give the young man a chance. Allison is obdurate.

As he stands gazing idly about, Chug jumps from a moving limousine and, running past him, tosses a purse into his hand. A policeman is following on his trail. Armstrong gazes wonderingly at the article, then walks away.

Returning home, Armstrong is surprised to find Ruth in conversation with Mrs. Allison, but before he can explain matters, an officer enters and charges him with the theft. Mrs. Allison promises to befriend him, and through her husband's influence secures his release, also a position with Reeves & Company.

Some months elapse and Armstrong is now chief clerk in the concern. Horace Reeves, president of the company, is disturbed at learning that some one in his employ has been accepting freight rebates.

That night Allison phones Lee, the A. D. R. R. freight agent. Hurriedly departing for his office, he is soon in consultation with Lee and Chug, the expert forger, who signs Armstrong's name to a damaging letter. The following morning Armstrong is accused of the crime, and, knowing Allison to be the guilty one, decides to suffer in his stead.

Jimmie, the office boy, cleaning about Armstrong's desk, discovers some papers left by Chug and, observing Allison handing him some hush money, speedily goes to Reeves with his information. Both men are called to the office and questioned. Chug finally confesses his guilt and is taken into custody, while the president decides to give Armstrong Allison's position.

Verner writes to Gustaf Frese, in New York, who is swindling the immigrants, reminding him of his father's wish that he should marry Frieda, and stating that she will bring a good-sized dowry. Gus consults with his accomplice, Dick, and decides to have her come over and marry her, as they need a woman in their game.

Ole goes to Gus to get a job, and secures one in the small apartment hotel where Gus resides. Frieda is about to leave for America with her father, when she receives a letter from Ole. She sneaks away to read it, but is discovered by Verner, who snatches it from her. He indignantly takes it to Johannes and orders him to tell Ole to stop writing to Frieda. Johannes flies into a fit of rage, resulting in a fit of apoplexy, which later proves fatal.

In the dual role of porter and bellhop, Ole has many experiences between Liza, the old man, Sam, who has a continual jag on, and the newly weds, who want him to play butler for their party. Ole receives a letter stating that Frieda has left for America, and runs into the street searching for her and questioning the people as to whether they have seen his Frieda.

In fact, Frieda has already arrived, and Gus has engaged an apartment for her in the same house where Ole is porter, but he is not aware of the fact. She is to be married the following day to Gus. The next day Ole is informed that his father has died, and he is handed quite a lot of money which has been left him. He hastens back to the apartment. To get even, he purchases the house and chases all the tenants out. Finally bursting into the apartment where Frieda is being married to Gus, he stops the ceremony, chases them all out, and when he and Frieda are alone, renews their interrupted romance.

THE DOUBLE-TOPPED TRUNK (Rel. Wk. of June 25).—The cast: Carey Crane (Allen Holubar); Swithers (Frank Whitson); Inspector (George Pearce); Thiera (Gretchen Lederer). Scenario by George Bronson Howard and Luther Reed. Produced by Allen Holubar.

In the custom house a double-topped trunk in which are secreted several valuable gems is discovered. Carey Crane, at the head of the service, tells the inspector to leave the case to him. Later in the day Carey, dressed as a baggageman, drives up to the rear of the building. It is not long before Swithers, one of the gang, approaches Carey and directs him to get the trunk in question. He gives him an address to which they will deliver it.

Carey takes the trunk to the address designated and deposits it in the room. While Swithers' back is to him, he raises the blind, which, unknown to him, is the signal to the thugs across the street, should anything go wrong with the crooks' plans. In lifting the trunk, Carey loses one of the brass buttons from his uniform under his overalls. Swithers picks it up and confronts him with a gun. Noiselessly Carey dislodges the clock on the mantel, and it falls so that it throws the gun from Swithers' hand just as the thugs appear.

Carey grabs the gun and holds the thugs at bay. He manages to throw the clock out of the window, which arrests the attention of the policemen whom he has told to follow him. The crooks are eventually rounded up and jailed.

The Supremacy of the American Fotoplayer
Is Acknowledged by Successful Exhibitors

The supremacy of the AMERICAN FOTOPLAYER as THE musical instrument for the highest success in motion pictures is recognized by successful exhibitors in all parts of the country.

This remarkable instrument has marked the most important event in the world of music today, and is destined to revolutionize music for the pictures, both economically and artistically.

Exhibitors appreciate the importance of installing a musical instrument of the highest tonal qualities with the least expense of operation.

The FOTOPLAYER is a real instrument with that touch of velvet, the beautiful singing tone that penetrates the depths of your soul; the utmost tonal beauty is awakened by the musician, by hand or by roll, producing the touch, the thought, and feeling of the composer.

Meantime certain neighbors of Otto have become disgusted with his Wagnerian horrors and have sent a piano tuner to his house, hoping to lessen the discords that proceed from it. Otto believes the Italian tuner to be the royal messenger, the result being that he is banqueted and toasted by the Otto's and their friends until the real messenger arrives with the cash, and then the Italian is kicked into the street.

JIMMIE DALE, ALIAS THE GREY SEAL (Chapter 15, "The Tapped Wires"—Two Parts—June 29).—Jimmie Dale is watched by the Pretender's spy; he has reason to believe that the telephone wires are tapped. To allay suspicion, and give him a chance to get out unobserved, he calls the family physician. Jimmie manages to slip out. A spy heard words whispered to Jimmie, and communicates them to the Pretender. He translates them into meaning that certain papers are in an underground office maintained by a crook, and instructs the Weasel to secure them.

Jimmie is instructed by the Tocsin to secure the papers. The Weasel and the Grey Seal meet, but neither one find the papers. A struggle ensues, the Weasel gets away. Jimmie Dale leaves before the police enter. They see that the safe has been forced, and arrest the Weasel, and start after Jimmie, who reaches home safely after a wild chase. The Pretender sends Jimmie warning that his next night expedition will be his last, announcing that an oath to this effect has been taken by the gang.

THE RAIROAD RAIDERS (Chapter No. 12, "A Fight for a Franchise"—Two Parts—June 25).—The cast: Helen Holmes (Helen Holmes); Morton Webb (Thomas G. Lingham); Wallace Burke (Leo D. Maloney); Steve Arnold (Paul C. Hurst); Roy Wilson (William Brunton); Buck Masters (F. L. Hemphill); The Marshall (William Behrens); Supt. Desmond (J. P. McGowan); Homer Frost (William Buhler); Lightfingered Tom (Marvin Martin).

Helen Holmes and Roy Wilson, president of the K. & W., become suspicious of Desmond's dealings with "Boss Hogan" concerning the railroad to be run into Copper City. They go to Desmond's house, and through an open window overhear the plot to double cross them and give the franchise to the Eastern R. R. instead of the K. & W. They see the contract placed in the desk and overhear the plan to send Burke to Copper City with it for Hogan's signature the following day.

After the conference has broken up, Helen and Wilson steal into the library of Desmond's house, secure a copy of the contract, erase the name of the Eastern, and insert on Desmond's typewriter the name of the K. & W. Then they plan to change the contracts while Burke is on the way for the signature. At police headquarters they secure the services of Lightfingered Tom to make the change. On the train Tom manages to slip the contract out of Burke's pocket and insert the one he carries. Burke leaves the contract with Hogan to be called for later. When Hogan discovers the railroad has been changed to the K. & W. he phones to Desmond.

Webb answers the phone, claims to be Desmond, and says they have decided to change to the K. & W. Hogan is willing, signs the contract, and delivers it to Burke. The change is not discovered until Burke places the envelope in Desmond's hand. Helen and Wilson come into the office just then, and a fight follows for the possession of the signed paper, but Helen captures it. Burke is discharged from his position on the K. & W. and Webb reinstated.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD No. 34 (June 26).—In this issue two of the world's most interesting cities are pictured. These are Naples, the largest city of Italy, and Buenos Aires, the largest city of South America. The Bay of Naples is regarded as one of the most beautiful in the world, and being upon its shore the city is famed as occupying perhaps the most beautiful site in Europe. In the Gaumont views there are seen the streets well paved with lava blocks hewn from the sides of Vesuvius, the unruly monster smoking in the distance, the stucco-covered houses, the beautiful opera house, one of the largest in Europe, the Castle of St. Elmo, erected by Charles V in 1535, and the busy harbor. There are also pictures of Neapolitan types.

Buenos Aires, the capital of Argentina, has a million and a half inhabitants. The people call their city the "Paris of South America." The views in this section of the Gaumont reel bear out their boast. Among the beautiful spaces of the city are San Martin Square, Twenty-fifth of May Square, Congress Square, and the Third of February Park. A familiar sight to those who have visited Buenos Aires is the British clock tower and the new station of the Argentine Central Railway. Then there are also pictures of a northern corner of the port, the government house, the cathedral, dating from 1752, the national hippodrome, and a panorama of the city from the House of Congress.

REEL LIFE No. 61 (June 28).—Since tobacco plays such a large part in solacing mankind and pays such a large part of the taxes, any picture of any stage of its travels from the field to the smoker are interesting to every one. Through Mutual Gaumont will release in this number of "Reel Life" a picture called "Marketing Raw Tobacco." How the tobacco leaves are cured in barns, graded and carried to market are pictured. Then come views of the auction of the tobacco to the representatives of the manufacturers. A lot shown brought 90 cents a pound while the cameraman was grinding out the film.

A second section of this reel is devoted to "The Life of the Bee." It is particularly informative, holding the interest continuously. The life of the queen is followed, the workers and drones are pointed out, and the construction of a cell for the queen is shown. While a worker lives only three months in the summer, the queen lives from five to seven years.

"As They Looked in the Beginning" is a section comparing the first machines with the developed products of the present day. This will be followed through several issues of "Reel Life." The present one shows the first typewriter, comparing it with a modern one, a locomotive built in 1825, and a model of Fulton's "Clermont," the first steam vessel.

On the same reel are pictures of jewelry in which the brilliant wings of butterflies have been incorporated, and "Launching a Lifeboat," a subject held over from an earlier issue.

THE YELLOW UMBRELLA (A number of "Do Children Count" Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Dot Hazelton (Little Mary McAlister); Jeremiah Crozier (Julien Barton); Edward Hazelton (John Cossar); His Wife (Mabel Bardine).

It was years ago that Jeremiah Crozier and Margaret Kenly quarreled over the civil war. They never spoke to each other afterward—that is, not until little Dot Hazelton, Margaret's niece, hears the story. Straightway Dot hunts up Jeremiah, wins his friendship, and invites him to call on her. Jeremiah, not knowing Dot's real identity, but loving children, calls to play with the child. Margaret is there. With childish simplicity, Dot leads Jeremiah to Margaret and places his hand in hers. Her smile of childish love for both wipes out the old quarrel and seals their union. The marriage is celebrated by the burning of the yellow umbrella which Jeremiah has carried ever since his quarrel with Margaret, as a symbol of his hatred of all women.

KING BEE FILM CORP.

CUPID'S RIVAL (Two parts—July 1).—Billy, the janitor of the De Luxe Studio apartments, is ordered by Hyflyer, the fashionable artist, to serve breakfast immediately. Billy's wife prepares the meal and Bill departs upstairs with a tray of chicken. In the same apartments there resides Daub, a young impoverished artist. The only way that Daub can avoid eviction is by accepting a commission from Dough, the landlord, to paint the latter's picture.

Inspired by the love of his sweetheart, Ethel, Daub starts nobly on his work. However, his ambitions are shattered when he sees Ethel entering the studio of Hyflyer, his despised professional rival. Infuriated at the sight, Daub bursts into Hyflyer's studio. Here the scene he beholds destroys all of his remaining reason, for he finds Ethel tenderly stroking Hyflyer's head. Little does Daub realize that Hyflyer has been felled by Billy, who has mistaken the artist for Mike, the elevator chauffeur. Daub seizes a large life-like painting of Ethel that is standing on a nearby easel and smashes it over the head of the unlucky Hyflyer. Tearfully Ethel explained that she had posed for the painting only because that the proceeds of its sale would be utilized to defray the expenses of their coming wedding. Hyflyer bemoans the loss of his prized canvas as the date of the exhibition is only a day off.

In Daub's studio another tragedy has in the meantime occurred. Mike has seen a mouse enter under the door to Daub's studio and has followed it, armed with a club. Finding the mouse creeping along the top of the finished portrait of Dough, Mike aims a killing blow at the mouse, only to miss, and the club rips through the canvas. Horrified, Mike gazes at the result of his ill-aimed blow, when Ethel and Daub enter. Daub is heartbroken as he realizes what will happen when Dough is told of the mishap to the picture. Mike conceives the idea of dressing himself up to resemble the painting and impersonating the landlord's canvas.

The idea is so successful that on the day of the exhibit none of the guests realize that the paintings which are supposed to represent Ethel and Dough are in reality flesh and blood substitutes. None but Billy, for he has discovered the ruse only through an accident. As soon as Billy learns that his hated enemy, Mike, is sitting in the easel, Billy arms himself with a heavy mallet and proceeds to reek vengeance on Mike. Consternation reigns among the guests, who promptly proceed to take summary action upon Billy.

death of the promised "King of Judea," orders the slaughter of every male infant in Bethlehem.

The massacre takes place, but Joseph and Mary flee into Egypt with the child. They return after Herod's death, and the boy Jesus talks with the elders in the temple. Grown to manhood, Jesus prepares Himself for His mission by meditating in Egypt amidst the silences of the pyramids and ancient temples. Returning to Palestine, He heals the sick, is baptized by John, and tempted by the devil. Mary Magdalen seeks Him and anoints His feet. He forgives the woman taken in adultery, walks on the water, casts out demons, and raises Lazarus.

Judas plots the betrayal, and Jesus eats the last supper with His disciples. Judas receives the thirty pieces of silver, and has a vision in which the devil clutches at him, and the money changes to blood in his hands. Jesus drinks the bitter cup in the garden of Gethsemane, is betrayed by Judas, and arrested. Pontius Pilate offers to free either Jesus or Barabbas, the robber. The mob accepts Barabbas, and bears him away in triumph.

Jesus carries His cross to Calvary, followed by the Mother and Mary Magdalen, who weep at the foot of the cross. Judas hangs himself, while the devil rejoices beneath his lonely gibbet. Joseph of Arimathea has Jesus laid in his rock-hewn tomb. Then follow the Resurrection and Ascension.

The girl of the book shop comes to him and comforts him and the man thinks that she is the other girl, the girl of his dreams. Still laboring under the delusion the blind man marries the girl of the bookshop. Finally his eyesight is restored to him and he looks on his wife for the first time. To his horror he finds that he doesn't know her, that she is not the woman he thought he had married. This situation leads to further distress to the young man and to much pain and sorrow for his wife, but finally the story ends with prospects of both of them attaining full happiness.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA (Five Parts—June 25).—The cast: Windfield Gordon (Kentuck) (Harry Carter); John Silverwood (Tuolumne) (Robert Julian); Nannie (Ruth Clifford); Mrs. Morgan (Gretchen Lederer); Rachel Gordon (Myrtle Reeves); Mrs. Gordon (Aurora Pratt); Tom Boling (Emory Johnson); Ed. Long (Eddie Polo); Frank Long (Frank Lanning); Zoe (Zoe Rae); Aunt Chlorindy (Lucretia Harris). Scenario written by E. J. Clawson. Directed by Rupert Julian.

John Silverwood ("Tuolumne John") and Windfield Gordon ("Kentuck") have been doing placer mining in California. Gordon's little daughter, Nannie, is with them. Long brothers have sought to "jump" the claim of the two cronies, and a feud has developed.

One night "Tuolumne John," challenged by the Long brothers to fight or leave the camp, decided to go alone to the saloon where the miners are wont to foregather, and settle the matter by challenging one of the Longs to a duel. He steals away from the cabin, leaving "Kentuck" and Nannie to memories of their old home in far away Kentucky -for it is the anniversary of "Kentuck's" marriage.

When "Kentuck" discovers "Tuolumne's" bunk is empty he suspects that something is wrong, and starts out. Nannie sees her father depart, and she, too, makes for the camp. "Kentuck" arrives just in time to be killed by one of the Long brothers, and dies in Nannie's arms. After "Kentuck's" funeral, "Tuolumne" sends Nannie back to Kentucky, consigning her to Henry Gordon, her uncle.

Arriving in Kentucky, the girl meets opposition from Gordon's wife—a woman who had married before and was mother of a girl about Nannie's age. Gordon had been called to Lexington to attend the Legislature, but left word with his wife that Nannie should be treated as though she were her own child.

Disregarding her husband's expressed instructions, Mrs. Gordon slights Nannie. Mrs. Gordon has determined that her daughter shall wed Tom Boling, a rich young planter. When Boling called one day upon Rachel Gordon, the old "mammy," on mischief bent, sent Nannie to open the door. From that moment Rachel Gordon's chances to "make a great match" were at an end. Without knowing the havoc she had wrought, Nannie became an object of Mrs. Gordon's special persecution; and to relieve the girl from her unpleasant situation, the colored "mammy" took Nannie to the home of Mrs. Morgan, a wealthy widow in the neighborhood, where she remained until Henry Gordon returned from the Legislature.

When Gordon discovered the condition of affairs, he promptly installed Nannie in the station he originally intended she should occupy in his home. There Tom Boling meets her, pays court, and ultimately proposes. The wedding day is set, but Mrs. Gordon, adhering to her original antipathy to Nannie, declines to aid her with her wedding dress.

Only a few days before the day of the wedding a trunk arrives at the Gordon home addressed to Nannie, and therein she finds beautiful dresses to gladden her heart and make bright her wedding day. "Tuolumne" (who follows the trunk) has struck gold; Nannie, as his partner, is rich, and in the course of events "Tuolumne" and Mrs. Morgan, the widow who has befriended Nannie, are married.

THE TRAIL OF THE SHADOW (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., Five Parts, July 2).—The cast: Sylvia Mason (Emmy Wehlen); Henry Hilliard (Eugene Strong); Jack Leslie ("The Shadow") (Harry S. Northrup); Mr. Mason, Sylvia's father (Frank Currier); Padre Constantine (Fuller Mellish); Mrs. Hilliard (Kate Blancke); Clara Hilliard (Alice MacChesney); Sergeant Keen (De Jalma West). Scenario written by June Mathis. Directed by Edwin Carewe.

Sylvia Mason lives alone in her mountain cabin on the timber claim which was the only unmortgaged piece of property left at the time of her father's death. Henry Hilliard, a wealthy young Easterner traveling in the West, buys some of the beadwork Sylvia makes and falls in love with her. It is while Henry is on a visit back home that Sylvia is startled one night to see a man crawling toward her door as though wounded. He implores her aid and she helps him into her cabin. No sooner is he inside than he points a revolver at her head, and demands that she hide him from the border police. When Sergeant Keen comes with his men she is obliged to say she has seen no one.

When the men have gone the outlaw emerges, and Sylvia recognizes in him Jack Leslie, her father's partner, who had demanded her hand in marriage and when refused ruined her father in business and then caused his death. Leslie tells her he is still in love with her. He tries to take her in his arms. They struggle and she falls to the floor, striking her head against the table and losing consciousness. Before he goes he writes a note to her threatening her.

Days later when Sylvia regains consciousness, she finds the kind face of old Padre Constantine bending over her. Henry returns from his Eastern trip to see Sylvia, and comes to her bedside, but she turns her face away, believing herself no longer worthy to be his wife. Henry cannot understand her attitude, and Padre Constantine, knowing the true, pure heart of the girl, does not tell him the reason. Mrs. Hilliard, purse-proud and haughty, comes from the East and offers Sylvia a substantial check to release Henry from his promise to marry her. Sylvia accepts it, tearing it up as soon as she is alone.

Leslie returns to the neighborhood and sends a messenger to Sylvia's cabin, telling her she must come to him. She answers the call because she is determined to be revenged. Taking her revolver, she goes to the hut he has mentioned and a struggle ensues. Leslie hears someone approaching and dashes away on his horse. Hilliard, with the sheriff's posse, follows;

At a turn in the road they lose track of him and separate. Hilliard takes to the desert alone and comes upon the outlaw. There is an exchange of shots and Leslie falls, mortally wounded. But determined that he shall not die alone, he fires a shot that punctures the canteen of water at Henry's side. With his last breath Leslie confesses his love for Sylvia and acknowledging her innocence. The posse, with Sylvia at its head, finds Henry unconscious in the desert. As soon as he is revived he tells her Leslie's last words. A wedding in the little town is witnessed and sanctioned by Henry's mother, now proud to have so noble a girl for her daughter-in-law, and the trail of the shadow is gone forever.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—American Deer (June 11).—In a former chapter of "The Living Book of Nature" was a scenic story of the foreign deer. In the present picture are American types, beautiful and majestic creatures that display some curious habits. Among them is the American elk or wapiti, a magnificent creature that stand second to none of the Eastern white-tailed deer in winter and summer. A herd is shown jumping a brook and the flying leaps are quite astonishing. A number of these deer cross a freshly frozen lake of smooth and gleaming ice and the animals slide and move over the ice in most erratic fashion. There are scenes of the long-eared mule deer of the Bad Lands of the West, the dainty Florida deer, thence a large herd of elk playing in deep and freshly fallen snow. Their varied gaits would put to shame an exhibition of performing horses. Scenes of fawns—long-legged and wobbly creatures—show the young of all the species of North American deer to be brilliantly spotted and quite unlike the color of the parents.

A LUCKY SLIP (June 11).—The cast: Margaret (Margaret Gibson); Her Mother (Stella Adams); The Boy (Neal Burns); His Father (Harry Rattenberry); Prof. Snitch (E. Barry).

Father has never seen the girl his son, Neal, loves, but the parent thinks Neal too young for entanglements and forbids him to see her. To show his obedience, Neal 'phones and tells the maid to ask Margaret to meet him in lovers' lane in the park at two. Father overhears the tryst and decides to follow. The maid tells Margaret, but she also tells Margaret's mother, Stella. As mother has forbidden Margaret to see Neal, mother, too, goes at two to lovers' lane.

Margaret and Neal meet. Stella slips on a banana peel. Father helps her up, is much impressed and arranges to see her later. They part and father comes on the young couple. He drags Neal away. Father meets a friend and Neal slips back to Margaret just as Stella comes up. She upbraids them and takes her daughter home.

Each parent decides to send the child away to school. But it happens to be the same school, and Margaret and Neal get together in spite of Prof. Snitch. Meanwhile, father is making time with Stella. When Neal is discovered on a harmless visit to Margaret and her roommate, Snitch sends word to both parents that the children are expelled. Father arrives first and is surprised to see Margaret. While he is out Stella comes in. Seeing Neal, she scolds him for following her daughter. Then father comes back, he and Stella recognize each other and decide that, as in each case it is the other's child, they will have a double wedding.

A BOLD, BAD KNIGHT (June 18).—The cast: Betty (Betty Compson); Her Father (Harry Rattenberry); The Boy (Neal Burns); "Slim" (E. Barry); Griffo (Eugene Corey).

Father thinks no richman's son is a proper husband for his daughter, so he forbids Betty to see Neal. They had a date for the masquerade ball that night, so Betty tells Neal that she will describe his cavalier costume to the cook, who will let him in at the back. But "Slim" Dorgan, crook, overhears this. When he goes to get his costume, Neal sees an old suit of armor outside the shop and the man tells him it is left outside all the time. Betty and Neal get ready for the ball, but as Neal is on his way to Betty's he is waylaid by "Slim" and a pal, who take the cavalier costume from him.

"Slim" puts it on and starts for Betty's. Neal thinks of the suit of armor, goes and puts it on. At Betty's, Officer Griffo is making love to the cook, Stella. The costume gets "Slim" in and he finds father counting his money. Neal arrives and catches the pal, watching outside. The crook shoots at Neal, but the bullets have no effect on his armor and the crook runs away. Inside, "Slim" and father are fighting, and father is knocked out.

Neal tries to get in, but is refused admission. Betty has come down and "Slim" attacks her. The pal comes back to warn "Slim" and is captured by Griffo. Neal gets in and engages in battle with "Slim." Neal bests him and saves Betty just as father comes to. Griffo takes the crooks and father decides that Neal will make a good son-in-law, after all.

THE BROADWAY SPORT (Five Parts—June 10).—The cast: Hezekiah Dill (Stuart Holmes); Sadie Sweet (Wanda Petit); Hector Sweet, her father (Dan Mason); Violet Gaffney (W. B. Green); His Counsellor (J. Sullivan); The Hypnotist (Mario Majeronie); Plainclothesman (Jay Wilson). Written and directed by Carl Harbaugh.

Hezekiah Dill, a clerk, works in the flour mill owned by the local power in finance, Hector Sweet. He spurns the affections of Violet Gaffney, a spinster typist, for a hopeless ambition to win the village belle, Sadie Sweet, the boss's daughter. When Dill ventures from the office Main street turns up its nose at his thick lensed specs, his baggy clothes and awkward gait.

The awe in which Dill is held is shown by the fact that two yeggs undertake to break the mill safe while he is working in the office. As they open the door Dill becomes unusually bold, pushes them into the vault and locks the door. After telephoning the boss, he spots a roll of money on the floor. As he stands clutching the roll of bills Dill's mind quits its humble station for New York.

In the hotel where Dill stops is John D. Boulder, a wealthy old gent, who would like to make a will if he had any relatives to whom to leave his property. His lawyer undertakes to supply a few kin, and gets Dill to pose as a long-lost nephew. The will is made, the old gent dies, Dill gets his fortune and starts back home, forgetting his fifty-fifty understanding with the lawyer.

When Dill returns home a wedding is in progress. Fearing it is his little Sadie, he rushes into the church, carries off the squirming bride-to-be and puts her in his auto. Then he lifts her veil and finds she is the spinster. Dill abandons the auto and flees.

The arrival of his boss, Sadie and the constables interrupt Dill's dream. Half dazed, he still stands there grasping the roll of money. Little Sadie rushes up to him and throws her arms about his neck. Even Sweet praises his clerk's bravery as the constables drag the half-suffocated yeggs from the safe.

mandate in regard to playing baseball—or rather, not playing it—Joyous is expelled. Thereupon he finds employment as the publicity agent for the fashionable Coronado hotel in Southern California.

On the way he meets Marjorie Milbank, an athletic young business woman, who has been carrying on negotiations with Joyous' father concerning the sale of her Texas ranch.

Marjorie puts up at the Coronado. In an effort to do his publicity duties by the hotel, Joyous steals her diamond necklace. The girl, intensely frightened, notifies the house detective. The overjoyed Joyous sends the story to the newspapers.

Having obtained the space desired, and having been told by the manager that the article will certainly ruin the hotel, Joyous decides he'd better return the diamonds. He disguises himself as a mysterious widow and would have been successful in restoring the gems had not the house detective followed him so closely.

To add to his troubles, Marjorie suddenly leaves the Coronado. When Joyous learns of her departure he rushes to overtake her, and catches the boat on which she is sailing just as the vessel pulls out. He confesses his deed to Marjorie, and she thinks so much of his ability that she engages him as manager of her Texas estate.

They arrive in time to prevent Joyous' father from seizing it. Joyous' smile smoothes over the difficulties.

WHEN BABY FORGOT (Lasalida—Five Parts—June 24). The cast: Baby Marie Watson (Baby Marie Osborne); John Watson, her father (Fred Newburg); Janet Watson, her mother (Margaret Nichols); George Melvin (Lee Hill). Directed by Eugene Moore.

"Start me and I can finish the prayer," pleaded Marie. There was only one person in the world who could start the prayer, and that person was her mother. But mother was not there. Little Marie once knew nothing but happiness and joy. Playing with her chums, she was called "Tomboy." Suddenly her happiness ended. Her mother, becoming discouraged because her husband devoted all his time to business, sought relief in the whirl of society. Her husband soon discovered that George Melvin, a society man, was attentive to his wife and because of this secured a divorce and custody of the child. "Remember, Marie, every night you must say the little prayer that I have taught." This was the parting between Marie and her mother.

Old Briggs, the butler, became Marie's friend and slave, so much so that later when she became sick he took it upon himself to get her well. He learned from the doctor that unless she learned the beginning of her prayer by nightfall all would be over. This set him running in search of someone who might know it. He then learns that Marie's mother knows the prayer, so he disobeys the master's command and brings the mother to the child's bedside. "Mother start me!" Telling her the beginning of the little prayer, mother brought contentment to the weary little heart. Father, worried over the condition of Marie, arrived home unexpectedly. Rushing into the room he discovered his wife. With outstretched arms Marie implored him to let her mother remain.

THE NEGLECTED WIFE (Episode No. 7, "The Message on the Mirror"—Two Parts—Balboa—June 24). The cast: Margaret Warner (Ruth Roland); Horace Kennedy (Roland Bottomley); Mary Kennedy (Corene Grant); Edgar Doyle (Neil Hardin); Frank Norwood (Philo McCullough).

Mary now discovers that Margaret is the "other woman" in the life of her husband. She resolves to fight for her happiness, and she manages to keep Kennedy and Margaret in ignorance of the fact that she knows their secret. Margaret works feverishly on the stories for Norwood's magazine. To her surprise, she receives a box of flowers from Norwood. She finishes one of her stories and goes to see Norwood. Taking her in his arms, he asks her if she will not marry him. Margaret tells him that they can only be friends, as there is someone else. Mary visits Margaret and discovers Margaret in Kennedy's arms. Unseen by them, she leaves.

Mary invites Margaret to a reception. The girl does not wish to go, but, to avoid suspicion, accepts. Gazing at Margaret and wishing to arouse her husband's jealousy, Mary remarks that Norwood and Margaret would make a fine match. Kennedy returns a short answer. Angry and jealous at Norwood's attentions to Margaret, Kennedy spends a disagreeable evening.

Going to her boudoir, Mary discovers this mysterious writing on the mirror: "Mrs. Kennedy, your husband ruined my life. I will not let him ruin yours. The Veiled Woman." Is this another woman in his life whom he has cast aside? Kennedy, unable to stand the strain any longer, asks Norwood to step into the library as there is a matter of importance about which he wishes to speak. The two men stand face to face as the film fades out.

MYSTERY OF THE DOUBLE CROSS (Episode No. 15, "The Double Cross." Astra. Two Parts.—June 24).—The cast: Philippa Brewster (Molly King); Peter Hale (Leon Barry); Bridgey Bentley (Ralph Stuart); Dick Annessley (Gladden James); Jack Dunn (Theodore Friebus); The Masked Stranger (? ? ?).

Bridgey Bentley, dying of a bullet wound, makes one last desperate attempt to prevent the marriage of Peter Hale to the Girl of the Double Cross, by stating to the police that it was Peter and not Jack Dunn who shot him in a fit of jealous rage. Peter is arrested and is bailed by Hubert Brewster, father of Philippa Brewster. What, to Peter, seem unexplainable complications develop following his release. Through the efforts of Dick Annessley, reporter who is working on the mystery for his newspaper, and who loves and is loved by Philippa Brewster, Peter is cleared of suspicion of the attempted assassination of Bentley. The Masked Stranger, who has repeatedly thwarted his attempts to learn if Philippa is really the Girl of the Double Cross, assists in his vindication.

The action of the fifteenth episode, which is entitled "The Double Cross," moves swiftly to a sensational and entirely unexpected climax. Peter is happy over the discovery of the identity of the Girl of the Double Cross, whom he marries. Annessley, who has done so much to bring the romance to a happy conclusion, also receives his just reward. The concluding scene shows the Girl of the Double Cross smiling happily in Peter's arms.

PARAMOUNT BRAY-PICTOGRAPHS, No. 71 (June 11).

Soldiers of the Soil.—American women are not going to be caught unprepared as were their sisters in Europe; should the time come when they must don overalls and replace their brothers on the farms. At the N. Y. State School of Agriculture, Farmingdale, L. I., as will be seen in this release, half a hundred young women are already undergoing a course in farming that stops not at all at the hardest kind of manual labor. The Farmerettes are up with the sun, and, like their bigger brothers, do all the chores, feed the chickens and cattle and every other bit of work that a farm calls for.

Traveling Forts.—J. R. Levanthal, whose animated diagrammatical drawings of the German Mine-laying submarine created such favorable comment, has with the assistance of the Popular Science Monthly, picturized for Paramount audiences in this part of the Paramount-Bray-Pictographs another example of American inventive genius under the title of "Traveling Forts," which is perhaps even more startling than any of this artist's earlier productions.

The Evolution of the Dachsund.—In this part of the Pictographs another famous Bray Cartoon will be shown, a timely national topic called "The Evolution of the Dachsund." The idea incorporated in this cartoon carries out President Wilson's statement that war is not against the German people, but against a government that does not reflect the sentiment of the people it governs, but the autocrats that are in authority. There is humor in this cartoon, and treated in the Bray style.

Repairing a Sub-Sea Cable. Here Paramount audiences are going to take a thrilling trip on a cable repair ship with the men whose business it is to keep these vitally important strands of wire always in working condition. Night and day the repair ship lies at her dock ready at a moment's notice to go out to sea when the word comes that something is wrong, for the world's affairs are dependent on the sub-sea cables. It is a very interesting sight to watch these repair men or "trouble shooters," as they are called, handling and working on the cable.

BREAD LINES IN ORIENT AND OCCIDENT (Burton Holmes Travelogue—June 11).—We have our poor people and the East has its starving millions; even in far away Ceylon there are many kind hearts beating beneath dark skins, and it is to show you some of their methods of taking care of their poor that Mr. Holmes invites your editor to come with him to Ceylon, there to see the way the rich men of the land think of their less fortunate brothers and how they "fill 'em up" with the popular food of both classes of the land, rice. After witnessing this sight, and by way of contrast, Mr. Holmes brings them back to the land of the free and to a bread line which is assembling at the back door of an up-town hotel. The "hand out" soon appears, and we might add the "hand-outees" soon disappear.

IN FRUITFUL FLORIDA (Burton Holmes Travelogue—June 18).—We have only one really tropic state in the good old U. S. A., and that is Florida, and so, just returning from the tropics of the Far East, Mr. Holmes suggests taking up his travels in his own country with what we have to compare with the sunny lands of the Orient. Therefore, it is to the place from which alligators, oranges, grape fruit and many of our cigars come that he will take your patrons in this delightful tropical journey. While the little journeyette introduces them to many unusual sights in Florida there is one we are holding in reserve.

THE HEIR OF THE AGES (Pallas—Five Parts—June 21).—The cast in the prologue: The Man (House Peters); The Girl (Nina Byron); The Brother (Eugene Pallette). The cast in the play proper: Hugh Payne (House Peters); Larry Payne (Eugene Pallette); Abby Hope (Nina Byron). Her Father (John Burton); Kearney (Henry A. Barrows); "The Duchess" (Adele Farrington).

In the days when the world was young, two cave men, brothers, lived together in their mountain retreat. One was big and strong, the other weak. The strong one protected his weak brother, and when he went out into the world and chose his mate, and she showed a preference for the weaker one, the love for his brother made him sorrowfully give her up. Then the deluge came, and the world was flooded with water. The strong brother risked his life to save the weaker one and his mate, but fortunately the woman realized her love was misplaced and returned to the stronger man.

The ages roll on, and in the little town of Last Chance, Hugh Payne, a mine superintendent, is attending strictly to business. Abby Hope and her besotted father occupy a small cabin on the edge of the town. Abby can not read, and Hugh takes a great interest in her.

In the East, Larry Payne, Hugh's brother, after a wild spell of debauchery, decides to reform and joins his brother. Larry makes ardent love to Abby. He proposes marriage to her, and, believing he is to be accepted, tells his brother. Hugh by this time is in love with the little waif, but without a murmur wishes his brother and the girl all happiness. Later he sees them together and believes that Larry has been accepted. Larry, wild and impetuous, meets "The Duchess," who presides over the local dance hall. Hugh, thinking only of Abby, finds Larry in her apartment, and they are both found there by the girl. In order that his brother will not lose her love, Hugh pretends that he is the Duchess' suitor. The jealous proprietor of the dance hall attempts to shoot Hugh, and in the fight the building is set on fire, and Abby is overcome by the smoke. Hugh rushes into the burning building and takes them both out, but Larry dies. Then Abby realizes her mistake and the two are happy.

HER STRANGE WEDDING (Lasky—Five Parts—June 25).—The cast: Coralie Grayson (Fannie Ward); Dr. Max Brownell (Jack Dean); Lee Brownell (Tom Forman); Peters (Billy Elmer).

Coralie Grayson, a wealthy young society girl, is fond of Dr. Max Brownell, a physician to her invalid mother, and he is in love with Coralie. The doctor is on the eve of proposing when Lee, his worthless brother, appears on the scene. Lee has just left his position in the East under a cloud, and a detective is put on his trail by his former employer. Max introduces him to Coralie, and, as the doctor is busy most of the time, Lee makes the best of this opportunity and soon wins possession of Coralie's love, and the two tell the doctor they are to be married.

Just as the wedding is about to take place the detective appears and threatens Lee with exposure unless he is bribed. Lee, desperate, steals a diamond bracelet from one of the guests at the wedding party. The doctor discovers the crooked detective, and orders him away. The bracelet is missed before Lee has an opportunity to return it, and to divert suspicion Lee drops the empty case into the butler's pocket. The butler is arrested, and Coralie and Lee start on their wedding trip. At the hotel, prior to their sailing for Honolulu, Coralie finds the stolen bracelet in Lee's suit case, and sends for Dr. Max, who stops Lee's jealous attack on Coralie in time.

Next morning the two leave. Dr. Max, not dreaming they are going on an ocean voyage, chances to take the same boat. Lee's drinking on the boat arouses his jealousy and anger, so that when they are in Honolulu he is still more angry and accuses Max of trying to steal his wife, and, in the fight which follows, shoots him. Lee, believing Max dead, rushes to Coralie. Suddenly the doctor's face appears at the window, and the shock is too great for Lee's weak heart and he dies. As Coralie has been his wife in name only, and realizes the mistake of her infatuation, she turns to Dr. Max with a great understanding.

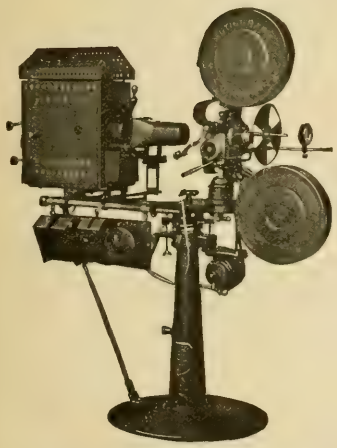
THE MOTIOGRAPH

IT ANSWERS "YES" TO EVERY QUESTION



It is of vital importance that you ask such questions as the following when buying a projector:

IS THE BEST MATERIAL USED?

The Lamphouse is made of high-grade planished steel—Castings from best grade grey iron.—Bushing of the best journal bronze.—Star and Cam of high-grade crucible steel.

IS IT SAFE?

Ask any user or operator of the MOTIOGRAPH; he will soon answer your question in regard to safety.

WHAT ABOUT SIMPLICITY?

Easy to thread—Simple oiling system. Framing Device easily removed. All parts interchangeable. Adjustments where necessary.

DOES IT GIVE SATISFACTION?

The Bronx Amusement Co., Cleveland, Ohio, says:

"Although our theatre opens at eight o'clock in the morning and runs continuously till eleven o'clock at night, being reputed to be the hardest grind in the city, yet we have not had a particle of trouble of any nature with your machines and they have never failed to produce perfect results in a most satisfactory manner."

IS IT ECONOMICAL?

With our Year's Guarantee on the machine and the best material used in every part of the projector, your up-keep is reduced to the minimum—and think of it, first cost only $265.00 for hand-driven and $305.00 for motor-driven equipment.

Power's Projectors have kept far in advance of the progress of the industry, so that the latest model, the 6-B Cameragraph is the acme of perfection in motion picture projection apparatus.

There are more than fifteen thousand satisfied exhibitors in all parts of the world using Power's Machines.

Seventeen years' experience in making Power's Machines, combined with the nation-wide distribution and facilities of fourteen United Service Stations cements a happy union that must result in invariably perfect projection where Power's Machines are installed.

Power's 6-B Cameragraph is the only motion picture apparatus with the 20th Century movement—highest speed—longer exposure of the picture on the screen—therefore, better projection.

That is why the United Theatre Equipment Corp. has selected the Power's Machine for exclusive distribution, and particularly because seventeen years of "knowing how" to make the best motion picture apparatus stand behind the U. T. E. guarantee of perfect projection.

UNITED THEATRE EQUIPMENT CORPORATION
1604 Broadway, New York

We guarantee Power's Cameragraph with the Hallberg 20th Century Motor Generator to give projection supreme.

SILVERTIP

"The Cure for Flicker"

Stop That Flicker and Shadow

The unusual demands of modern projection—both in length of throw and in intensity required—give Silvertips a splendid opportunity to show their true worth.

Any large exhibitor will tell you that these new negative projector carbons eliminate entirely that disagreeable flicker of the arc. Their small diameter insures a steady arc, while the heavy plating enables them to carry a current that gives maximum intensity.

Claims are easy to make, but the real proof is in the enormous number of these carbons which are being used daily throughout the country.

Why? Fifteen Convincing Reasons Why Your Projection Will Be Vastly Improved by Using Speer Carbons Why?

Because: All sizes of carbons are manufactured and the desires of operators can easily be gratified. The styles include the Soft Cored and Solid carbons and the famous "Hold-Arks."

Because: A Speer Cored upper and a "Hold-Ark" lower afford an ideal combination for your working conditions.

Because: In the use of Speer Carbons a maximum amount of light is produced, with a minimum consumption of the carbons.

Because: In the use of a "Hold-Ark" the metal coating permits the use of a smaller carbon in the lower holder.

Because: The ghosts and aggravating shadows are eliminated by the brilliancy of the light.

Because: Where the "Hold-Ark" negative carbon is employed the wandering of the arc is prevented and positive steadiness of the light is assured.

Because: The hard core of the "Hold-Ark" greatly relieves the operator and eliminates the necessity of frequently adjusting the arc.

Because: Patrons will not frequent your theatre unless your pictures are projected with a bright, "rock-steady" light, such as Speer Carbons produce.

Because: Every carbon is uniform and can be depended upon for efficient results.

Because: In order to produce the best photoplays, high amperages are necessary. The metal coating of the "Hold-Ark" provides the additional carrying capacity and still permits the use of a small carbon in the lower holder.

Because: A mere trial of Speer Carbons will cause you to use them unhesitatingly thereafter.

Because: Quality alone is first consideration in the manufacture of these carbons, and the high standard already set will never be lowered.

Because: Speer Carbons will ultimately revolutionize the motion picture industry, and progressive exhibitors and operators should not permit prejudice or practice to interfere with their adoption.

Because: The carbons are backed by a modern factory erected wholly for their manufacture. An elaborate research and experimental laboratory is also devoted to the improvement and betterment of the carbons, and fully developed experiments which show beneficial results are readily adopted.

Because: Samples will gladly be supplied and expert information furnished to operators who are not obtaining the improved projection they desire.

Index to Reviews, Comments, and Stories of the Films

Appended is a list of subjects covered by our reviews and comments and the synopses furnished by the manufacturers released for the three months ending June 30, 1917. This list of releases with dates is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or synopsis can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "S" for synopsis. Where reference letter is omitted to either review or comment it signifies that none was published, and the omission of reference letter "S" indicates that synopsis was not furnished by the manufacturer. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.

(N. B.)—Synopses, comments, or reviews of episodes of serials or series, are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode.

New York.

Gentlemen:-

This letter is written to confirm my decision given you when you 'phoned me a few days ago, in reference to the contract you submitted, covering your appointment as our exclusive sales agents for the United States, for Simplex Projectors.

When considering your offer we realized that it would be much easier for us to tie up with you and thus to insure the sale of a specified number of Simplex Projectors each year, without sales effort on our part.

But that is not all there is to the proposition. Your Combine includes only a handful of Distributors, who would acquire the sole right to sell the Simplex, cutting off a considerable number of Distributors and Dealers who have been loyal to us these many years.

Those men not only deserve better treatment than that, but they have a right to expect honorable treatment from honorable men; and we cannot accord them any other.

Of course we appreciate the fact that, since you wanted to handle but one Projector, and the best obtainable, your first choice was the Simplex, and we regret, for your sake, that we felt it our duty to decide adversely.

Very truly yours,

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO., INC.

To our Friends:

We respectfully submit to you the above letter. It shows that we are not going to be swallowed up.

It means that Simplex Projectors, their parts and accessories, will be available in the future as in the past; and that they'll be in the hands of loyal friends.

We, as makers of the Simplex, give you our assurance that we will continue to put heart and soul into the work of building the highest-grade Projector known to the art.

Eye Satisfaction.

Brilliant screen appearance, is guaranteed where your negative exposure is right and we do the developing and printing.

Valuable negatives can be made less valuable, or valueless, by improper developing.

Beautiful negatives seem "mushy" and ordinary if the positive prints are not right.

Business can be lost if delivery promises are not kept.

Lack of factory service and intelligent co-operation causes many troubles.

Your negative is safe; you are sure and satisfied and successful if you do your bit, and we do the developing and printing.
